*The fact that by answer the defendant [218] may show that the liability is several cannot change the character of the case made by the plaintiff in his pleading so as to affect the right of removal. It is to remembered that we are not now dealing with joinders which are shown by the petition for removal, or otherwise, to be attempts to sue in the state courts with a view to defeat Federal jurisdiction. In such cases entirely different questions arise, and the Federal courts may and should take such action as will defeat attempts to wrongfully deprive parties entitled to sue in the Federal courts of the protection of their rights in those tribunals.

In the present case there is nothing in the questions propounded which suggests an attempt to commit a fraud upon the jurisdiction of the Federal courts.

As shown in the opinion of the Chief Justice in the Dixon Case (179 U. S. 131, 45 L. ed. 121, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 67), the cases are in difference as to whether a common-law action can be sustained against master and servant jointly because of the responsibility of the master for the acts of the servant in prosecuting the master's business. In good faith, so far as appears in the record, the plaintiff sought the determination of his rights in the state court by the filing of a declaration in which he alleged a joint cause of action.

Does this become a separable controversy within the meaning of the act of Congress because the plaintiff has misconceived his cause of action, and had no right to prosecute the defendants jointly? We think, in the light of the adjudications above cited from this court, it does not. Upon the face of the complaint,—the only pleading filed in the case,—the action is joint. It may be that the state court will hold it not to be so. It may be (which we are not called upon to decide now) that this court would so determine if the matter shall be presented in a case of which it has jurisdiction. But this does not change the character of the action which the plaintiff has seen fit to bring, nor change an alleged joint cause of action into a separable controversy for the purpose of removal. The case cannot be removed unless it is one which presents a [219] separable controversy *wholly between citizens of different states. In determining this question the law looks to the case made in the pleadings, and determines whether the state court shall be required to surrender its jurisdiction to the Federal court.

As early as 1816 this court, in determining a question of jurisdiction, was governed by the character of the suit brought by the plaintiff. In New Orleans v. Winter, 1 Wheat. 91, 4 L. ed. 44, it was held that a citizen of a territory could not sue in a Federal court by joining with himself a citizen of another state. The opinion was delivered by Chief Justice Marshall, who said (p. 95, L. ed. 45): "In this case it has been doubted whether the parties might elect to sue jointly or severally. However this may be, having elected to sue jointly, the court is incapable of distinguishing their case, so far as respects jurisdiction, from one in which they were compelled to unite."

It is urged with much earnestness by the learned counsel for the company that this view works a surrender of the right of determination of Federal rights in the Federal courts, and deprives nonresident citizens of their rights to appeal to those tribunals. The decision of a state court that such actions as the present might be joint at common law would have no controlling effect in the Federal courts in determining the question in causes properly before them. And the question here is not what is the rule of the Federal courts in similar cases, but is, What controversies has Congress made removable in the act under consideration? Congress has not said, whatever it might do, that controversies between citizens of different states shall be removable wherein it is sought, contrary to the law as administered in the Federal courts, to hold the citizens of another state to joint liability in tort with a citizen of the state where the action is brought. The fact that the state court may take a different view from the courts of the United States of the common law as to the character of such actions, and the right to prosecute them in form joint as well as several, affords no ground of removal.

The Federal courts in some states hold a [220] different rule as to *the doctrine of fellow-servants from that administered in the state courts, and in other ways administer the common law according to their own views. It has not been suggested that a right of removal should arise from such differences. No more has Congress given the right where the state permits an action to be prosecuted jointly which would be held to be several only in the courts of the United States. The applicant for removal has been duly summoned into a cause in course of prosecution in the state court. All of the defendants not being nonresidents, it can remove only if it presents a separable controversy, which can be wholly determined between itself and the plaintiff. The test of such controversy, as this court has frequently said, is the cause of action stated in the complaint. That is joint in character, and there is no attack upon the good faith of the action. In such case we hold that no separable controversy is presented within the meaning of the act of Congress.

We answer the first question: That, for the purpose of determining the right of removal, the cause of action must be deemed to be joint. The views herein expressed lead to an answer to the second question in the negative.

In this opinion we have taken no account of the peculiar statute of Tennessee as to the liability of railroads for injuries to persons on the tracks, as its effect is not presented in the questions propounded, nor is it stated that the injury was received in the state of Tennessee.

Removal of causes—separable controversy.— An action to recover damages for a death from negligence, in which plaintiff has, in good faith, exercised his right under the state laws to proceed jointly against a railway company and its employee whose negligence caused the accident, cannot be converted into a separable controversy for the purpose of removal to a Federal circuit court because of diversity of citizenship between the plaintiff and the railway company.

Argued December 15, 1905. Decided January 2, 1906.

IN ERROR to the Court of Appeals of the State of Kentucky to review a judgment which affirmed a judgment of the Circuit Court of Mercer County, in that state, in favor of plaintiff in a joint action against a railway company and its employee to recover damages for a death caused by negligence, in which the railway company unsuccessfully sought to remove the case, as presenting a separable controversy, to the United States Circuit Court for the Eastern District of Kentucky. Affirmed.

See same case below (Ky.) 83 S. W. 580.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. John Galvin argued the cause, and, with Mr. Edward Colston, filed a brief for plaintiff in error:

For their contentions see the briefs filed on behalf of Alabama Great Southern Railway Company, in support of right of removal, as reported in Alabama Great Southern R. Co. v. Thompson, ante, 441.

Mr. John W. Yerkes argued the cause, and, with Mr. Robert Harding, filed a brief for defendant in error:

The question involved must be determined by the record in the state court at the time the petition for removal was filed, taken in connection with the allegations of the petition for removal.

Crehore v. Ohio & M. R. Co. 131 U. S. 240, 33 L. ed. 144, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 692; Powers v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 169 U. S. 92, 42 L. ed. 673, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 264.

The Kentucky court of appeals but followed the rule of law laid down by this court in Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Dixon, 179 U. S. 131, 45 L. ed. 121, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 67, in affirming the action of the Mercer circuit court in denying the application to transfer this cause to the Federal court.

Under the Constitution and the statutes of Kentucky and the decisions of that state the company and its engineer, Milligan, are jointly liable for the negligent act resulting in Cook's death, and the cause of action is entire.

Mr. Justice Day delivered the opinion of the court:

This case was considered by this court at the same time with Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Thompson (just decided) 200 U. S. 206, ante, 441, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 161, and we need not repeat the discussion therein had as to the construction of the removal act of 1887 [24 Stat. at L. 552, chap. 373, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 508], under the decisions of this court. This case has an additional feature which we shall proceed to notice. The action was brought by *the defendant in error as [222] administrator of Edward Cook, deceased. The petition charged that the plaintiff's intestate was engaged in the yards as a brakeman and switchman and was uncoupling and giving attention to the cars of the defendant company, which cars and an engine attached thereto were in charge of the defendant Milligan, as engineer, engaged in operating, managing, and controlling the same for the defendant company, and, while plaintiff's intestate was thus engaged, the defendant company and the defendant Milligan caught and crushed said Cook's body between the cars of the train, by and through the gross negligence of Milligan and of defendant company, in the operation, management, and control of the engine and train; that the injuries to the plaintiff resulted in his death a few minutes thereafter, and when so caught and crushed said Cook was engaged in discharging his duties as brakeman to the defendant company; the death of said Cook was caused as aforesaid by the gross negligence and carelessness of defendant company and Milligan. The railroad company filed its petition in the state court for the removal of the cause to the United States circuit court for the eastern district of Kentucky, upon the ground that there was a separable controversy between the petitioner, a resident and citizen of Ohio, and the plaintiff below, who was a citizen and resident of Kentucky. The circuit court of Mercer county refused to remove the case, and a verdict and judgment were rendered for the plaintiff below. Upon appeal to the court of appeals of Kentucky, the judgment was reversed for errors occurring at the trial. At a second trial the verdict and judgment were rendered for the plaintiff below, which was again reversed and remanded. On the third trial the verdict and judgment were again rendered for the plaintiff below, which judgment was affirmed by the court of appeals of Kentucky. The sole question argued here is as to the correctness of the state court in refusing to order the removal of the cause, which judgment was affirmed by the Kentucky court of appeals.

The action for death by negligence is reg-[223] ulated by the Kentucky *Constitution and statutes. Section 241 of the Constitution provides:

"Whenever the death of a person shall result from an injury inflicted by negligence or wrongful act, then, in every such case, damages may be recovered for such death from the corporations and persons so causing the same."

Section 6 of the Kentucky statutes reads as follows:

"Whenever the death of a person shall result from an injury inflicted by negligence or wrongful act, then, in every such case, damages may be recovered for such death from the person or persons, company or companies, corporation or corporations, their agents or servants, causing the same, and when the act is wilful or the negligence is gross, punitive damages may be recovered, and the action to recover such damages shall be prosecuted by the personal representative of the deceased."

This statute undertakes to give an action for negligence against the companies or corporations responsible therefor and their agents or servants causing the same. The statute has been before the court of appeals of Kentucky, and in the case of Winston v. Illinois C. R. Co. 111 Ky. 954, 957, 55 L. R. A. 603, 604, 65 S. W. 13, that court said of the state Constitution and this statute:

"The Constitution and statutes of this state, as construed by the repeated adjudications of this court, make the railroad company liable for the acts of the agents and servants in charge of its trains. If a servant is guilty of such negligence, while acting for his master, as will make the master responsible, then, in such a case, the servant is personally and equally responsible with the master for the damages resulting from the negligent act. The mere fact that the master may be responsible for the wrongful act of the servant does not relieve the servant from a joint liability with the master for the wrongful act which produced the injury and damage."

In the case under consideration, in the opinion of the court upon the question of right of removal, while it expressed the [224] *view that the weight of authority was in favor of the right to join the master and servant in actions for negligence, it reiterates its former view of the Kentucky statutes, citing Cheaspeake & O. R. Co. v. Dixon, 104 Ky. 608, 47 S. W. 615, and the Winston Case, above referred to, and quoted from that case with approval:

"By the terms of this section, where death results from the negligent act, a recovery may be had therefor against the person or persons, company or companies, corporation or corporations, their agents or servants, causing the same. . . . The plaintiff has a right to proceed severally or jointly against those who are liable for the injury inflicted resulting in death."

We then have a case in which the extent of the right to recover damages for negligence is prescribed by the Constitution and statutes of the state of Kentucky, and which the courts of that state have construed to give a joint cause of action against the corporation and its agents or servants causing the same. In a recent case this court had occasion to deal with the question of removal under the separable controversy clause (Southern R. Co. v. Carson, 194 U. S. 136, 48 L. ed. 907, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 609), on a writ of error to the supreme court of South Carolina. An action had been jointly brought in the state court against the Southern Railway Company, a corporation of Virginia, and Arwood, conductor, and Miller, the engineer, residents of Greenville county, South Carolina, charging the joint and concurrent negligence of the servant and the company, because of a defective coupler and the careless management of the train, and the railroad company claimed to have been deprived of the right of removal by the allegation of a joint and concurrent tort, unless the state court would charge that no recovery could be had unless a joint liability was shown, which it refused to do. After commenting upon the action, the Chief Justice, who delivered the opinion of the court, stated that the right of removal depends upon the act of Congress, that the company, upon the face of the pleadings, did not come within the act, and had made no effort to assert this right, and, citing the passage in Powers v. Chesapeake & O. [225] R. Co. 169 U. S. 92, 42 L. ed. 673, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 264, quoted in the Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Thompson, 200 U. S. 206, ante, 441, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 161, said:

"The view thus expressed was reiterated in Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Dixon, 179 U. S. 131, 45 L. ed. 121, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 67, where the subject was much considered and cases cited. Reference was there made to the fact that many courts have held the identification of master and servant to be so complete that the liability of both may be enforced in the same action. And such is the law in South Carolina. Schumpert v. Southern R. Co. 65 S. C. 332, 95 Am. St. Rep. 802, 43 S. E. 813. In that case it was held that, under the state Code of Civil Procedure, in actions ex delicto, acts of negligence and wilful tort might be commingled in one statement as causes of injury; that master and servant are jointly liable as joint tort feasors for the tort of the servant, committed within the scope of his employment, and while in the master's service; that the objection that if master and servant were made jointly liable for the negligence of the latter the master could not call on the servant for contribution was without merit, as the rule was, as laid down by Mr. Cooley (Torts, p. 145), that: 'As between the company and its servant, the latter alone is the wrongdoer, and in calling upon him for indemnity, the company bases no claim upon its own misfeasance or default, but upon that of the servant himself.' And see Gardner v. Southern R. Co. 65 S. C. 341, 43 S. E. 816. In Rucker v. Smoke, 37 S. C. 377, 34 Am. St. Rep. 758, 16 S. E. 40, and Skipper v. Clifton Mfg. Co. 58 S. C. 143, 36 S. E. 509, it was decided that in actions such as this exemplary damages may be recovered. The suggestion that the state deprived the company of its property by the rulings of the supreme court calls for no remark."

While the case did not show an attempt to remove, the discussion of the subject by the Chief Justice strongly intimates that if the action was properly joint in the forum in which it was being prosecuted, it could not be removed as a separable controversy under the act of Congress. We have under consideration an action for tort which, by [226] the Constitution and *laws of the state, as interpreted by the highest court in the state, gives a joint remedy against master and servant to recover for negligent injuries. This court has repeatedly held that a separable controversy must be shown upon the face of the petition or declaration, and that the defendant has no right to say that an action shall be several which the plaintiff elects to make joint. See cases cited in Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Thompson, 200 U. S. 206, ante, 441, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 161. A state has an unquestionable right by its Constitution and laws to regulate actions for negligence, and where it has provided that the plaintiff in such cases may proceed jointly or severally against those liable for the injury, and the plaintiff, in due course of law and in good faith, has filed a petition electing to sue for a joint recovery given by the laws of the state, we know of nothing in the Federal removal statute which will convert such action into a separable controversy for the purpose of removal, because of the presence of a nonresident defendant therein, properly joined in the action under the Constitution and laws of that state wherein it is conducting its operations, and is duly served with process.

Judgment affirmed.

ARMOUR PACKING COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,
v.
B. R. LACY, Treasurer of the State of North Carolina.

1. Error to state court—questions reviewable—statutory construction.—A decision of the supreme court of North Carolina that the provision of N. C. Pub. Laws 1903, chap. 247, imposing a tax on "every meat-packing house doing business in this state," does not apply to the interstate business of a foreign corporation, but only to its local business, such as the sale within the state of products already stored there, on orders received after the products are thus stored, is conclusive on the Federal Supreme Court in determining, on writ of error to the state court, whether the tax is an interference with interstate commerce.
2. Commerce—state taxation as affecting interstate commerce.—The tax imposed by N. C. Pub. Laws 1903, chap. 247, as construed by the state courts, upon such local business of a foreign meat-packing house as its sales within the state of products already stored there, on orders received after these products are thus stored, is not invalid as an interference with interstate commerce.
3. Constitutional law—equal protection of the laws—state taxation of meat-packing houses.—The equal protection of the laws is not denied a foreign meat-packing house by the tax imposed on its local business, under N. C. Pub. Laws 1903, chap. 247, taxing "every meat packing house doing business in this state," although, at the points where such local business is carried on, persons selling meat-packing house products, but not doing a meat-packing house business either in North Carolina or elsewhere, are not subjected to the tax.

4. Constitutional law—equal protection of the laws—state taxation on meat-packing houses.—Meat-packing houses are not denied the equal protection of the laws by the tax imposed on their business by N. C. Pub. Laws 1903, chap. 247, because houses packing vegetables and the like are not included in the same classification and subjected to the same tax.

5. Error to state court—questions reviewable—statutory construction.—The conclusion of a state court that a tax is uniform, within the meaning of the requirement of the state Constitution, when it is equal upon all persons belonging to the described class on which it is imposed, is not open to review upon writ of error from the Supreme Court of the United States to the state court.

Argued November 8, 1905. Decided January 8, 1906.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of North Carolina to review a judgment which affirmed a judgment of the Superior Court of Buncombe County, in that state, sustaining the validity of a tax on a foreign meat-packing house. Affirmed.

See same case below, 134 N. C. 567, 47 S. E. 53.

Statement by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller:

This was "a controversy without action," submitted in accordance with the laws of North Carolina in that behalf, in the superior court of Buncombe county, that state, in which B. R. Lacey, treasurer of North Carolina, was plaintiff, and Armour Packing Company was defendant.

By the revenue law of North Carolina of March 9, 1903 (N. C. Public Laws, p. 323, chap. 247), it is provided in schedule B:

"Sec. 26. Defining taxes under this schedule. Taxes in this schedule shall be imposed as license tax for the privilege of carrying on the business or doing the act named, and nothing in this act contained shall be construed to relieve any person or corporation from the payment of tax as required in the preceding schedule."

"Sec. 56. Packing houses. Upon every meat-packing house doing business in this state, $100 for each county in which said business is carried on."

"Sec. 88. Unless prohibited, county may levy same license tax as state. In case where a specific license tax is levied for the privilege of carrying on any business, trade, or profession, the county may levy the same tax, and no more: Provided, no provision to the contrary is made in the section levying the specific license tax."

[228] *Section 107 of chapter 251 of Public Laws of 1903 (p. 407) reads:

"Sec. 107. State treasurer to sue for taxes. Upon failure to pay to the state treasurer within thirty days after the same shall have become due, any tax which by law is made payable direct to the state treasurer, it shall be his duty to institute an action to enforce the same in the county of Wake, or in the county in which the property taxed is located."

The 3d section of article 5 of the Constitution of North Carolina provides:

"Laws shall be passed taxing, by a uniform rule, all moneys, credits, investments in bonds, stocks, joint stock companies, or otherwise; . . . The general assembly may also tax trades, professions, franchises, and incomes."

It appeared from the facts agreed, as in substance stated by the supreme court of North Carolina, that the Armour Packing Company was incorporated in New Jersey, but has its principal office and place of business in Kansas, that business being "a meat-packing house business," and that it has property in North Carolina; that "a meat-packing house is a place where the business of slaughtering animals, and dressing and preparing the products of their carcasses for food and other purposes, is carried on; the products thus prepared consist of fresh and cured meats, such as hams, dry salt sides, bacon, lard, beef extracts, glue, blood, tankage, etc." That the Armour Packing Company "does not, anywhere within the state of North Carolina, slaughter, dress, cure, pack, or manufacture any products hereinbefore set forth, of any animal, for food, or for commercial use, or for other purposes;" but that after the animals are slaughtered, dressed, and prepared for food or other commercial purposes in Kansas, such product is shipped in bulk to Wilmington, Greensboro, Asheville, Charlotte, and Fayetteville, North Carolina, where the company has cold storage plants and warehouses, and sold from such storage plants, some of such product to parties in North Carolina and some to parties outside of that state; that part of said products shipped to *the cold storage warehouse in Asheville, Buncombe county, remain there until disposed of in due course of trade on orders taken and received after said products have been stored or placed in said warehouse or cold storage plants. At each of said five points in North Carolina, where the company maintains a warehouse and cold storage plants, it has one or more employees, i. e., bookkeepers, stenographers, shipping clerks, salesmen, drivers, laborers who box said meats and who wrap and crate goods for delivery as they are sold. There are, in Wilmington and other cities of said state, commission merchants, brokers, and butchers who sell by wholesale and retail in competition with the Armour Packing Company, who are not engaged in a meat-packing house business in North Carolina or elsewhere, fresh, cured, and salt meats and other products that have been manufactured from the carcasses of slaughtered animals for food and commercial purposes, and, under the laws of North Carolina, said commission merchants, brokers, and butchers are not amenable to the tax levied under § 56 of said revenue act of 1903. At all points in North Carolina where the Armour Packing Company is engaged in business, and at various other places in said state, there are engaged in business, as the Armour Packing Company is engaged, packing houses which pack articles of food other than meat, and offer them for sale in said state, such as peas, beans, tomatoes, corn, pumpkins, fruit, fish, oysters, etc. The products of said packing houses are articles of food and commerce, and are sold in the state of North Carolina through agents, brokers, wholesale and retail merchants, just as the products packed by the Armour Packing Company are sold.

The ruling of the court was invoked on certain points stated, all of which were adjudged adversely to defendant, and judgment was rendered against it for the tax and costs, which was affirmed by the supreme court of North Carolina. 134 N. C. 567, 47 S. E. 53.

Mr. Thomas B. Felder, Jr., argued the cause and filed a brief for plaintiff in error:

It is well settled that corporations are persons within the provisions of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

A tax on the privilege of selling goods is in effect a tax on the goods themselves.

Kehrer v. Stewart, 117 Ga. 969, 44 S. E. 854; Welton v. Missouri, 91 U. S. 275, 23 L. ed. 347.

It is well-established and sound law that, where the burden of a tax falls on the thing which is the subject of taxation, the tax is to be regarded as laid on the thing, rather than on the individual who is charged with the duty of paying it into the treasury.

Brown v. Maryland, 12 Wheat. 419, 6 L. ed. 678.

The prohibitions of the 14th Amendment protect the citizen against a denial of the equal protection of the law, and against taking property without due process of law, under the power of taxation.

Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Taylor, 86 Fed. 185.

It may be true that the proposition that a tax statute, or the tax laid under a statute, is in violation of the Constitution of the state, is not of itself necessarily sufficient to constitute a violation of the 14th Amendment; but when, in addition to the violation of the state Constitution, the statute results in an arbitrary and oppressive discrimination in regard to a large class of citizens, or a large species of property, it is such class legislation and such denial of the equal protection of the laws as renders it obnoxious to the 14th Amendment. And the state Constitution is important in determining what the rights of the citizen are, and whether equal protection of the law is being denied.

Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Taylor, 86 Fed. 186.

Taxation on business or occupation in the state of North Carolina, to be constitutional, must be uniform upon all business of the same class of subjects.

If an act shows a discrimination upon its face, or in its practical administration, it will be declared obnoxious to the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which guarantees to all citizens the "equal protection of the laws."

Kehrer v. Stewart, 197 U. S. 69, 49 L. ed. 668, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 403.

It has been frequently held that the state has the right to classify occupations and to impose different taxes upon different occupations, but all belonging to a natural class must be assigned to it by the act making the classification.

Cook v. Marshall County, 196 U. S. 261, 275, 49 L. ed. 471, 476, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 233.

The 14th Amendment does not profess to secure to all persons in the United States the benefit of the same laws and remedies. Great diversities may and do exist. All that a citizen can demand under the last clause of the 14th Amendment is that he shall not be denied the same protection of the laws which is enjoyed by other persons, or other classes, in the same place and under like circumstances.

The section applies to state action, and not that of individuals (Virginia v. Rives [Ex Parte Virginia] 100 U. S. 318, 25 L. ed. 669; Civil Rights Cases, 109 U. S. 17, 27 L. ed. 841, 3 Sup. The privileges and immunities guaranteed are the fundamental ones,—protection by government; right to acquire and possess property of every kind; pursue and obtain happiness and safety, subject to the restraints exacted for the general good; of national citizenship; right to go to seat of government and transact business with it; free access to its seaports; care and protection of the government on the high seas and in foreign states.

Rep. 609), and a higher license tax cannot be imposed upon non-resident traders than on resident (Ward v. Maryland, 12 Wall. 429, 20 L. ed. 453).

This is so whether it results from the law itself or from its practical administration. Kehrer v. Stewart, supra.

The rates may be varying, but there must be no discrimination between members of a class (Home Ins. Co. v. New York, 134 U. S. 606, 33 L. ed. 1031, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 593; Giozza v. Tiernan, 148 U. S. 662, 37 L. ed. 601, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 721), and the states have the power of classification (Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 158, 41 L. ed. 669, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 255), subject only to the rule that the classification be made on reasonable grounds, and must not be arbitrary (Magoun v. Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank, 170 U. S. 298, 42 L. ed. 1044, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 594).

It cannot make purely arbitrary classification, and impose upon a class special burdens. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Matthews, 174 U. S. 106, 43 L. ed. 913, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 609.

An exception to this rule seems to be made in the case of W. W. Cargill Co. v. Minnesota, 180 U. S. 469, 45 L. ed. 627, 21 Sup.

Ct. Rep. 423, where it was held that a license may be required of warehouses situated on a railroad, although none be required of warehouses not so situated, but it seems that this classification was permitted on the ground that it was a regulation of a quasi public highway.

The construction placed upon the act by the supreme court of North Carolina did violence to the legislative intent; the purpose of the legislature was to impose a tax upon the entire volume of business done by plaintiff in error, and not alone upon the domestic business, and if the tax had been intended to apply to the domestic business alone, the amount thereof would, of necessity, have been very much smaller, inasmuch as the proportion of the domestic business to the foreign business is infinitesimal.

While a foreign corporation may sell its goods in a state or solicit sales in the transaction of interstate commerce as a right, it can only establish itself in a state and do business therein as a privilege granted by the state.

As the state has the right to exclude foreign corporations, it necessarily has involved therein the right to impose conditions on their admission into its jurisdiction; and if the state has the right to impose conditions, it necessarily follows that it has the right to classify.

This court has sought by its utterances to impress the view that taxes imposed for revenue should be equal, and that there should be no discrimination. The court, however, has not laid down that principle in the matter of license taxation, and has not decided that provisions for equality are applicable to license taxes.

Certainly the principle of uniformity and of "the equal protection of the laws" secured by the 14th Amendment are not violated so long as the tax rests alike upon all persons or corporations belonging to the particular class as classified by legislative enactment.

To hold that the statute is void as denying the equal protection of the laws to meat-packing houses because pumpkin-packing houses are not amenable to the same tax, one would certainly have to enter the realm of fiction.

Stewart v. Kehrer, 115 Ga. 184, 41 S. E. 680.

With the disposition of state questions by the appropriate state authorities it is not the province of this court to interfere, and there is no basis for the suggestion of any violation of the Constitution of the United States, the denial of due process of law, or deprivation of any right, privilege, or immunity secured by the Constitution or laws of the United States.

Lambert v. Barrett, 157 U. S. 698, 699, 39 L. ed. 865, 866, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 722.

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the opinion of the court:

The supreme court of North Carolina stated the contentions of the Armour Packing Company thus:

"1. That it is not engaged in doing a packing-house business in this state; . . . (2) that the tax is an interference with interstate commerce; (3) that the tax contravenes § 3 of article 5 of the Constitution of North Carolina, which requires taxation 'by uniform rule;' (4) that the tax is forbidden by the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States; (5) that singling out 'meat-packing houses' for taxation is arbitrary or class legislation, and prohibited by both state and Federal Constitutions."

The court said:

"If the business of the defendant was solely that of shipping food products into this state, consigned directly to purchasers, on orders previously obtained, it is, clear that this would be interstate commerce, and a tax laid by the state upon such business would be illegal. But the defendant does a large business within the state,—the selling of products already stored here on orders received after these products are thus stored. The tax is laid upon every meat-packing house 'doing busines in this state.' The evident meaning of the legislature is to *tax the agency 'doing business' [234] within this state, and not to lay any tax upon the interstate commerce of shipping products into the state, to be directly or indirectly delivered to purchasers whose orders were obtained before the goods were shipped."

And, after recapitulating from the agreed statement the particulars of the business transacted in North Carolina, the court applied the rule that the legislature could prescribe such conditions as it saw fit on the transaction of business by a foreign corporation within the state, and held that the license tax was the condition upon which defendant was permitted to do the business so described; and cited Osborne v. Florida, 164 U. S. 650, 41 L. ed. 586, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 214, as decisive on the question that the license tax applied only to business within the state, and not to that which was interstate in its character; and added: "The defendant doing business in this state, and the license tax being exacted only by virtue of its intrastate business, the first two grounds of objection are overruled."

As was said in Osborne v. Florida, this construction of a state statute by its highest court is not open to review; and, accepting it, the case plainly comes within Kehrer v. Stewart, 197 U. S. 60, 49 L. ed. 663, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 403. That was a writ of error to the supreme court of Georgia (115 Ga. 184, 41 S. E. 680), involving the constitutionality of a statute imposing a tax upon packing house agents, and the liability of an agent of Nelson Morris & Company, a meat-packing firm of Chicago, to pay it. It was contended that Morris & Company did not slaughter, dress, cure, pack, or manufacture the products of animals for food anywhere in the state of Georgia, and that therefore the firm was not doing a packing-house business within the state; that the statute violated the commerce clause of the Constitution, and that it was invalid, in that it denied the equal protection of the laws. These contentions were overruled by the supreme court of Georgia, and this court affirmed the judgment. And among other things it was there said:

"The act in question does not deny to the petitioner the *equal protection of the [235] laws, as the tax is imposed alike upon the managing agent both of domestic and of foreign houses. . . . There is no discrimination in favor of the agents of domestic houses, and, while we may suspect that the act was primarily intended to apply to agents of ultra state houses, there is no discrimination upon the face of the act, and none, so far as the record shows, upon its practical administration. As we have frequently held, the state has the right to classify occupations, and to impose different taxes upon different occupations. Such has been constantly the practice of Congress under the internal revenue laws. Cook v. Marshall County, 196 U. S. 261, 275, 49 L. ed. 471, 476, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 233. What the necessity is for such tax, and upon what occupations it shall be imposed, as well as the amount of the imposition, are exclusively within the control of the state legislature. So long as there is no discrimination against citizens of other states, the amount and necessity of the tax are not open to criticism here." 197 U. S. 69, 49 L. ed. 668, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 403.

This practically disposes of the fourth and fifth contentions, since the classification of meat-packing houses cannot be said to be an arbitrary selection or not to rest on reasonable grounds, and the 14th Amendment was not intended to prevent a state from adjusting its system of taxation in all proper and reasonable ways, or, through the undoubted power of classification, to impose different taxes upon different trades and professions.

"A tax may be imposed only upon certain callings and trades; for when the state exerts its power to tax, it is not bound to tax all pursuits or all property that may be legitimately taxed for governmental purposes. It would be an intolerable burden if a state could not tax any property or calling, unless, at the same time, it taxed all property or all callings." Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co. 184 U. S. 540, 562, 46 L. ed. 679, 690, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 431, 440.

By the act under consideration the tax is levied upon every packing house doing business in the state, which includes by its terms both domestic and foreign meat-packing houses. It is true that it appears that where the Armour Packing Company does business certain persons sell, both by wholesale and retail, packing-house products, and yet are not subjected to this tax, but also that those parties are not doing, either in North Carolina or elsewhere, a packing-house business. And so it appears that in North Carolina, at the points where the Armour Packing Company is engaged in business, and at other places in the state, there are establishments engaged in business, which pack articles of food other than meats, such as peas, beans, pumpkins, etc., and offer them for sale; but we cannot accept the suggestion that the statute is void as denying the equal protection of the laws to meat-packing houses because houses packing vegetables and the like are not included in the same classification, and subject to the same tax.

As to the contention that the act is in violation of § 3 of article 5 of the state Constitution, the state supreme court held that this tax, although not a property or ad valorem tax, was controlled, even if the requirement of uniformity were applicable, by the rule that "a tax is uniform when it is equal upon all persons belonging to the described class upon which it is imposed." And with that conclusion it is not our province, nor are we disposed, to interfere.

Judgment affirmed.

Mr. Justice Brown (with whom was Mr. Justice Peckham), dissenting:

The main, and practically the only, question in this case is whether the Armour Packing Company was a "meat-packing house doing business" in the state of North Carolina within *the meaning of the statute. [237
The seventh and eighth items of the stipulation of facts are as follows:

"7. A meat-packing house is a place where the business of slaughtering animals, and dressing and preparing the products of their carcasses for food and other purposes, is carried on. The products thus prepared consist of fresh and cured meats, such as hams, dry salt sides, bacon, lard, beef extracts, glue, blood, tankage, etc.

"8. Said Armour Packing Company does not anywhere, within the state of North Carolina, slaughter, dress, cure, pack, or manufacture any products hereinbefore set forth, of any animal, for food, or for commercial use, or for other purposes."

As one article of the findings defines the meat-packing business to consist in doing certain things, and the very next article declares that none of these things are done within the state, it is difficult to say that, notwithstanding these findings of fact, there is a conclusion of law that the company is doing a meat-packing business in that state. The packing company doubtless falls within the letter of the statute. It does a meat-packing business in Kansas City. It does a business in North Carolina. But, as we have said in numerous cases, a thing may be within the letter of a statute, and not be within its spirit. United States v. Babbit, 1 Black, 55, 17 L. ed. 94. The letter of the statute in this case would be satisfied if the packing company did a furniture or dry goods business in North Carolina, yet it would clearly not be within the intent of the statute. If, for instance, the tax were upon breweries, and the beer were all manufactured out of the state, and then shipped into the state for sale and distribution, is it possible that the defendant would be liable for doing business as a brewer? So if the tax were imposed upon the manufacturers of carriages, and all the manufacturing were done in Chicago, and the carriages shipped into North Carolina, and there sold, the defendant would be liable as a dealer in carriages, but certainly not as a manufacturer. The business done at the five cold storage plants, which consists in packing the meats [238] and wrapping them for delivery as *they are sold, is not mentioned in the seventh finding, even as an incidental part of the packing business. Much less even is the business of selling meats at retail, as ordinary butchers do. Yet, in the opinion of the court, the company was doing a meat-packing house business within the state. In the view of the minority, the business done within the state must be a meat-packing business, and not the business of selling meats, either at wholesale or retail; and when the meat-packing house is accurately defined in the stipulation, and no part of the business thus defined appears to have been done within the state, it is impossible to support the tax.

The case resembles that of Kehrer v. Stewart, 197 U. S. 60, 49 L. ed. 663, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 403, in many particulars, but with the vital difference that the law of Georgia imposed a tax upon "all agents of packing houses doing business within this state, $200, in each county where said business is carried on." As the tax was imposed upon agents of packing houses, and not upon the packing houses themselves, the court was unanimously of the opinion that the managing agents of foreign packing houses were subject to the tax. But in this case the act attempts to reach out and tax packing houses doing business as such exclusively in another state.

With the utmost deference to the opinion of the court, we are constrained to dissent from its view.

Mr. Justice White and Mr. Justice McKenna also dissented upon other grounds.

v.

COBRE GRANDE COPPER COMPANY, E. B. Gage, W. M. Adamson, John H. Costello, J. Henry Wood, and Con. O'Keefe, its Directors; William C. Greene, George Mitchell, Phœnix National Bank of Phœnix, Arizona Territory; Cananea Consolidated Copper Company, and Greene Consolidated Copper Company.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 239-248.)

Corporations—contracts of officers—rights of minority stockholders.—A sale of nearly the entire stock in a corporation by its president, with whom it was pooled for that purpose, made, on the advice of the directors, to the person offering the best terms, and subsequently formally ratified by the directors and by a majority vote of the stockholders, is not in fraud of the rights of minority stockholders because the purchaser's object may have been to stop litigation brought against him by the corporation, and to quiet his possession to the property claimed by it, where the issues presented by such litigation, so far as tried, had been decided against the corporation, and where not decided, in the opinion of its attorney, would also be decided against it; nor can fraud be deduced from the provisions in the contract of sale for the payment of compensation to such president and attorney, and for the surrender of a note due the corporation, where it is manifest that these provisions constituted no inducement to the contract.

Argued November 29, December 1, 1905. Decided January 8, 1906.

APPEAL from the Supreme Court of the Territory of Arizona to review a judgment which affirmed a judgment of the District Court of Yavapai County, in that territory, denying the relief sought in a minority stockholder's suit. Affirmed.

Statement by Mr. Justice McKenna:

This is a minority stockholder's suit. It was brought originally by Axel W. Hallenborg as owner of 8,617 shares of the Cobre Grande Copper Company, an Arizona corporation, and also as creditor of that corporation for advances to the amount of $50,005. The appellant Addicks owned 5,000 shares and was allowed to intervene at the trial, and adopted Hallenborg's complaint.

NOTE.—On the liability of the directors of a corporation to the corporation—see notes to Bosworth v. Allen, 55 L.R.A. 751; Koehler v. Black River Falls Iron Co. 17 L. ed. U. S. 340; and McGourkey v. Toledo & O. C. R. Co. 36 L. ed. U. S. 1079.

In November, 1898, defendant (appellee) Greene owned certain mining properties in Sonora, Mexico, and had an option on other properties. He gave an option on these properties to defendant Mitchell. It was provided in the option that $12,500 should be paid in cash, and $237,500, as follows: $37,500 on or before November 26, 1899; $100,000 on or before November 26, 1900; $100,000 on or before November 26, 1901.

[240] *In April, 1899, Greene, Mitchell, and other parties, under the laws of Arizona, organized the Cobre company. One hundred and ninety-nine thousand, nine hundred and ninety-five shares of the stock were turned over to Mitchell in consideration of his option from Greene, which option was assigned to the Cobre company, subject to Greene's rights. The Cobre company went into possession, and was in possession in September, 1899. In October of that year controversies arose between Greene and the company over the option and the right to possession of the properties, and Greene entered into possession of them. Thereupon the company instituted suits in the courts of Mexico to gain possession of the properties, and also instituted a suit in the district court of Maricopa county, Arizona, to restrain the delivery to Greene of the deeds which were put in escrow under the contract with Mitchell, which had been assigned to the Cobre company. In the latter suit an injunction was granted, restraining Greene from demanding or receiving the deeds. A suit was also brought in New York and one in Texas to recover the product of the mines. In the suit in Arizona the Cobre company alleged, among other things, in substance, all the facts set forth in paragraph three of the original complaint in the present suit, and prayed that Greene be required to account for the proceeds of the products of the mines and other property alleged to have been appropriated by him. Issue was joined by the defendants therein, the case tried, and a judgment entered dismissing the complaint. The judgment was not appealed from. At the time of the judgment the plaintiffs were stockholders of the Cobre company.

While the litigation was pending, the stockholders of the Cobre company, or a majority of them, comprising stockholders to the number of 115,049 shares, entered into a pooling arrangement, whereby all of their stock was delivered to defendant Gage, with power to vote the same at all meetings of the stockholders. Subsequently Gage was granted the right to dispose of and sell the stock at his discretion. Several attempts were made by Gage to sell the stock at $2.50 a share, which *failed on [241] account of the other contracting parties not complying with their contracts. The plaintiff Hallenborg and John H. Costello opened negotiations with Gage for the stock at $2.50 a share. This also failed on account of objection by Costello to the contract which was drawn, although negotiations were kept up until December, 1900. Then Gage opened negotiations with Greene, who offered to buy the stock, upon better terms than anybody else had offered. Gage consulted the directors, and they urged him to enter into a contract with Greene. The stock represented by Gage represented the entire stock of the company, including Hallenborg's 8,000 shares, except that owned by Greene and his associates, and about 6,500 shares owned by other parties. Gage entered into a contract with Greene, December 12, 1900, and it was ratified in its entirety by the directors and by a majority vote of the stockholders. Hallenborg was present by attorney at the meeting, and protested against the ratification. The contract was complied with by Greene, and he paid the full purchase price for the shares, and they were delivered to him and the Greene Copper Company. All of the stockholders accepted the money so paid except Hallenborg, who returned the money sent him, and declined to be bound by the contract.

The court finds that the contract was made with Greene in good faith, with full knowledge and consent of the directors, and upon the advice of counsel of the Cobre company, that the company could not successfully maintain the suit brought in Arizona, and with the full belief on the part of Gage that the contract was for the best interest of the company and its stockholders. And the court further finds that no agreement was made between Gage or other persons, whereby the directors—Adamson, Wood, O'Keefe, or any of them—were to derive benefit, or did derive any benefit whatsoever, except such as they derived from the sale of their stock.

The contract of December 12, between Gage and Greene, provided for the payment of the stock in certain instalments. Greene was to pay to Gage $25,000 in cash in addition to the $2.50 *per share, and also pay [242] to Gage $30,000, and in addition 3,000 shares of the capital stock of the Greene Consolidated Copper Company, or, in lieu thereof, $30,000 in cash. Gage was given the privilege of taking, instead of $2.50 per share for shares of stock in the Cobre company, stock in the Greene Consolidated Copper Company,—four of the former for one of the latter,—the option to be exercised before payment of the second instalment on the stock of the Cobre company. Five thousand shares of the Greene Consolidated Copper Company were provided to be paid to Gage for his own use and benefit, and 5,000 shares for the use and benefit of L. H. Chalmers, Baker & Bennett, and Herndon & Norris, attorneys at law in Arizona.

It was also agreed that a certain promissory note given by J. H. Costello to the Cobre company, amounting to $23,000, was to be surrendered to Costello. This note was conditioned upon the Cobre company obtaining possession of its property in Mexico, and was not to be paid until ninety days after such recovery. It was also agreed that the suits brought by the Cobre company in New York, Texas, and Arizona should be dismissed. The other provisions of the contract are but incident to those before given, and may be omitted. The suits in New York are still pending. All the other suits were dismissed or otherwise disposed of by final judgment prior to this suit. The $25,000 mentioned in the contract of December 12 was for the purpose of taking up and discharging certain notes due by the Cobre company. It was so paid. The $30,000 mentioned was to be, and it was, turned into the treasury of the company to pay its debts. The 3,000 shares in the Greene Consolidated Company, or the alternative $30,000, was also for the purpose of paying the debts of the Cobre company outside of the $25,000 before mentioned. It was paid into the treasury. The 5,000 shares of stock in the Greene Consolidated Company was intended by all parties as compensation to Gage as president of the Cobre company, and for the time, labor, and trouble given to the com-[243] pany's business, and for *money advanced for it, and expenses paid in attending to its affairs. Instead of shares, as provided, a cash payment of $50,000 was made to him. The shares paid to Chalmers and Baker & Bennett, Herndon & Norris, were intended to be paid as compensation as attorneys for the company for their services in various litigations. Instead of the shares, a cash payment of $50,000 was made, and it is found that their services were reasonably worth that sum. The note against Costello was surrendered to him.

The court also finds that the only property in possession of the Cobre company within the jurisdiction of the court is the money paid into the treasury of the company in pursuance of the contract of December 12. And, finally, the court finds "that the temporary restraining order granted in this action, enjoining defendants from carrying out the terms and provisions of the contract of December 12, 1900, and dismissing any and all of the actions then pending in behalf of the Cobre Grande, and enjoining defendant Phœnix National Bank from delivering up any of the papers and documents held by it in escrow, evidencing the title held by the Cobre Grande Copper Company in and to the mining property described in the complaint, was modified, and the part of it enjoining the Phœnix National Bank was dissolved upon the ground that the district court in and for Maricopa county had rendered its decision in the suit of the Cobre Grande Copper Company against Greene and others adversely to said Cobre Grande Copper Company, and that, as a part of the judgment of said court, the Phœnix National Bank was commanded to deliver up said papers and documents to said defendant Greene, and that, as this case now stands, there is nothing before the court except an application for the appointment of a receiver."

Mr. Alfred B. Cruikshank argued the cause and filed a brief for appellants:

The parties to these pooling contracts, including plaintiff, had a right to rely on the trustee, Gage, that the pool or combination would be used to benefit, not to defeat or destroy, the interests and prospects of the corporation. For the stockholders who became a party to this combination, controlling a majority of its stock, became, to some extent and for some purposes, the corporation itself, and assumed the trust relation of the corporation to its other stockholders. They were bound to act for its best interests; and such a combination or its managers could not, any more than its formally elected trustees, do any act whereby a profit should be made out of the corporation at the expense of the minority stockholders; and any such act would be a constructive fraud upon such minority stockholders.

That a majority combination of stockholders becomes a trustee for the minority is well settled.

Mr. Aldis B. Browne argued the cause, and, with Messrs. Ben Goodrich and Alexander Britton, filed a brief for appellees.

If the agreement of December 12, 1900, was constructively fraudulent, it had been ratified by the directors and by a majority of the stockholders, and there can be no question but what the acts constituting constructive fraud can always be ratified, except in the few instances where the statutes make certain acts conclusively fraudulent.

The rule deducible from the authorities that a trustee is prohibited from making a profit out of his trust relation means that he must not make a secret profit out of it. His duty is not to avoid, wholly, the doing of anything for his own benefit; his obligation to the beneficiaries in the trust is to make a full, fair, and complete disclosure of all the circumstances attending any transaction which will benefit himself in any manner different from the manner in which all the shareholders will be benefited.

The ownership of nearly 94 per cent of the stock of this corporation could control its dissolution and as certainly properly control the proposition that doubtful and expensive litigation (the sole asset of the company) should cease. Otherwise an insignificant minority could compel the large majority to continue to sink money in a losing business, or, as here, demand that such majority imperil their entire holdings by the unsuccessful outcome of litigation, and incur further liability and expense in carrying it on.

Messrs. Norton Chase, Eugene S. Ives, and M. E. Harvy also filed a brief for appellees:

Upon proper evidence it is for the court to decide whether the contract alleged to be fraudulent is a fair one or not, with power to set it aside if it is manifestly unfair.

2 Cook, Corp. 5th ed. § 649, p. 1459.

And even though the boards of directors of two corporations are the same, and one buys out the property of the other, yet the transaction is not void, and will not be set aside at the instance of a stockholder unless he shows damage.

2 Cook, Corp. 5th ed. § 658, p. 1512; Smith v. Ferries & C. H. R. Co. (Cal.) 51 Pac. 710.

If the minority stockholders object to the contract, the court will consider it, and will sustain it if fair, and set it aside if unfair.

In the absence of fraud and unfairness the minority may not defeat the whole body of associates respecting the security common to all.

Shaw v. Little Rock & Ft. S. R. Co. 100 U. S. 605, 25 L. ed. 757.

It is well settled that a director may deal with his corporation. He may advance it money by way of loan or sell it property. Such contracts are voidable at the instance of the beneficiary, but are not void, and in order to avoid them injury must be shown.

Copsey v. Sacramento Bank, 133 Cal. 659, 85 Am. St. Rep. 238, 66 Pac. 7, 204.

The authorities are conclusive that even when a director makes a contract with a corporation, if such contract be approved by the stockholders, it is valid as against the dissent of a minority of the stockholders.

2 Cook, Corp. 5th ed, § 649, p. 1458.

The action of the stockholders validates the contract even where nine out of thirteen directors were personally interested.

If it should be assumed that a majority of the stockholders of the lessor have adopted, or are willing to adopt, the act of the directors, notwithstanding they were also directors of the lessee, the complainant is without remedy and without equities, as, by permission of the statute, such lease is within the legitimate discretion of the corporation. It would not be equitable or just that a single stockholder, or a minority of the stockholders, should be permitted to defeat the wishes and thwart the interests of the majority. It is an implied condition of the association of stockholders in a corporation that the majority shall have authority to bind the whole body in any transaction within the corporate powers.

Bill v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 16 Fed. 14.

If the directors of the Cobre Grande Copper Company believed honestly and fairly, upon advice of counsel, that the Cobre Grande Copper Company would be defeated in its litigation, it was not only clearly within their right, but it was their absolute duty, to effect the compromise which they did.

Gamble v. Queens County Water Co. 123 N. Y. 91, 9 L.R.A. 527, 25 N. E. 201.

This litigation the directors of the company would be entitled to compromise and settle upon any fair and honest terms, and no protest or objection upon the part of minority shareholders would avail to prevent this.

Cook, Corp. § 750; Donohoe v. Mariposa Land & Min. Co. 66 Cal. 317, 5 Pac. 495; Chambers v. McKee, 185 Pa. 105, 39 Atl. 822.

*Mr. Justice McKenna, after stating the [244] case as above, delivered the opinion of the court:

Both of the lower courts held that the suit had become one for the appointment of a receiver. The supreme court said: "The purposes for which a receiver is asked are twofold, so far as the record is concerned: First, that he may take charge of the property of the company; second, that he may prosecute its litigation." [(Ariz.) 74 Pac. 1052.] After some comment the court further observed that the district court was well within the exercise of a sound discretion in refusing to appoint a receiver, and "that there was not any other relief which the court could properly grant the plaintiffs in this action." We do not find it necessary to decide whether, if plaintiffs' complaint were true, they would not be entitled to greater relief than the appointment of a receiver. We rest our judgment on the merits. In other words, we think the complaint has not been established.

The complaint charges a conspiracy between Greene and Mitchell, being at the time directors of the Cobre company, to deprive the company of its mines and property, and acquire it for themselves; and that, in pursuance of the conspiracy, they took possession of the company's property. No evidence was offered in the present suit to sustain the charge. Records of suits in which like charges were made cannot be regarded as such. The complaint also charges the contract of December 12, 1900, to be a "fraudulent and corrupt contract and conspiracy of Greene with Gage and other directors of the Cobre company, to stop the litigation against defendants, and to secure to them the undisputed possession of the mines" from which the Cobre company had been evicted. Both of the lower courts found against the charge. They found that Gage entered into the contract with the knowledge of the directors of the Cobre company, and in good faith, upon the advice of counsel of the futility of further pursuing the litigation against Greene, and in the belief that "the contract was to the best interest of said company and its stockholders." It may be [245] admitted that *Greene's purpose was to stop the litigation against him, and quiet his possession of the property, but we cannot assume from this that he was guilty of fraud in making the contract of December 12, or that it was part of a conspiracy with the directors of the Cobre company to deprive the company of its property. Therefore any fraud in fact is out of the case.

Plaintiffs, however, contend that the contract is fraudulent on its face, and that it was decided so to be by the supreme court of New York in Hallenborg v. Greene, 66 App. Div. 590, 73 N. Y. Supp. 403. The pleadings are not set out in the report of the case. We may assume, however, that the complaint was, in most part, as that in the case at bar.

The case went to the supreme court on an appeal from an order granting a preliminary injunction and appointing a receiver. It was heard on the complaint and affidavits of the plaintiff. The affidavits of the defendants were, by stipulation, omitted from the record. Upon the showing thus made the court said:

"According to the complaint and affidavits, the Cobre company was not only a solvent corporation, but its assets were exceedingly valuable; and through conspiracy, fraud, and bribery the defendants Greene and Mitchell have obtained the management and control thereof to further their own schemes in hostility to the interests of the other stockholders, and have actually obtained a contract from the Cobre company to transfer to these rival companies, controlled and managed by Greene and Mitchell, all its property and property rights, without even a nominal consideration. This fraudulent contract was being consummated with despatch at the time of the commencement of this action and the granting of the injunction herein. These allegations must be taken as true for the purposes of this appeal, and it is evident that the inevitable consequence will be not only that the stock of the Cobre company, of which the plaintiff is a large holder,—owning one twenty-fifth of the entire stock,—will be rendered worthless, but that there [246] will *be no assets with which to pay the claims of creditors, of whom also the plaintiff is one for a substantial amount.

"It needs no refinement of the decisions to show that the cause thus presented is one for equitable cognizance."

The allegations of the plaintiffs were taken to be true; and, being so taken, the comments of the court may claim justification. In the case at bar the allegations of the complaint, as far as they are passed on, are found to be untrue. The opinion of the supreme court of New York, therefore, is of no value to plaintiffs' contention.

We are remitted, therefore, to the contract of December 12. What fraudulent element is there in that? It disposed of the shares of the stockholders, and it secured the payment of money to the corporation; it settled controversies which, as far as appears, the company had no means of prosecuting, and which, wherever they were tried, had been decided against the company; and where not decided, in the opinion of the company's attorney, would also be decided against the company. We may assume that the stockholders knew or could estimate the value of the properties. They deposited their stock with Gage to sell,—became, indeed, impatient at his delay. We may assume the price of the stock reflected the value of the properties,—Hallenborg bought his shares at $2.50. He had an option upon all that were in Gage's hands at that price. He let the option lapse, although negotiation was kept up with him from October to December. Gage then turned to Greene, who, it is found, offered to purchase the stock on better terms than anybody else ever offered. And there was no concealment. Gage was urged by the directors of the company and a large majority of the stockholders to make the contract. It was subsequently formally ratified by the directors and by a majority vote of the stockholders, at a stockholders' meeting.

But there were three other elements from which plaintiffs deduce fraud. Gage was given $50,000 as compensation as president of the Cobre company and other services and expenses paid by him; the attorneys of the company were paid *$50,000 [247] for legal services, and there was surrendered to Costello the note which he owed the company. There was no secrecy about these items, and it is manifest from the findings and the evidence that they constituted no inducement to the contract. Whether Gage can be compelled to pay to the Cobre company the money received by him, we need not decide. Its receipt by him did not make the whole contract fraudulent. It did not take from the stockholders the power to sell their stock, nor from the directors of the company the power to control the litigation in which the company was involved, to abandon that litigation, or to compromise it. In the exercise of their power they could have done those things directly. It was a matter of form and procedure that it was done in the manner provided by the contract of December 12.

It is deceptive to call or regard the action of the directors as a transfer of the property of the corporation without consideration, or for an inadequate consideration. The company had only a right to purchase the property, the conditions of which it had not fulfilled. It claimed legal excuse, and brought suits against Greene; but that it had legal excuse was disputed, and seems to have been doubted by all who were interested in the property but the plaintiffs. A jury in Texas had decided against the excuse; and the court in Arizona has also done so. That the latter was subsequent to the contract of December 12 does not militate against it as proof of good faith of the settlement.

This view of the merits of the case renders it unnecessary to pass upon the contention of the defendants that a court of equity has no inherent power, in the absence of statutory authority, to appoint a receiver upon the application of a private person, under the circumstances presented by the complaint.

There are assignments of error upon the rulings of the trial court on the admissions of testimony, oral and documentary, which we do not think call for discussion. It is enough to say that they are not well taken.

[248] *There is also an assignment of error upon the refusal of the supreme court to make certain findings of fact. We think the findings made substantially cover those proposed; certainly to the extent necessary to the case as we have considered it.

Judgment affirmed.

v.

S. ELLEN FOLSOM, Jennie F. Peck, and Nannie F. McCanless.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 248–255.)

1. Mandamus—to levy tax to pay judgment on township bonds.—Mandamus to compel the county authorities through whom taxes are assessed and collected to levy a tax to pay a judgment on township bonds cannot be denied on the theory that, because the legislature might, under S. C. Const. art. 9, § 8, have vested in the township authorities the power to assess and collect taxes for corporate purposes, it could not vest such power in county officers.

2. Constitutional law—impairment of contract obligations—state alteration or destruction of municipal corporation.—The exercise by a state of its right to alter or destroy its municipal corporations is ineffectual to impair the obligation of municipal contracts.

3. Mandamus—to levy tax to pay judgment on township bonds—effect of abolishing township.—County auditors and treasurers, who are the instruments employed by the state legislature to assess and collect taxes, may be compelled by mandamus to levy a tax to pay a judgment on township bonds, although the corporate existence of the township has been abolished by the state Constitution, and its corporate agents removed.

4. Suits against state—mandamus to levy tax to pay judgment on township bonds.—Mandamus to compel county auditors and county treasurers to levy a tax to pay a judgment on township bonds is not a suit against the state, within the inhibition of the Federal Constitution, because such officers have been forbidden by the state legislature to exercise any such power.

Argued December 8, 1905. Decided January 8, 1906.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of South Carolina to review a judgment in mandamus, requiring a county auditor and county treasurer to assess and collect a tax to pay a judgment on township bonds. Affirmed.

See same case below, 131 Fed. 496.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. F. Barron Grier argued the cause, and, with Mr. J. B. Park, filed a brief for plaintiffs in error:

If the legislature had intended to make the county auditor and county treasurer corporate agents of the township it could and would have said so; and especially must this conclusion follow when, almost in the same sentence, and in the same section of the act, it proceeds to declare what officers shall be corporate agents of the township.

Denn v. Reid, 10 Pet. 527, 9 L. ed. 520.

What is termed the "policy" of the government with reference to any particular legislation is generally a very uncertain thing, upon which all sorts of opinions, each variant from the other, may be formed by different persons. It is a ground much too unstable upon which to rest the judgment of the court on the interpretation of the statute.

That the bonds are valid, that the "corporate authorities" of the township may be vested with power to assess and collect a tax to discharge them, we admit. We do say, however, that the auditor and treasurer are not such "corporate authorities," that the power to assess and collect this tax has never been delegated to the "corporate authorities" of the township, that the general assembly of the state can so delegate it whenever it chooses to, and that the petitioners must go to that body, and not to the courts, to have that power delegated.

Mr. Joseph A. McCullough, also argued the cause and filed a brief for plaintiffs in error:

The plenary power of the state over municipal corporations cannot be restricted by contracts entered into by the municipality with private parties.

Shapleigh v. San Angelo, 167 U. S. 654, 42 L. ed. 313, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 957; 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. p. 172. See also Tomlinson v. Jessup, 15 Wall. 457, 21 L. ed. 205; Atkin v. Kansas, 191 U. S. 220, 48 L. ed. 157, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 124.

In examining the authorities upon this question, all the cases naturally divide themselves into three classes:

First. Where the corporation preserves its existence, and by subsequent legislation it is sought to restrict or repeal the power of taxation previously given and pledged for the payment of the debts of such corporation. All such subsequent legislation has been declared invalid as impairing the obligations of a contract.

Von Hoffman v. Quincy (United States ex rel. Von Hoffman v. Quincy) 4 Wall. 553, 18 L. ed. 409; Louisiana ex rel. Nelson v. Police Jury, 111 U. S. 720, 28 L. ed. 576, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 648; Louisiana v. New Orleans, 102 U. S. 206, 26 L. ed. 133; Hicks v. Cleveland, 45 C. C. A. 429, 106 Fed. 459.

The second class of cases is where the municipal corporation is legislated out of existence and its territory annexed to other corporations, or substantially the same territory and inhabitants are erected into another corporation, under a different name. In such instance, the new corporation will be liable for the debts of the old, unless the legislature otherwise provides.

Mt. Pleasant v. Beckwith, 100 U. S. 514, 25 L. ed. 699; Mobile v. Watson, 116 U. S. 289, 29 L. ed. 620, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 398; Broadfoot v. Fayetteville, 124 N. C. 478, 70 Am. St. Rep. 610, 32 S. E. 804.

Third. Where the legislature abolishes altogether a municipal corporation, and makes no provisions for the payment of its debts. In such case, the authorities uniformly hold that the court cannot enforce the remedy provided for by the act, since there is no longer in existence the corporation with its officers or agents, and the creditors' only remedy is to appeal to the legislature for relief, which legislature the courts must presume will do what is just and equitable.

In order to constitute a suit against a state, it is not necessary that the state should pledge the taxing power to the payment only of its own obligations; it is perfectly competent for her to pledge the taxing power to the payment of the obligations of one of her municipalities, and if she were to thereafter fail to carry out the pledge, an effort to compel her officers or agents to do so would, we submit, be none the less a suit against the state.

Hagood v. Southern, 117 U. S. 52, 29 L. ed. 805, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 608; Louisiana v. Jumel, 107 U. S. 711, 27 L. ed. 448, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 128; Hans v. Louisiana, 24 Fed. 55; Yale College v. Sanger, 62 Fed. 177; Smith v. Rackliffe, 31 C. C. A. 328, 59 U. S. App. 427, 87 Fed. 966; Re Ayers, 123 U. S. 443, 31 L. ed. 216, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 164.

Either we have here a case where the legislature itself has directly undertaken to levy a tax, and authorized its collection through its officers and agents to pay these bonds, which it now refuses to do, and this proceeding is an effort on the part of the bondholders to compel the state to perform this obligation, in which event it is in effect a suit against the state, and violative of the Federal Constitution, or it is a case where the state has delegated the power of taxation to one of its municipalities, to be exercised through its agents, which municipality has been extinguished, and there is therefore no longer in existence any officer or agent upon whom the court can lay its hands. In fact, it is an effort to compel a defunct corporation to levy and collect taxes, which is both a legal and physical impossibility.

Grantland v. Memphis, 12 Fed. 290; First Nat. Bank v. Colby, 21 Wall. 609, 22 L. ed. 687.

Messrs. H. J. Haynsworth and R. E. L. Mountcastle argued the cause and filed a brief for defendants in error:

The courts, always anxious to protect the rights of creditors, will resort to all means within their power to provide a remedy for the creditors of dissolved corporations if the legislature does not make some other provision.

Greenwood v. Union Freight R. Co. 105 U. S. 13, 26 L. ed. 961.

The right of the state to change these institutions is not founded on their being incorporated, but on their being instruments of government created for this purpose.

Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. 638, 4 L. ed. 659.

The inhibition of the Constitution, which preserves against the interference of the state the sacredness of contracts, applies to liabilities of municipal corporations created by its permission.

Broughton v. Pensacola, 93 U. S. 266, 23 L. ed. 896.

When municipal corporations are empowered to take stock or otherwise aid in a railroad company, and they issue bonds in payment of the stock taken, or to carry out any other authorized contract in aid of the railroad company, they are, to that extent, deemed private corporations, and their obligations are secured by all the guaranties which protect the engagements of private individuals. Therefore the remedies for the enforcement of such obligations must be left unimpaired by the legislature, and if they are changed a substantial equivalent must be provided.

Mobile v. Watson, 116 U. S. 305, 29 L. ed. 626; 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 66.

The power of taxation is, in its nature, governmental or political. But it is well established that this power, when conferred upon a community for the purpose of enabling it to enter into contracts, cannot be impaired by the state.

On the other hand, corporate capacity in its nature is not a governmental or political function, but becomes so only when conferred for governmental or political purposes.

Dartmouth College v. Woodward, supra.

It follows, therefore, that corporate capacity conferred upon a community for the purpose of enabling it to enter into a contract cannot be withdrawn until the contract is satisfied.

Mandamus, like execution, can issue after the death of the judgment debtor. An action or an original proceeding may be abated by death, but mandamus is not an original proceeding, but is ancillary, and bears the same relation to the judgment that an execution does. The mandamus becomes a substitute for the ordinary process of execution, to enforce the payment of the same.

When issued in such a case, it becomes a substitute for the ordinary process of execution to enforce the judgment.

Where the duty of assessing and collecting a township tax to pay a township obligation is charged upon the county officers, corporate capacity in the township is not essential to the enforcement of such duty.

Mr. Justice McKenna delivered the opinion of the court:

This writ of error brings up for review the judgment of the circuit court in mandamus, requiring plaintiffs in error to assess and collect taxes to pay a judgment recovered against Township Ninety-six, for certain bonds issued by it in aid of the Greenville & Port Royal Railroad Company. In Folsom v. Township Ninety Six, 159 U. S. 611, 40 L. ed. 278, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 174, the bonds were declared valid obligations of the township. In accordance with the opinion in that case, judgment was entered in favor of the suing bondholders. Defendants in error are owners of that judgment. The legislation which authorized the issue of the bonds is recited in Folsom v. Township Ninety Six, and need not be repeated at length. We may say, however, that the act incorporating the railroad empowered townships interested in its construction to subscribe for its capital stock such sum as the majority of the voters, voting at an election held for that purpose, might authorize, and it was provided (§ 9) that "the county auditor or other officers discharging such duties, or city or town treasurer, as the case may be, shall be authorized and required to assess annually upon the property of said county, city, town, or townships such per centum as may be necessary to pay said interest on said sum of money subscribed, which shall be known and styled on the tax books as railroad tax, which shall be collected by the treasurer under the same regulations as are provided by law for the collection of taxes in any of the counties, cities, towns, or townships so subscribing." 19 S. C. Stat. 239, 241.

In 1895 South Carolina adopted a new Constitution, by which it was provided that the several townships of the state, with names and boundaries as then established, should continue, with power, however, in the legislature, to form other townships, or change the boundaries of those established. Art. 7. *This section, by an amend- [250] ment finally adopted in 1903, was made inapplicable to certain townships, including Ninety-six. It was provided that "the corporate existence of the said townships be, and the same is hereby, destroyed, and all offices in said townships are abolished, and all corporate agents removed." 24 S. C. Stat. 3.

At the time of the execution of the bonds, Township Ninety-six was situated in Abbeville county, and in 1896 the county of Greenwood was organized out of portions of Abbeville and Edgefield counties, and Township Ninety-six was included in Greenwood county.

The officers of the latter county refuse to assess and collect the taxes, contending that they are not officers of the county, but officers of the state, appointed by the governor of the state, and are termed county officers because assigned to duty in that county, but cannot exercise any function of those offices except as authorized by the laws of the state; and that they have been forbidden, by an act of the general assembly of the state, to assess or collect taxes for the payment of subscriptions by townships to the building of roads which have not been built. 23 S. C. Stat. 78.

Against this defense defendants in error invoke the contract clause of the Constitution of the United States.

As we have seen, the validity of the bonds was decided in Folsom v. Township Ninety Six, 159 U. S. 611, 40 L. ed. 278, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 174; in other words, they were decided to be the contracts of the township, and that the acts which authorized their issue constituted their obligation. In this the court announced and applied the principle of many cases which are too familiar to need especial citation.

Plaintiffs in error yield to the case of Folsom v. Ninety Six, but contend that it is open to inquiry what officers, under the act authorizing the bonds, were the corporate agents or officers of the township, and, answering the inquiry, say the county commissioners were such agents and officers, not the county auditor and county treasurer, and that, it is contended, the circuit court has so decided. The distinction that [251] plaintiffs *contend for, based on the opinion of the court, is merely verbal. The court distinguished the duties of the commissioners from those of the auditor and treasurer, and expressed with emphasis the continuing duty of the latter. The court said: "If the contention that the legislature had the right to destroy the corporate existence of the township be true, we are nevertheless confronted with the fact that the instrumentalities and means employed by the legislature, in this instance, for the purpose of enforcing the collection of a tax, are still unimpaired." [131 Fed. 505.]

The purpose of the court, therefore, was to point out the temporary duties of the commissioners, and to emphasize the permanent duties of the auditor and treasurer as instrumentalities of the law, with a continuing power to give its remedy and protection to the bonds, "independent of the existence of the township." And there can be no doubt about this from the words of the statute.

It is further contended that the action of the court in issuing the writ disregarded article 9 of the Constitution of 1868, entitled "Finance and Taxation." Section 8 of the article provides "that the corporate authorities of counties, townships, school districts, cities, towns, and villages may be vested with power to assess and collect taxes for corporate purposes." And the further limitation of the power of municipal corporations to levy and assess taxes, expressed in § 6, article 10, of the Constitution of 1895, to wit, "for educational purposes, to build and repair public roads, buildings, and bridges, to maintain and support prisoners, pay jurors, county officers, and for litigation, quarantine, and court expenses, and for ordinary county purposes, to support paupers and pay past indebtedness."

The argument is that "the 'corporate authorities' of the county cannot be vested with power to assess and collect a tax for township purposes, nor vice versa. That power can only be delegated to the authorities of the body contracting, or about to contract, the debt." And this argument, it is contended, *is not opposed to Folsom [252] v. Ninety Six. There, it is said, the validity of the bonds was established, but it was not decided that the "corporate authorities" of the township might be vested with power to assess and collect a tax to pay them. Here the question is, Can the auditor and treasurer, who are state officers, be made to assess and collect a tax which, under the Constitution and laws of the state, can only be done by the "corporate authorities" of the township?

Plaintiffs' construction of the case of Folsom v. Ninety Six is too limited. It takes from the case about all of its value. The case decided that the bonds were issued for corporate purposes, and established them as a valid indebtedness of the township. It proclaimed the validity of the laws under which the bonds were issued, and made those laws and every part of them the contract with the bondholders. It did not occur to any one to urge that, because the legislature might vest the township authorities with the power to assess and collect taxes, such power could not be vested in county officers. By clear implication the contrary is decided in State ex rel. Charleston, C. & C. R. Co. v. Whitesides, 30 S. C. 579, 3 L. R. A. 777, 9 S. E. 661; State ex rel. Charleston, C. & C. R. Co. v. Harper, 30 S. C. 586, 9 S. E. 664; State ex rel. Dickinson v. Neely, 30 S. C. 587, 3 L. R. A. 672, 9 S. E. 664. The offices of auditor and treasurer still exist, and through them taxes are assessed and collected in the state of South Carolina. The case at bar is not, therefore, like Heine v. Levee Comrs. 19 Wall. 655, 22 L. ed. 223; or Meriweather v. Garrett, 102 U. S. 498, 26 L. ed. 197. It is like Von Hoffman v. Quincy (United States ex rel. Von Hoffman v. Quincy) 4 Wall. 535, 18 L. ed. 403; Galena v. Amy (Galena v. United States) 5 Wall. 705, 18 L. ed. 560; Seibert v. Lewis (Seibert v. United States) 122 U. S. 284, 30 L. ed. 1161, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1190; Mobile v. Watson, 116 U. S. 289, 29 L. ed. 620, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 398, and many others.

But plaintiffs in error urge other defenses: (a) By an amendment of the Constitution in 1903 the corporate existence of Township Ninety-six was destroyed, its offices abolished and all its corporate agents were removed. (b) By an act of the legislature Township Ninety-six was included in Greenwood county. At the time the bonds were issued it was situated in Abbeville county. (c) Plaintiffs in error are forbidden by the laws of the state from assessing and collecting taxes for Ninety-[253] six *Township and have no power to perform the acts enjoined upon them by the judgment of the circuit court.

These defenses differ only in form from those which this court held insufficient in the cases to which we have referred, and they acquire no sanctifying power because one of them, or all of them, may be said to rest upon the Constitution of the state. This, indeed, is not denied. It is asserted that the obligation of the contract is unimpaired; that the state has done nothing but exercise an unquestionable right,—the right to alter or destroy its corporations.

The power of the state to alter or destroy its corporations is not greater than the power of the state to repeal its legislation. Exercise of the latter power has been repeatedly held to be ineffectual to impair the obligation of a contract. The repeal of a law may be more readily undertaken than the abolition of townships, or the change of their boundaries or the boundaries of counties. The latter may put on the form of a different purpose than the violation of a contract. But courts cannot permit themselves to be deceived. They will not inquire to closely into the motives of the state, but they will not ignore the effect of its action. The cases illustrate this. There may, indeed, be a limitation upon the power of the court. This was seen and expressed in Heine v. Levee Comrs. 19 Wall. 655, 22 L. ed. 223, and Meriweather v. Garrett, 102 U. S. 498, 26 L. ed. 197. There is no limitation in the case at bar. A tax has been provided for and there are officers whose duty it is to assess and collect it. A court is within the line of its duty and powers when it directs those officers to the performance of their duty; and their objects upon which the tax can be laid. It is the property within the boundaries of the territory that constituted Township Ninety-six.

Mt. Pleasant v. Beckwith, 100 U. S. 514, 25 L. ed. 699, and Mobile v. Watson, 116 U. S. 289, 29 L. ed. 620, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 398, are cases in which municipal corporations had incurred indebtedness, and afterward their municipal organization was destroyed and their territory added to other municipalities. It was argued in those cases, as it is argued in this, that such alteration or destruction of the subordinate governmental *divisions was a proper exercise of [254] legislative power, to which creditors had to submit. The argument did not prevail. It was answered, as we now answer it, that such power, extensive though it is, is met and overcome by the provision of the Constitution of the United States which forbids a state from passing any law impairing the obligation of contracts. See also Shapleigh v. San Angelo, 167 U. S. 646, 42 L. ed. 310, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 957. And this is not a limitation, as plaintiffs in error seem to think it is, of the legislative power over subordinate municipalities, either over their change or destruction. It only prevents the exercise of that power being used to defeat contracts previously entered into.

It is further contended by plaintiffs in error that this is, in effect, a suit against the state. The argument to support this contention is that, if the auditor and treasurer are not corporate authorities, as it is insisted the circuit court decided, they are necessarily "state officers, and, being state officers, this proceeding is an attempt to require of the state the performance of her contract." The reasoning by which this is attempted to be sustained is rather roundabout. It is based in part on distinctions which, it is contended, were made by the circuit court, and on the assumption that the circuit court decided that the levy of taxes prescribed by § 9 of the statute under which the bonds were issued was a levy by the legislature, and the taxing officers state officers. This proceeding, hence, it is argued, becomes a proceeding against the state, and "the relief sought is to require of the state the performance of her contract" (italics ours) by the coercion of her officers to the performance of duties which she has, by a statute, forbidden. And, it is said, it may be admitted that such statute "is unconstitutional and therefore void;" nevertheless, the relief asked against the officers is " 'affirmative official action,' which the political body of which they are the mere servants has forbidden them to exercise," and it is not competent for a court to compel them to exercise, because of the immunity of the state from suit under the Constitution of the United States.

*To sustain these contentions an elaborate [255] argument is presented and a number of cases are cited. The most direct of the cases are Louisiana v. Jumel, 107 U. S. 711, 27 L. ed. 448, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 128; Hagood v. Southern, 117 U. S. 52, 29 L. ed. 805, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 608; Rolston v. Missouri Fund Comrs. (Rolston v. Crittenden) 120 U. S. 411, 30 L. ed. 728, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 599; Re Ayers, 123 U. S. 443, 31 L. ed. 216, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 164; Pennoyer v. McConnaughy, 140 U. S. 1, 35 L. ed. 363, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 699. It would make this opinion too long to review these cases. Nor is it necessary. It is enough to say that they do not sustain the contentions of plaintiffs in error.

TERRITORY OF HAWAII.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 255–257.)

Public lands—Hawaiian grant—fishery rights.—The grantees of land under a patent from the King of Hawaii, following an award of the Land Commission, are entitled to a fishery right in the adjoining sea which they and their predecessors in title had enjoyed from time immemorial, although the fishery is not described in the royal patent, and title thereto was not established before the Land Commission.

Argued and submitted December 13, 1905. Decided January 8, 1906.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the Territory of Hawaii to review a judgment affirming a judgment of the Circuit Court of the First Judicial Circuit in that territory, in favor of defendant in a proceeding to establish a fishery right. Reversed.

See same case below, 14 Haw. 465.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Sidney M. Ballou argued the cause, and, with Messrs. Benjamin L. Marx and J. J. Darlington, filed a brief for plaintiffs in error.

Messrs. Emil C. Peters and Fred W. Milverton submitted the cause for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Holmes delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a proceeding to establish the plaintiffs' rights to a several fishery of the kind described in Damon v. Hawaii, 194 U. S. 154, 48 L. ed. 916, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 617, and comes here under the same circumstances as that case did. The fishery in question is a sea fishery within the reef in Waialae Iki, island of Oahu, and is claimed by metes and bounds in the complaint. The plaintiffs are owners of the adjacent land under a royal patent following upon an award of the Land Commission, and the only difference between this case and the former one is that in this, the fishery is not described in the royal patent, and that, apart from the question of prescription, upon which we shall say nothing, the plaintiffs have to rely upon the statutes alone. They offered evidence at the trial that, before the action of the King in 1839, those under whom the plaintiffs claim title had enjoyed, from time immemorial, rights similar to those set out in the statutes, and also that they had been in continuous, exclusive, and notorious possession of the konohiki right for sixty years. They offered, in short, to prove that their predecessor in title was within the statutes, and therefore owned the fishery, it not being disputed that if he did, the plaintiffs own it now. The judge rejected the evidence, and entered judgment for the defendant, and, on exceptions, this judgment and that in Damon v. Hawaii were sustained at the same time, in one opinion, by the supreme court. 14 Haw. 465.

We deem it unnecessary to repeat the ground of our intimation in the former case, that the statutes there referred to created vested rights. We simply repeat that, in our opinion, such was their effect. The fact that they neither identified the specific grantees nor established the boundaries is immaterial when their purport as a grant or confirmation is decided. It is enough that they afforded the means of identification, and that presumably the boundaries can be fixed by reference to existing *facts [257] or the application of principles which have been laid down in cases of more or less similar kind.

The omission of the plaintiffs' predecessor in title to establish his right to the fishery before the Land Commission does not prejudice their case. See Kenoa v. Meek, 6 Haw. 63. That commission was established to determine the title to lands as against the Hawaiian government. In practice it treated the fisheries as not within its jurisdiction, and it would seem to have been right in its view. See Akeni v. Wong Ka Mau, 5 Haw. 91.

1. Mortgage—what property covered—easement necessary to building subsequently erected.—The fact that there was no building upon the property when a deed of trust was executed conveying the described property "with all and singular the improvements, ways, easements, rights, privileges, and appurtenances to the same belonging or in anywise appertaining" does not prevent an easement on the adjacent property of the grantor, made necessary to the use and enjoyment of an apartment house built flush upon the line of the property described, from passing under the deed, where it was within the knowledge and purpose of the parties that a building should be constructed which would be the principal security for a loan.

2. Mortgage—transfer of equity of redemption—rights of purchasers.—Purchasers of the equity of redemption from the grantor in a deed of trust, with knowledge that such deed covered the described property "with all and singular the improvements, ways, easements, rights, privileges, and appurtenances to the same belonging or in anywise appertaining," and that the grantor had so erected a building thereon that an easement upon adjacent property owned by him was necessary to its use and enjoyment, and that he had attempted to obtain this easement by release from another deed of trust covering such adjacent property,—have no better standing than their grantor to claim that such easement did not pass under the deed.

3. Mortgage—foreclosure—sale in entirety.—A sale in entirety of two parcels of land covered by separate trust deeds should not be ordered unless the interests of the holders of the equity of redemption and of the encumbrancers require it.

4. Appeal—finality of judgment.—A decree of the court of appeals of the District of Columbia, directing that two parcels of land separately covered by trust deeds be sold as an entirety or in parts, in the discretion of the trustees, is not final for the purpose of an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States.

TWO APPEALS from the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia to review a decree affirming a decree of the Supreme Court of the District in a suit over the respective rights of the parties in property covered by certain trust deeds. Modified by holding that an easement necessary to the use and enjoyment of a building erected after one of the deeds was executed passed under such deed, and by directing that the property be sold in parcels, and as so modified affirmed. APPEAL from the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia to review a decree entered on a prior appeal in the same suit, directing a sale of the property as an entirety or in parts, in the discretion of the trustees. Dismissed for lack of finality.

Statement by Mr. Justice Day:

These are appeals from a decree of the court of appeals of the District of Columbia, affirming a decree of the supreme court of the District. The bill in the original case was filed by Grayson and others against Wood, Talbott, Duke, and others, for the appointment of a receiver for certain property situated in Washington, known as the Victoria flats; also praying an injunction to restrain the sale of the property by the trustees of the first mortgage; to have an adjudication of the right of an easement alleged to be appurtenant to the property, and for the sale of the Victoria flats and certain property adjacent thereto, for the marshaling of encumbrances, and for general relief. The facts necessary to an adjudication of the case, as we view it, being principally those found in the court of appeals, are as follows: Mrs. Alice S. Hill was the owner of lots 1 and 2 in block 45 of Hill's subdivision, University park, city of Washington. A diagram of these lots is herewith given:

NOTE.—As to what judgments or decrees are final for purposes of review—see notes to Brush Electric Light Co. v. Electric Improv. Co. 2 C. C. A. 379; Central Trust Co. v. Madden, 17 C. C. A. 238; Prescott & A. C. R. Co. v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 28 C. C. A. 482; Gibbons v. Ogden, 5 L. ed. U. S. 302; and Schlosser v. Hemphill, 49 L. ed. U. S. 1001.

These lots fronted 150 feet (75 feet each) on Fourteenth street, and 190 feet on Welling place (now Douglas street). On January 13, 1897, Mrs. Hill conveyed these lots to Nicholas T. Haller. Haller intended to erect an apartment house, which was subsequently placed thereon, and became known as the Victoria flats. To enable him to build this structure, Haller negotiated a loan of $75,000, and, on January 22, 1897, executed a deed of trust of that date to B. H. Warner and Louis D. Wine, as trustees, hereinafter called the Warner trust, describing in the deed the north 120 feet of the two lots, and running westwardly to the depth of 124 feet, as shown on the plat. At the same time Haller executed a deed of trust to McReynolds and Meriweather, as trustees, hereinafter known as the McReynolds trust, upon the remaining portion of said lots 1 and 2, to secure his notes to the amount of $12,315. There were no improvements on the lots 1 and 2 at the time of making these deeds of trust. Thereafter Haller erected the apartment house on the portions of lots 1 and 2 described in the deed of trust to Warner. In the erection of the building Haller had become indebted to mechanics and materialmen in the sum of $30,087.65, and in the further sum of $10,350 for borrowed money. To avoid mechanics' liens on the property, and to secure the borrowed money, a second deed of trust was placed on the property by the same description contained in the Warner deed, Grayson and Heald being the trustees [260] named therein, hereinafter *known as the Grayson trust, and bears date December 20, 1897. These deeds of trust were duly recorded. When the Grayson trust was executed and delivered, the building had been erected by Haller, the mortgagor. The building contained, upon the south and west sides, in connection with which an easement is said to arise, a large number of doors, windows, and porches, the porches encroaching over the line of the property deeded in the McReynolds trust 4 feet and 9 inches; and it is averred in the bill, and not denied in the answers, that the areaways encroach 5 feet. There are thirty-six windows in the west wall, nineteen in the south wall, twenty-two doors in the west wall, five doors in the south wall, four cellar windows each in the west and south walls. It was stipulated in the case when it went back for final decree in the supreme court as follows:

"The areaways on the west, and south sides mentioned by the witness, William J. McClure, consist of excavations from the surface of the ground downwards, projecting into the cement walk, and protected by wooden platforms, on grade with and forming part of the said walk, and provided with interstices or openings admitting light to the windows below.

"On the south side of the building there is one doorway or entrance, and on the west side, four doorways or entrances opening out upon the said cement walk, and not otherwise accessible from the exterior of said building.

"On the said west wall, projecting out upon the said cement walk, there are three garbage chutes for collection of garbage from the building, and two openings into the cellar, through which the coal supply of the building is received, the said garbage chutes and coal cellars being accessible from the exterior only by means of the said cement walk."

In both deeds of trust, in addition to the conveyance of the parcels of ground described, there is the following language:

"Together with all and singular the improvements, ways, easements, rights, privileges, and appurtenances to the same belonging, or in any wise appertaining, and all the estate, *right, title, interest, and [261] claim, either at law or in equity, or otherwise, however, of the parties of the first part, of, in, to, or out of the said land and premises, to have and to hold the said land, premises, and appurtenances unto and to the only use of the parties of the second part, the survivor of them, his heirs and assigns."

A default having been made in the payment of interest due upon the notes secured by the deeds of trust, it was arranged that Warner and Wine were to collect the rents from the building, and afterwards Woods collected the rents of the building for a while. There is considerable testimony in the record tending to show an alleged combination on the part of Wood and Talbot, who had acquired the interest of Haller, to scale down the second, or Grayson and Heald, trust, and to prevent the property being sold advantageously, all of which we deem unnecessary to consider in determining the rights of the parties, and shall not undertake to state the details concerning the same. It appears that Haller originally intended to place the building so as to leave ample space on the west and south, between the building and the lines of the lot as covered by the trust deeds, but being notified that a space of 40 feet must be left on the east of the property and 20 feet on the north side, because of restrictions in the title of the property, the building was placed practically on the lines of the premises on the west and south, as described in the deeds of trust. The porches and areaways thus necessarily encroached on the adjoining property, as hereinbefore stated. In the view we take of the case, it is important to state how Wood and Talbot acquired their interest in the property. In March, 1898, Wood obtained from Haller, in exchange for an equity of Wood's in another property, an undivided one-half interest in the flats property, and Haller conveyed the premises as described in the deed of trust to Warner, together with a 10-foot strip of ground on the south and west sides of the building (see plat), the deed being made for the same by Haller to one Duke, who executed a declaration (dated April 9, [262] 1898) that he held the *property in trust for Haller and Wood, one half each. About the same time an arrangement was undertaken to be made by Haller, with the knowledge of Wood, by the terms of which, upon the payment of $4,000 upon the McReynold's trust, the 10-foot strip would be released therefrom, and $4,000 was borrowed from a bank upon the security of $4,000 of the McReynold's notes, which loan, not having been paid, the release has not been obtained. On the first of April, 1899, Talbot purchased Haller's remaining one-half interest in the Victoria flats property, and also one half interest in that covered by the McReynold's trust, and Wood purchased Haller's remaining one-half interest in the McReynold's equity. The purchase price paid by Talbot was $3,100, and by Wood, for the remaining one-half interest in the McReynold's equity, $250. Thus Wood and Talbot became the owners of the equities of redemption in both lots.

The supreme court gave the Warner trust a lien upon the 10-foot strip as part of the mortgage premises, a second lien to the Grayson trust, and ordered the property sold as an entirety, at the option of the trustees appointed to sell.

When the case was in the court of appeals, upon appeal from the original decree of sale, that court modified the decree below in so far as it gave the Warner trust any lien upon the 10-foot strip on the south and west sides, and ordered a decree in favor of the Grayson trust upon this strip as an easement, and that the property be sold as an entirety or in parts, according to the discretion of the trustees ordered to sell. 22 App. D. C. 432. When the case went back to the supreme court the modified decree of sale was entered, from which an appeal was taken to the court of appeals, which affirmed the decree of the supreme court (24 App. D. C. 55), and these appeals were sued out to this court.

Messrs. John Ridout and Charles F. Carusi argued the cause and filed a brief for Wood and Talbott:

In the United States the English doctrine of implied easements of light and air is repudiated.

Mr. B. W. Parker argued the cause, and, with Mr. R. Golden Donaldson, filed a brief for Warner and Wine, trustees:

Mr. J. J. Darlington argued the cause, and, with Mr. Jesse E. Potbury, filed a brief for Grayson, trustee:

Where the owner of both a quasi-dominant and a quasi-servient tenement conveys the former, retaining the latter, all such continuous and apparent quasi-easements as are reasonably necessary to the enjoyment of the property pass to the grantee, giving rise to an easement by implied grant.

Manogue v. Bryant, 15 App. D. C. 245; Janes v. Jenkins, 34 Md. 1, 6 Am. Rep. 300; Frizzell v. Murphy, 19 App. D. C. 440.

In Shepherd v. Pepper, 133 U. S. 626, 33 L. ed. 706, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 438, the mortgagor was not the owner of the additional ground at the time of the mortgage, though his improvement encroached upon it. Later he gave a third trust to secure his promissory note to C, after he had acquired the quasi-servient tenement, so that, in fact, C's mortgage was the only encumbrance of record upon the additional ground. The court held that C took subject to the prior mortgages, not only upon the ground that, in the preliminary negotiation, C was informed that the loan would be secured by a second mortgage, but upon the wholly distinct and independent ground that the prior mortgages described the premises "together with all the improvements, ways, easements, rights, privileges, and appurtenances to the same belonging or in anywise appertaining, and all the estate, right, title, interest, and claim whatsoever, whether at law or in equity, of the said parties of the first part, of, in, to, or out of the said piece or parcel of land and premises."

It is true that in Shepherd v. Pepper, supra, Mrs. Gray was only a mortgagee, and not the grantee in fee of sublot A; but it cannot be contended that a grantee who obtains his deed not merely with constructive, but with actual, knowledge, full and complete in all respects, of the exact situation, and who takes it upon the avowed "process of reasoning" that, in his hands, the premises will not be subject to the legal and moral obligations of his grantor, stands upon a better footing than a mortgagee, or can claim to be considered an innocent purchaser without notice.

Upon the principle of construction that, where a man grants a thing, he grants it with everything necessary to its enjoyment, a grant by the owner of a tenement will pass to the grantee all those continuous and apparent quasi-easements which are necessary to the reasonable enjoyment of the property granted, and which are, at the time of the grant, used by the owner of the entirety for the benefit of the part granted, these being regarded as easements appurtenant to the land granted.

14 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 1166.

In order that such an easement may pass by implication, it must be annexed to the estate granted, must be reasonably necessary for the beneficial enjoyment of the same, and must be in open, apparent, and continuous use at the time of the grant (14 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 1168; Dunklee v. Wilton R. Co. 24 N. H. 489), all of which conditions concur in the case at bar.

Supp. 992),—have all been held to be subjects of implied easements.

Nor, according to the weight of authority, is a strict or indispensable necessity the condition of such implication; it is sufficient if the necessity be such as to render the easement necessary for the convenient and comfortable enjoyment of the property, and as it existed before the severance was made.

In Ingals v. Plamondon, supra, reasonable necessity is held to be the proper rule; in Cihak v. Klekr, supra, that the easements shall be highly convenient and beneficial; in Mitchell v. Seipel, 53 Md. 264, 36 Am. Rep. 404, and in Eliason v. Grove, 85 Md. 226, 36 Atl. 844, that it shall be reasonably necessary; in John Hancock Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Patterson, 103 Ind. 582, 53 Am. Rep. 550, 2 N. Light and air are, under proper circumstances, proper subjects of implied easements.

Rep. 629; Holloway v. Southmayd, 139 N. Y. 390, 34 N. E. 1047, 1052.

Mr. Justice Day, after making the foregoing statement, delivered the opinion of the court:

These appeals raise practically three questions:

1st. Was the Warner trust entitled to an easement, and, if so, to what extent, in the lands on the south and west of the flats building?

2d. Was the Grayson trust entitled to a like easement in the same premises? and,

3d. Was the property properly authorized to be sold as an entirety, in the discretion of the trustees?

As to the first proposition, the supreme court was of opinion that the Warner trust was entitled to 10 feet on the south and west sides of the property. The court of appeals was of the opinion that, as the lots were not built upon at the time when the deed of trust was executed, and it was not then known that an easement would be necessary to the enjoyment of the property as constructed, the Warner trust took only the conveyances of the land by metes and bounds, without an easement, which that court held arose from the manner in which the building and its appurtenances were subsequently constructed and used.

The record discloses that the loan secured by the Warner trust was made for the purpose of erecting a hotel or apartment building. It is established that the first purpose of the proprietor was to construct the building so as to leave an adjacent space and way for its accommodation and use, between *its outer walls and the lot lands [268] adjacent on the west and south. This purpose was changed upon notification that restrictions in the title of the property required the building to be set back from the streets. The building was thereupon constructed by the mortgagor in the manner shown. The deed of trust was a mortgage security, and Haller continued to be the owner of the property to the full extent of the lots. The building was constructed in such wise that the use of some of the adjacent property, even independent of an easement for light and air, was absolutely necessary to the use and enjoyment of the building as constructed. It did not need the expert testimony which was introduced in the case to establish the fact that if another structure should be erected, practically even with the wall of the building, it would prevent access to, and greatly impair the use of, the south and west sides thereof. It would require the closing of the areaways, the shutting of the windows and doors, and must necessarily greatly depreciate the value of the property. The Warner trust contained the language (above quoted), conveying the described premises, with all and singular the improvements, ways, easements, rights, privileges, and appurtenances to the same belonging or in anywise appertaining, etc., to have and to hold, to the second party, their heirs and assigns. It is true that there was no building upon the property at the time when this deed of trust was executed, but it is equally true that it was within the knowledge and purpose of the parties that a building should be constructed, which would be the principal security for the money loaned. And no one disputes that, when Haller constructed the building upon the property, it became immediately subject to the mortgage. He was the owner of the adjacent premises, and when he abandoned the design to leave sufficient space about the building for its proper use and enjoyment, and erected it in such manner, and so close to and overlapping upon other parts of his own property, as to require the use of an easement therein in order to occupy the building, and permit the enjoyment and use of it as [269] constructed, we *see no reason why the express language of the conveyance above quoted would not carry with the building thus constructed the improvements, ways, appurtenances, rights, and privileges necessary to the enjoyment of the same. The principle upon which subsequent buildings and fixtures annexed to the realty become a part thereof for the benefit of the mortgagee is thus stated in Butler v. Page, 7 Met. 40, 39 Am. Dec. 757:

"All buildings erected and fixtures placed on mortgaged premises, by the mortgagor, must be regarded as permanently annexed to the freehold. They go to enhance the value of the estate, and will therefore inure to the benefit of the mortgagee, so far as they increase his security for his debt; and to the same extent they enhance the value of the equity of redemption, and thereby inure to the benefit of the mortgagor. Winslow v. Merchants Ins. Co. 4 Met. 306, 38 Am. Dec. 368. There is no necessity to adopt any liberal rule in regard to fixtures, to enable a mortgagor to remove what he has erected at his own expense; because he has the full benefit of all such improvements when he regains the estate by redemption, which he may do, simply by payment of his actual debt. The general rule of the common law, therefore, that what is fixed to the freehold becomes part of the realty, and passes with it, has its full effect in regard to things erected on the land by an owner who subsequently mortgages the land, and also in regard to things erected by the mortgagor after the mortgage."

To the same effect is Graeme v. Cullen, 23 Gratt. 266. Had Haller not owned the surrounding premises, but acquired the adjacent 10-foot strip with a view of remedying the fault which he had committed in putting the building flush upon the line, and constructed his building so as to make the easement necessary to its use, we think there could be no question that the easement thus acquired would inure to the benefit of the mortgagee. Such is the principle stated in Hankey v. Clark, 110 Mass. 262. In that case, tenants in common owned two adjoining tracts of land on a river, the lower one *subject to a mortgage. [270] They sold the upper tract, reserving to themselves, their heirs and assigns, the right to draw water from a reservoir on the upper for the use of the lower (mortgaged) tract. The equity of redemption of one of them in the lower tract was sold and vested in A, who also acquired title in that tract through mesne conveyances under a foreclosure of the mortgages. The court held that A was vested with the title to draw water from the reservoir under the reservation. The court said: "Incorporeal rights of this description, acquired by the mortgagor subsequent to the date of the mortgage, for the permanent improvement of the estate, and annexed by the terms of the conveyance to the realty, may be considered as passing to the mortgagee by the foreclosure, to be exercised by him at his election. .There is no reason why incorporeal rights annexed to the realty should not inure to the benefit of the mortgage security in the same manner as improvements in the nature of fixtures inure. Winslow v. Merchants Ins. Co. 4 Met. 306, 310, 38 Am. Dec. 368. Until foreclosure the mortgage is deemed a lien or charge, subject to which the estate may be conveyed, improved, and in other respects dealt with as the estate of the mortgagor." We cannot see that it makes any difference in principle that the easement in the present case is annexed by the mortgagor by necessity, as the result of the manner in which he has improved the property. It is not contended that, as against the McReynolds trust, created at the same time with the Warner trust, and before the erection of the building, an easement was acquired in this strip, but we are now dealing with rights in the property as between Haller and the mortgagee; and we think the granting clause quoted above included not only the improvements, ways, and easements upon the property at the time, but such as became necessarily appurtenant thereto upon the adjacent property of the grantor, because of the structure which he has placed upon the premises, to the enjoyment of which these privileges and rights are essential. As to the extent of this easement, the conduct of the parties in undertaking to acquire 10 feet, for the obvious purpose of *this easement, the overhanging [271] porches, the encroaching areas, seem to us to make 10 feet a reasonable width, and no more than is properly necessary. The unloading of coal, the carrying away of garbage, and other necessary usages, could hardly be accomplished in a narrower space. In this view of the case we find it unnecessary to treat this as an easement exclusively for light and air, or to enter upon a discussion of the doctrine of easements by implication. Nor is it an answer to the effect of this annexation to the property of the easement and rights resulting from the manner of improving the premises conveyed to say that Haller, as the owner, could not create an easement for himself in his own land. The question here is, What is the effect of his conveyance, and what has he added to the realty in favor of his grantee in the mortgage? We think he annexed not only the building, but the rights and privileges in his adjacent land, essential to its enjoyment.

2. As to the Grayson trust. In addition to the discussion already had as to the right of the Warner trust to have an easement in this strip, it is admitted that when the Grayson trust was executed the building was up, the easement was in actual use, and, it is apparent, had become necessary to the building as constructed. The purpose of Haller to use this part of the property for the purposes stated is manifested in what he had done, and the subsequent purchasers of the equity took with full notice, not only of the language of the recorded deed of trust, but had actual notice of the condition of the property. We think this feature of the case comes clearly within the doctrine ruled in Shepherd v. Pepper, 133 U. S. 626, 650, 33 L. ed. 706, 715, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 438. It is important to note in this connection that counsel for the Grayson trust do not dispute the right of the Warner trust to have a lien upon the easement in the 10-foot strip, and states that he does not desire to be heard upon that subject. The persons contesting that right (and as well the right of Grayson) in this court are Wood and Talbot, the successors of Haller, and, upon the facts shown, standing in his shoes, and with full notice of the necessity of this right of way [272] or easement to the use of the *property, and Haller's attempt to obtain it by release from the McReynolds and Merriweather trust. It was subsequently specifically covered in the conveyance in trust for Haller and Wood to Duke, and it is admitted in the answer of Wood and Talbot that it was the original intent to so place the building as to give room about it; the rights of Wood and Talbot are no higher or better as against either Warner or Grayson than Haller's from the facts presented in this case.

Third. Was the decree right in ordering the sale of the property in its entirety, in the discretion of the trustees? Sales are thus ordered in entirety when the interests of the mortgagors and encumbrancers require it. Shepherd v. Pepper, 133 U. S. 626, 651, 33 L. ed. 706, 715, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 438, and the authorities there cited. In this case, counsel for the Grayson trust states in his brief that he does not insist upon such sale as an entirety, and, in the draft of a decree, as submitted by him, no such sale is provided for. In the view we have taken of this case, we cannot see that the first encumbrance, the Warner trust, requires such a sale to protect that interest. There is no dispute as to the lien of the McReynolds trust upon the property described in their deed; as against it no easement is claimed. We see no reason why, with adequate protection for the McReynolds trust, in a sum to be found sufficient in the court executing the decree, to be retained out of the purchase money of the flats property with an easement in the 10-foot strip, the flats may not be sold with the 10-foot strip as one piece, and the remainder of the property as another. Such a form of decree is suggested in the brief of the counsel for the Grayson trust, and no encumbrancer seems to object to it, and the holders of the equity of redemption insist upon a separate sale. We think it would be the fairer way to all concerned to order the sale of the property as herein indicated.

We therefore, upon the whole case, modify the decree of the court of appeals in respect to the Warner trust and the 10-foot strip, and as to the sale of the property as an entirety, as *hereinbefore stated. [273] In other respects the judgment of the Court of Appeals is affirmed.

This disposes of the appeals in Nos. 89 and 90, which were taken from the last and final decree in the court of appeals. The appeal in No. 439 was taken from the decree of the court of appeals remanding the case to the supreme court, which was not final, and it is therefore dismissed. The other appeals raise all the questions made in the case.

ATLANTIC COAST LINE RAILROAD COMPANY.

1. Suits against state—consent.—County

treasurers sought to be enjoined from collecting state taxes because of an asserted contract exemption from taxation were endowed with the power to submit the rights of the state to judicial determination by a provision of the statute under which the taxes were levied, that if the state is interested in the revenue involved in actions against county auditors and treasurers for performing or attempting to perform their duties, the state auditor shall be informed, who shall, in turn, notify the attorney general, "who shall defend said action for and on behalf of the state."

2. Judgment — res judicata — matters which might have been litigated.—All defenses then existing to the contract exemption from state taxation, asserted in a suit in a Federal circuit court to enjoin the collection of the tax, whether brought to the attention of the court, or waived, were foreclosed by the decree establishing such exemption.

3. Courts—state doctrine of res judicata as rule of decision in Federal courts.—A decree of a Federal circuit court in a suit involving rights protected by the Constitution of the United States must be given, in the Federal courts, the force and effect to which it is entitled under the principles of res judicata as settled by the Supreme Court of the United States, although they may differ from the doctrine announced by the courts of the state in which the circuit court was sitting.

4. Judgment—res judicata—taxes of other years.—A decree enjoining the collection of taxes because of a contract exemption from taxation is as controlling on future taxes as on the particular taxes to which the suit related.

5. Suits against state—enjoining proceedings in state courts.—Ancillary relief in a Federal circuit court by way of injunction, in aid of a decree in a suit over the validity of state taxation, in which jurisdiction as to the state and its officers had been acquired as the result of the voluntary action of the state in submitting its rights to judicial determination, is not forbidden either by U. S. Const., 11th Amend., as a suit against a state, or by U. S. Rev. Stat. § 720, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 581, forbidding the granting of the writ by any court of the United States, to stay proceedings in any state court, except in bankruptcy proceedings.

6. Injunction—remedy at law.—The existence of an adequate remedy at law cannot successfully be urged to defeat ancillary relief by way of injunction in aid of a decree enjoining the collection of state taxes, since that question was foreclosed by the original decree.

7. Injunction—against illegal taxation—necessity of tender.—The rule that tender of the valid portion of a tax is a condition precedent to relief by injunction against illegal taxation cannot be invoked to defeat injunctive relief in aid of a decree enjoining the collection of state taxes, where all questions concerning the part of the tax not covered by the original decree were eliminated from the controversy.

Argued December 1, 4, 1905. Decided January 15, 1906.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of South Carolina to review a decree granting injunctive relief in aid of a prior decree enjoining the collection of state taxes because of a contract exemption from taxation. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. W. F. Stevenson argued the cause, and, with Messrs. Stevenson & Matheson, filed a brief for appellants:

The case now made by appellants is on a new state of facts, not contested in Humphrey v. Pegues, 16 Wall. 244, 21 L. ed. 326, and hence, if the parties are the same, the questions in litigation are different, and, the causes of action being different, the former adjudication does not conclude them in the present case, in which they are proceeding to collect the taxes claimed, the causes of action being different from those taxes in litigation in the Pegues Case.

When the second action between the same parties is upon a different claim or demand, the judgment in the prior action operates as an estoppel only as to those matters in issue or points controverted upon the determination of which the finding or verdict was rendered. In all cases, therefore, where it is sought to apply the estoppel of a judgment rendered upon one cause of action to matters arising in a suit upon a different cause of action, the inquiry must always be as to the point or question actually litigated and determined in the original action, not what might have been thus litigated and determined. Only upon such matters is the judgment conclusive in another action.

A state can be bound only by a judgment rendered in a case where, by legislative authority, she submits to the jurisdiction; and no suit against an officer, and no submission by an executive officer of the sovereign's rights to a court, can result in a judgment binding on the state.

There is a plain and adequate remedy at law, there being the express provision that demand should be made, and, if the taxes were not paid, suit should be brought at law, which suit was brought, and to which suit the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company pleaded. Now, if the plea of former adjudication is good, it can be set up as a defense and fully availed of, and the court of equity cannot interfere.

Equity only interferes to prevent trespass on the property or interference with the operations of the party invoking its aid; and nothing of that kind was contemplated or possible here.

In Pennoyer v. McConnaughy, 140 U. S. 1, 35 L. ed. 363, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 699, the court, specifying the class of cases in which injunctions are granted against state officials, says such suit in a proper case, where the remedy at law is inadequate to prevent such wrong and injury, is not, within the meaning of the 11th Amendment, an action against the state.

In United States v. Rickert, 188 U. S. 432, 47 L. ed. 532, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 478, the court recognizes the rule that a plain and adequate legal remedy will prevent the resort to equity.

When the legal remedy is plain and adequate, no injunction will lie to prevent collection of taxes.

Indiana Mfg. Co. v. Koehne, 188 U. S. 681, 47 L. ed. 651, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 452; People's Nat. Bank v. Marye, 107 Fed. 570; Douglas Co. v. Stone, 110 Fed. 812; First Nat. Bank v. Covington, 103 Fed. 523.

It is admitted by the last decree that some of the taxes sued for are due; hence, no injunction can lie in the case, the part that is due not having been tendered.

To enjoin all the state's counsel from prosecuting her suit is to enjoin the state from so doing; and the court is without power to do so.

Messrs. Theodore G. Barker and P. A. Willcox argued the cause, and, with Mr. J. T. Barron, filed a brief for appellee:

The conclusive presumption of the law always and universally prevails in favor of the justness and legal correctness of a final decree of a court of competent jurisdiction, affirmed by the appellate forum, and acquiesced in for a time sufficient to give to its decision the force and sanctity of a rule of property.

A legal proceeding against persons who are using their official character as state officers in acting or attempting to act in the name of the state, by bringing a suit, under the pretended authority of an act of legislature, unconstitutional and void in its intent, cannot be held to be a suit against the state, in effect or in form. Such would be true if this were an original bill in equity, seeking to enjoin the parties so claiming to represent the state from bringing their suit in the state court. But it is not even such a case, and, on the contrary, is simply an application to the court, seeking the benefit of a decree already rendered, and asking the court to cause its own decree to be respected by executing the same, and is a proceeding auxiliary to such decree, and ancillary to the suit of Humphrey v. Pegues, 16 Wall. 244, 21 L. ed. 326, in which said decree was rendered.

A court of the United States is not prevented from enforcing its own judgments by the statute which forbids it to grant a writ of injunction to stay proceedings in a state court.

Dietzsch v. Huidekoper (Kern v. Huidekoper) supra.

Where a state submits itself, without reservation, to the jurisdiction of a court in a particular case, that jurisdiction may be used to give full effect to what the state, by its submission, allowed to be done; and if the law permits coercion of public officers to enforce any judgment that may be rendered, then such coercion may be employed for that purpose.

diction over the proceedings in a state court, yet the statute does not prevent it from releasing a defendant from process of a state court, violating its protection, or to prevent abuse of its privileges.

Mr. Justice White delivered the opinion of the court:

Before analyzing the facts particularly bearing upon the legal questions for decision, in order to a comprehension of those questions, we summarize, in their chronological order, matters which are undisputed concerning the origin and development of this controversy.

The legislature of South Carolina, in 1855, exempted the capital stock and property of the Northeastern Railroad Company from all taxation during its charter existence. In 1849 the Cheraw & Darlington Railroad Company was chartered by legislative act, and, by an amendment to the charter, adopted in 1863, the last-named company was endowed with all the powers, rights, and privileges granted by the charter of the Northeastern Railroad Company; it being besides provided that the charter should not be subject to the provisions of a general law, reserving the right to repeal, alter, and amend, except where otherwise specially provided.

Under the assumed authority of a law of South Carolina, providing for the assessment and taxation of property, passed in 1868 (14 S. C. Stat. pp. 27 to 69), the Cheraw & Darlington Railroad was assessed in the counties of Darlington and Chesterfield, through which the road ran. It became the duty of *the respective treasurers [278] of the counties named to collect the state and county taxes on the assessment thus made, and they proceeded so to do. Thereupon, in 1870, Thomas E. B. Pegues, a citizen of Mississippi, a stockholder of the Cheraw & Darlington Railroad, filed his bill in the circuit court of the United States for the district of South Carolina against the Cheraw & Darlington Railroad Company and the treasurers of Darlington and Chesterfield counties, seeking to enjoin the corporation from paying, and the county treasurers from collecting, the taxes referred to. The ground stated for the relief prayed was that the taxes in question impaired the obligation of the charter contract of exemption, and were, therefore, repugnant to the Constitution of the United States. Various provisions of a law of South Carolina, adopted in 1870, as an amendment to the act of 1868 under which the taxes were levied, restricting the right of the corporation to resist the collection of taxes, or to recover back an illegal tax, if paid, were alleged as justifying the interposition of a court of equity. An injunction pendente lite was allowed, restraining the collection of the disputed taxes. By its answer the corporation admitted the averments of the bill. A joint answer was filed for the two county treasurers, signed by "The Attorney General for the State of South Carolina, for defendants." This answer admitted the assessment, the steps taken to collect the taxes, and asserted their validity, and denied the existence of the alleged contract of exemption. It was averred that, if such an exemption ever existed, it was subject to the legislative power to repeal, alter, and amend, and such repeal was alleged to have been operated by constitutional and legislative provisions, which were referred to. Jurisdiction of the court in equity was challenged on the ground that there was an adequate remedy at law. A final decree passed in favor of the complainant, recognizing the alleged exemption, and perpetuating the injunction. An appeal was prosecuted to this court. The cause was decided at the December term, 1872. It was held that there was a contract of exemption, which would be impaired by enforcing the taxes *com- [279] plained of, and hence the decree below was affirmed. Humphrey v. Pegues, 16 Wall. 244, 21 L. ed. 326.

For at least twenty-five years following the decision in the Pegues Case no attempt was made to tax the property of the Cheraw & Darlington Railroad Company. In the year 1897 an act was passed, directing the attorney general to proceed to test the right of any railroad company to exemption, and, under this act, that official sued the Cheraw & Darlington Railroad Company to recover $134,000, the sum of taxes, penalties, and interest for a period of twenty years, on the alleged ground that the company had been mistakenly treated as having a contract of exemption. The supreme court of the state, however, without passing upon the question of exemption, decided that the right to recover did not obtain, because, in any event, an assessment against the railroad, as provided by law, was a prerequisite to the levy and collection of taxes.

From a statement made in the argument of counsel, it is to be deduced that during the year 1898 the capital stock and property of the Cheraw & Darlington Railroad Company was acquired by the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company of South Carolina, and, as the result of a charter granted to that company by the state of South Carolina, in 1898, it is conceded that the property formerly belonging to the Cheraw & Darlington Railroad Company became taxable, and that the state has, since that time, levied and collected the taxes due on the property. It is, moreover, conceded that the appellee on this record, the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company, a Virginia corporation, acquired, in 1900, the property of the Cheraw & Darlington Railroad Company, as the successor of the South Carolina corporation which bore the same name.

In the year 1900 an act was passed in South Carolina, providing for the assessment for taxation of railroad property "which has been off the tax books for the years in which they have been off the books, and to fix the time when such taxes shall become due, and for the collection thereof."
[280] The act *created a board to make the assessment to which it referred, limited the taxes to be imposed to ten years back, provided that the assessment made by the board should be put upon the rolls separately for each of the back years, and that there should be levied upon such assessment state and county taxes for the years to which the back assessment related. The act caused the taxes for which it provided to become a lien against the property upon which they might bear, and directed a certification of the taxes as assessed and levied to the respective county treasurers, and made it their duty to collect the same. To this end such treasurers were directed to make a demand for payment upon the company in whose name the assessment was made, or, if it was found that the property assessed was "in the control of another company, demand should be made of the company . . . in possession of the property." By the act, in addition, the attorney general was directed, if the back taxes assessed were not paid within sixty days after demand, to bring a suit in the name of the state, with the co-operation of such counsel as the counties might employ, to enforce the collection of the back taxes against the company in whose name they were assessed, or against the company found in possession of the property assessed.

A meeting of the board appointed by this act was called in May, 1900, by the secretary of state, for the purpose of assessing the property formerly belonging to the Cheraw & Darlington Railroad Company, and in the control and possession of the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad, for a period of ten years back from 1898, on the ground that, during such period, the property in question had not been taxed for state or county purposes. The Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company appeared and protested against the proposed assessment. In the protest it directed the attention of the board to the exemption act, to the injunction granted, and the decree rendered and affirmed by this court in the Pegues Case. The board overruled the protest and valued the property of the Cheraw & Darlington Railroad Company for a period of ten years back from 1898, *inclusive. The valuation [281] so made was certified to the officials of the counties of Chesterfield, Darlington, and Florence, respectively, these three counties embracing the territory included in the counties of Chesterfield and Darlington at the time the decree was rendered in the Pegues Case. The state and county taxes for the years covered by the assessments were placed upon the rolls, and the taxes were certified for collection to the county treasurers. These officers demanded payment of the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad, as the company in possession and control of the property taxed. The company refusing to pay, the attorney general of the state of South Carolina, and counsel associated with him, commenced, in the common pleas court in the respective counties, actions in the name of the state to enforce payment against the Cheraw & Darlington Railroad Company and the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company, as the corporation in possession of the property. Thereupon the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company, alleging itself to be a citizen of Virginia, commenced, in the circuit court of the United States for the district of South Carolina, the proceeding which is now before us against the attorney general of the state, the counsel associated with him in the suits above referred to, and the treasurers of Chesterfield, Darlington, and Florence counties. The petition which initiated the proceeding was filed as ancillary to the original Pegues Case, and was entitled and numbered as of that cause. It referred to the prior proceedings in the cause, including the perpetual injunction therein issued, and to the decree of this court which affirmed the same. It alleged the assessment of back taxes as above stated, the asserted lien resulting therefrom, the demand of payment, and the suits brought to enforce payment, and charged that each and all of the acts done concerning the said assessment of the back taxes, including the bringing of the actions in the state court, were in direct violation and disregard of the injunction previously issued. The prayer was that the petitioner, as successor in interest of Pegues, be protected in the rights and privileges adjudged in the [282] Pegues *Case, and be accorded the benefit of the injunction issued in that case, and to that end that the attorney general of the state and his associate counsel be enjoined from further prosecution of the actions commenced in the state courts in the name of the state, to enforce payment of the taxes, and that the respective county treasurers be enjoined from any further attempt to collect such taxes.

A preliminary injunction was granted, restraining the attorney general and his associate counsel from further prosecuting the actions brought in the state court, and also restraining the county treasurers from further proceeding to collect the taxes. In response to a rule to show cause why the preliminary injunction should not be made perpetual, the defendants answered, denying the right to the relief prayed upon grounds which, as far as now material, we shall hereafter state and consider. After hearing on petition and answers, accompanied by affidavits or admissions establishing the facts to be as we have previously stated them, a final decree was entered, perpetuating the preliminary injunction. Subsequently the court, reciting that its attention had been directed to the fact that its decree was interpreted as restraining the prosecution of suits for any tax which might have accrued from the 18th day of July, 1898, when the exemption had been surrendered, modified its decree so as to exclude from the operation of the injunction any act of the defendants looking to the collection, "by suit or otherwise, of any sum or sums of money which may be due or charged for taxes on said property of the Cheraw & Darlington Railroad Company after said 18th day of July, 1898, at which date it was admitted in argument the exemption established in Humphrey v. Pegues was surrendered." This appeal was then taken.

Although the errors assigned on the record are seventeen in number, in the argument at bar but six contentions were relied upon, and we shall therefore confine ourselves to their consideration.

All the propositions involved in the assignments will be disposed *of by determin- [283] ing first, whether all the defendants on this record, including the state, through its attorney general, were parties or privies to the decree in the Pegues Case; second, if they were, whether the decree in that case concluded against them the want of power to impose or collect the taxes in controversy; and, third, if it did so conclude them, whether the court below erred in granting the relief which it awarded.

First. We at once treat as undoubted the right of the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company to the benefits of the decree in the Pegues Case, since it is conceded in the argument at bar that that company, as the successor to the rights of Pegues, is entitled to the protection of the original decree rendered in his favor.

On the face of the record in the Pegues Case, the nominal defendants were the treasurers of the counties of Chesterfield and Darlington, in which counties the property of the railroad was situated. Those now holding the office of treasurer in each of the named counties are among the parties on this record, with the addition of the treasurer of Florence county, which county, as we have stated, consists of territory embraced in Chesterfield or Darlington county at the time of the entry of the Pegues decree. That, under these circumstances, the defendant treasurers, as the successors in office of the officials who were parties to the Pegues Case, are privies to that decree, is established. Prout v. Starr, 188 U. S. 537, 544, 47 L. ed. 584, 587, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 398.

In deciding whether the state and its attorney general were privies to the Pegues decree, some elementary propositions must be borne in mind.

a. In view of the prohibitions of the 11th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, a state, without its consent, may not be sued by an individual in a circuit court of the United States.

b. A suit against state officers to enjoin them from enforcing a tax alleged to be in violation of the Constitution of the United States is not a suit against a state, within the prohibition of the 11th Amendment. The doctrine announced in *many [284] previous cases on the subject was stated by Mr. Justice Harlan, delivering the opinion of the court in Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 466, 42 L. ed. 819, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 418, wherein, after holding that a suit against officers to prevent the doing of acts authorized by a state statute was not necessarily a suit against the state, or within the prohibitions of the 11th Amendment, it was said (pp. 518, 519, L. ed. p. 839, Sup. Ct. Rep. p. 423):

"It is the settled doctrine of this court that a suit against individuals, for the purpose of preventing them, as officers of a state, from enforcing an unconstitutional enactment, to the injury of the rights of the plaintiff, is not a suit against the state, within the meaning of that amendment."

And the subject was reviewed and restated in Prout v. Starr, 188 U. S. 537, 47 L. ed. 584, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 398.

c. Although a state may not be sued without its consent, such immunity is a privilege which may be waived; and hence, where a state voluntarily become a party to a cause, and submits its rights for judicial determination, it will be bound thereby, and cannot escape the result of its own voluntary act by invoking the prohibitions of the 11th Amendment. Clark v. Barnard, 108 U. S. 436, 447, 27 L. ed. 780, 784, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 878.

As, then, the state was not a party eo nomine in the Pegues Case and as, although the suit was against officers, it was not, for that reason alone, a suit against the state, it must follow that the ascertainment of whether the state was a party to that cause depends upon determining whether the taxing officers, who were the nominal defendants, were endowed by the state with the power, in a suit brought against them assailing the validity of taxes levied, to represent the state in the controversy so as to conclusively establish the rights of the state against the plaintiff if decree passed against him, and, on the other hand, to establish, as against the state, the rights of the plaintiff in that cause if decree passed in his favor. Thus the inquiry reduces itself to this: Did the state of South Carolina become, in substance and effect, a party to the Pegues Case? In other words, Did the state, through the authority which it had conferred upon the defendant [285] officers, voluntarily submit *to judicial determination the question raised in the Pegues Case concerning the alleged limitation of the taxing power of the state, arising from the contract on that subject which was asserted in that case?

As a prelude to the consideration of the question just stated, it is well to determine at once the interest which the state had in the controversy which was represented by the county treasurers, who were the nominal defendants in the Pegues Case. Coming to do so, it is plain that the controversy which that suit involved was one in which the state was directly interested, since the officers who were the nominal defendants were charged by the state law, not only with the duty of collecting the county, but also the state, taxes, the validity of which was assailed on grounds which challenged the power of the state to impose any tax upon the property of the corporation during the existence of its charter. The officers were, therefore, in a sense, state officers, charged with the performance of a duty imposed for the benefit of the state. And that those officers were considered as being pro hac vice state officers, for the purposes of the controversy which the Pegues Case involved, is shown by the statement of the case made by this court in delivering its opinion affirming the decree. Thus it was said (16 Wall. 245, 246):

"These different enactments above mentioned being in force, the state officers of counties in South Carolina, where the Cheraw & Darlington Railroad was situate, acting under the authority of the legislature of the state, imposed certain taxes on the stock and property of that company, and were proceeding to enforce payment of them, when one Pegues, a stockholder in Mississippi, filed a bill in the court below, praying an injunction to restrain the collection."

The question, then, is narrowed to this: Were the officers endowed with authority to stand in judgment for the state in suits brought against such officers, wherein the validity of the taxes was assailed?

The law of South Carolina under which the taxes were levied *was adopted in 1868. [286]
Now, by § 137 of that act (14 S. C. Stat. 65), the county auditors and county treasurers were authorized to employ counsel, and the counties were made liable for the fees of such counsel, as well as for any damages which might be awarded against such officials, resulting from a defense made by them of any action prosecuted against the officials "for performing or attempting to perform any duty enjoined upon them by this act, the result of which action will affect the interests of the county, if decided in favor of the plaintiff in such action." It follows from this provision that where a suit was brought against a county treasurer in respect to county taxes, that official was empowered to represent the county for the purpose of the defense of its interest, and a judgment rendered against such official was therefore made binding upon the county. It was further provided in the section that "if the state be interested in the revenue in said action, the county auditor shall immediately, upon the commencement of said action, inform the auditor of state of its commencement, of the alleged cause thereof, and the auditor of state shall submit the same to the attorney general, who shall defend said action for and on behalf of the state."

We see no escape from the conclusion that the provision last quoted, where suit was brought concerning state taxes, made a county treasurer, who was the state tax collector, an agent for the state, and empowered him, "for and on behalf of the state," to defend the suit, and required him, in order fully to protect the interests of the state, to be represented by the highest law officer of the state,—the attorney general. And the power which we think the section referred to conferred upon the county officers to represent the state in suits or actions is, moreover, persuasively indicated by a consideration of the act of 1870, amending in certain particulars the act of 1868. 14 S. C. Stat. 366. Substantially, that amendment, whilst forbidding the taxpayer from enjoining the collection of taxes, created a remedial system, by which questions of asserted illegality were to be examined by the state auditor, and, [287] where that official *disallowed the claim of illegality, made it the duty of the taxpayer to pay, and, subject to certain conditions, gave a right of action to recover back the money paid. And by § 8, where such an action was brought, it was made "the duty of the attorney general of the state to defend any suit or proceedings against any tax collector or other officer who shall be sued for moneys collected, or property levied on, or sold on account of any tax, when the state auditor shall have ordered such collector to proceed in the collection of any such tax, . . . and any judgment against such collector or officer finally recovered shall be paid in the manner provided in § 81 of the act to provide for the assessment and taxation of the property aforesaid,"—that is, § 81 of the act of 1868. Now, by that section, where a judgment passed against a county official concerning state taxes which had been paid, the state was, in effect, made liable for the amount of the judgment. Thus, in such a case, as in cases provided for in § 137 of the act of 1868, the state, through its officials, was made the real defendant.

If there were doubt—which we think there is not—as to the construction which we give to the act of 1868, that doubt is entirely dispelled by a consideration of the contemporaneous interpretation given to the act by the officials charged with its execution, by the view which this court took as to the real party in interest on the record in the Pegues Case, and by the action as well as nonaction which followed the decision of that case by the state government in all its departments through a long period of years.

The answer in the Pegues Case, which denied the existence of the alleged contract of exemption, and asserted the existing and continuing power of the state to tax, was signed, for the defendants, by the attorney general of South Carolina, who also, in his official capacity, verified such pleading. The word "defendants" cannot be construed as implying any other than the county officers empowered to represent the state, without imputing to the attorney general a failure to discharge the *duty [288] directly imposed upon him by the state. This must result from the command of the statute, that he should defend the suit, the state revenue being concerned, not merely for the county officers, but "for and on behalf of the state,"—a command which would have been wholly disregarded if the appearance of the attorney general be treated as having been made solely for the purpose of representing the defendants as individuals. And subsequent events show that the highest law officer of the state, when he filed the answer for the defendants in the Pegues Case, intended that answer to be what the statute caused it to be,—that is, an answer for the defendants, standing upon the record, for and in behalf of the state, in defense of the right of the state to collect the taxes. When the appeal was prosecuted from the final decree, perpetually enjoining the officials who were named as the defendants (and, as we have seen, their successors in office) from any attempt in the future to collect a tax upon the property of the Cheraw & Darlington Railroad Company, such appeal was prayed by the same counsel who had signed the answer as attorney general of the state, and who, upon the expiration of his term of office, was retained by his successor in office and the governor of the state (as shown by an official report made to the legislature of the state) to prosecute the appeal, and "to appear in behalf of the state." And when the appeal was heard in this court a printed argument was signed, not only by the counsel thus retained on behalf of the state by the governor and the attorney general, but also by the then incumbent of the office of attorney general of the state. That this court, in deciding the appeal in the Pegues Case, considered that the state was the real party appellant, is shown by the opinion, where it was said (p. 247, L. ed. p. 326):

"The state contends that the privileges thus granted were limited to those conferred upon the Northeastern by its original charter or act of incorporation, passed in 1851."

When, to all these conclusive considerations, there is added the fact that we have not been referred to any legislative action [289] *repudiating the conduct of the governor and the attorney general in the defense of the Pegues suit for and on behalf of the state, and when, besides, we take into account the failure of the state government, in all its departments, for more than twenty-five years following the decision of the Pegues Case, to assert any right to tax in conflict with the contract exemption which the Pegues decree sustained, the binding efficacy of the decree in that case upon the state of South Carolina seems to us beyond the reach of serious controversy. Indeed, we are not left to conjecture that the inaction of the state was the result of what was deemed to be the conclusive effect on the state of the Pegues decree, since it is shown that in one or two instances after that decree was rendered, where preliminary steps were taken by the taxing officials of the state to impose taxes on the property of the railroad, such efforts were at once abandoned in consequence of the advice of attorneys general of the state that the decree in the Pegues Case was conclusive, and the property could not be taxed.

Concluding, as we do from the terms of the act of 1868, that the officers who were named as defendants in the Pegues Case were, for the purpose of that litigation, the agents voluntarily appointed by the state to defend its rights and submit them to judicial determination, we content ourselves with saying that it is unnecessary to review the case of State v. Corbin, 16 S. C. 533, and other decisions of the supreme court of South Carolina, pressed upon our attention, since those cases did not involve the statute of 1868 or statutes of like import. And, moreover, we must not be understood as holding that other provisions of the law of South Carolina, relied upon in argument, would be inadequate to bind the state by the action of its attorney general, if the provisions of the act of 1868 did not exist. Into that consideration we have not entered.

Second. The state of South Carolina and its attorney general, and his associate counsel, as the agents of the state, being, therefore, privies to and bound by the decree in the Pegues Case, we must determine [290] what was concluded by that decree. *That the issue in the case was the existence of a charter exemption from taxation in favor of the Cheraw & Darlington Railroad Company, and the consequent want of power of the state to tax the property of the railroad during the continuance of the exemption, is obvious. And that the decree rendered in the cause established the exemption embraced in the issues is also obvious. This being true, it unquestionably follows that the decree established as to the parties and their privies the very question in issue in this proceeding. Escape from this inevitable result is sought to be accomplished by several propositions, all of which we think are unsound.

a. The complaint in the Pegues Case, it is said, mistakenly averred that the Cheraw & Darlington Railroad had not been built at the time the amendment of the charter was made which gave the exemption relied upon, and as this, it is asserted, was not traversed by the answer filed in the case by the attorney general, it was consequently erroneously assumed to be true in fact, and the decree, it is argued, was based upon such assumption. From this the contention is that if the truth had been established, a different decree would have been rendered, because no consideration for the grant of exemption would then have appeared. But, even granting the premise, the deduction is unsound. To admit it would destroy the effect of the thing adjudged, resulting from the decree in the Pegues Case, since all defenses then existing to the asserted right of exemption, whether brought to the attention of the court or waived, were foreclosed by the decree. United States v. California & O. Land Co. 192 U. S. 355, 48 L. ed. 476, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 266; Fayerweather v. Ritch, 195 U. S. 276, 300, 49 L. ed. 193, 210, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 58, et seq., and cases cited. And although it be conceded for the sake of argument that the doctrine of res judicata, as announced in rulings of the supreme court of South Carolina, lend support to the contention made, our duty is to give to the decree of the circuit court of the United States in the Pegues Case the force and effect to which it is entitled under the principles of res judicata as settled by this court, especially in view of the fact that the controversy in the Pegues Case involved *rights protected by [291] the Constitution of the United States. Deposit Bank v. Frankfort, 191 U. S. 499, 48 L. ed. 276, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 154.

b. It is urged that as the taxes, the collection of which the court enjoined, were not for the same years as were the taxes with which the Pegues Case was concerned, the Pegues decree was, therefore, not res judicata, because it related to a different cause of action. This rests upon the assumption that a decree enjoining the collection of a tax for one year can never be the thing adjudged as to the right to collect taxes of a subsequent year. But the proposition entirely disregards the fact that the decree in the Pegues Case, enjoining the collection of the taxes in controversy in that case, was rested upon the ground that there was a contract protected from impairment by the Constitution of the United States which was as controlling on future taxes as it was upon the particular taxes to which the Pegues suit related. The contention, therefore, simply asserts that a contract right of exemption was beyond the pale of judicial protection, because rights under such contract could never be sanctioned by final judicial action. Besides, the proposition is not open to controversy. New Orleans v. Citizens' Bank, 167 U. S. 371, 42 L. ed. 202, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 905; Deposit Bank v. Frankfort, 191 U. S. 499, 48 L. ed. 276, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 154.

Third. It is insisted that the court below had no power to restrain the attorney general of South Carolina and the counsel associated with him from prosecuting, in the state courts, actions authorized by the laws of the state, and hence that the court erred in awarding an injunction against said officers. Support for the proposition is rested upon the terms of the 11th Amendment and the provisions of § 720 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 581), forbidding the granting of a writ by any court of the United States to stay proceedings in any court of a state, except in cases where such injunction may be authorized by any law relating to proceedings in bankruptcy. The soundness of the doctrine relied upon is undoubted. Re Ayers, 123 U. S. 443, 31 L. ed. 216, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 164; Fitts v. McGhee, 172 U. S. 516, 43 L. ed. 535, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 269. The difficulty is that the doctrine is inapplicable to this case. Section 720 of the Revised Statutes was originally adopted in [292] 1793, *whilst the 11th Amendment was in process of formation in Congress for submission to the states, and long, therefore, before the ratification of that amendment. The restrictions embodied in the section were, therefore, but a partial accomplishment of the more comprehensive result effectuated by the prohibitions of the 11th Amendment. Both the statute and the amendment relate to the power of courts of the United States to deal, against the will and consent of a state, with controversies between it and individuals. None of the prohibitions, therefore, of the amendment or of the statute relate to the power of a Federal court to administer relief in causes where jurisdiction as to a state and its officers has been acquired as a result of the voluntary action of the state in submitting its rights to judicial determination. To confound the two classes of cases is but to overlook the distinction which exists between the power of a court to deal with a subject over which it has jurisdiction, and its want of authority to entertain a controversy as to which jurisdiction is not possessed. From this it follows that, as in the Pegues Case, the court had acquired jurisdiction, with the assent of the state of South Carolina, to determine as to it the controversy presented in that case, the right of the court to administer relief—to make its decree effective—cannot be measured by constitutional or statutory provisions relating to original proceedings where jurisdiction over the controversy did not obtain. In other words, the proposition relied upon is disposed of by the conclusion which we have previously expressed concerning the persons who were parties and privies to the decree rendered in the Pegues Case. Indeed, the proposition that the 11th Amendment, or § 720 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 581), control a court of the United States in administering relief, although the court was acting in a matter ancillary to a decree rendered in a cause over which it had jurisdiction, is not open for discussion. Dietzsch v. Huidekoper (Kern v. Huidekoper) 103 U. S. 494, 26 L. ed. 497; Prout v. Starr, 188 U. S. 537, 47 L. ed. 584, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 398; Julian v. Central Trust Co. 193 U. S. 93, 112, 48 L. ed. 629, 639, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 399.

And this reasoning disposes of the con-
[293] tention that the court *below erred in enforcing its prior decree because there was adequate remedy at law, by interposing a defense in the state courts to the actions brought by the attorney general. That question was foreclosed by the decree in the Pegues Case. So also does the reasoning dispose of the assertion that, because a part of the tax for the year 1898 may have been due, therefore tender should have been made before invoking the power of the court to protect its jurisdiction and enforce the prior decree. The amendment of the decree made by the court eliminated from the controversy all question concerning the portion of the tax not covered by the decree in the Pegues Case. Having acquired by that decree a right which the petitioner was entitled to enforce, whatever might have been the rule of tender as applied to other cases, that rule could not rightly be invoked to deprive the court below, as a court of equity, of the power to protect the petitioner in the enjoyment of rights previously secured under a decree of the court.

Affirmed.

C. T. CALDWELL.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 293–297.)

Habeas corpus—jurisdiction of Federal courts.—The Federal courts have no jurisdiction to release, by habeas corpus, a person held in the custody of the state authorities to answer for a contempt in refusing to appear and testify before a legislative investigating committee, either because such a committee cannot sit in vacation, or because the subject for investigation is excluded from the jurisdiction of the legislature by the provision of the state Constitution for the separation of legislative, executive, and judicial powers, since no question under the Federal Constitution or laws is involved.

Submitted January 8, 1906. Decided January 22, 1906.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of West Virginia to review an order discharging, on habeas corpus, a person held in the custody of the state authorities to answer for a contempt in refusing to appear and testify before a legislative investigating committee. Reversed and remanded, with directions to quash the writ and dismiss the petition.

See same case below, 138 Fed. 487.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Lawrence Maxwell, Jr., and William E. Chilton submitted the cause for appellant:

The Federal courts have no authority to discharge a person held for contempt by a committee of the legislature of a state, acting in pursuance of a law of the state and a resolution passed by a branch of the legislature, on the ground that such law and resolution are repugnant to the Constitution of the state.

The committee was acting under a resolution duly passed by the house of delegates, and in pursuance of a law of the state, giving power to committees of either house, authorized to sit during recess, to enforce obedience to summonses issued by them; and if they did not have the power which they assumed to exercise, it was because the resolution or law or both were repugnant to the Constitution of the state, and not because they were in conflict with the Constitution or any law or treaty of the United States.

Mr. C. T. Caldwell, in propria persona, submitted the cause for appellee. Messrs. J. G. McClure, Reese Blizzard, and Caldwell & Watson were on his brief:

"Due process of law" undoubtedly means in the due course of legal proceeding according to those rules and forms which have been established for the protection of private rights.

In cases where the right of appeal seems inadequate by reason of its delay, the court may hold the person entitled to habeas corpus as a means of speedy determination of the question.

Ex parte Kieffer, 40 Fed. 399.

In general, the writ may be issued by Federal courts in every case where a party is restrained of his liberty without due process of law in the territorial jurisdiction of such court.

There is no question as to the jurisdiction of the Federal court in proceedings involving the life, liberty, and property of the aggrieved citizen.

State v. Sponaugle, 45 W. Va. 424, 43 L.R.A. 727, 32 S. E. 283.

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from a final order of the circuit court in habeas corpus, discharging Charles T. Caldwell, a citizen of West Virginia, from custody, taken on the ground that the circuit court was without jurisdiction, as a court of the United States, to issue the writ or discharge the petitioner,—the question of jurisdiction being certified. The case was heard on the petition, the return, and the exhibits attached. It appeared therefrom, in brief, that at a regular biennial session *of the legislature [296] of West Virginia, the house of delegates passed a resolution instructing the speaker of the house to appoint a committee of three members "to investigate fully and thoroughly" certain charges and matters set forth therein. The committee was instructed by the resolution to meet as soon as practicable and select one of its members chairman; was given leave to sit after the adjournment of the session; and was empowered "to compel the attendance of witnesses, and to send for persons and papers, to appoint a sergeant at arms, necessary stenographers and clerks, and to employ such counsel as may be necessary to conduct said investigation."

The committee organized, and summoned Charles T. Caldwell to appear before them "to testify, and the truth to speak, of and concerning the matters and things in said resolution to be inquired of." He refused to appear, and was taken into custody by W. H. Carfer, sheriff of Wood county, West Virginia, in pursuance of an order of attachment issued by the committee to bring him before them to answer for his contempt for failing to attend and testify. This writ was issued and Caldwell was discharged. 138 Fed. 487.

The jurisdiction of courts of the United States to issue writs of habeas corpus is limited to cases of persons alleged to be restrained of their liberty in violation of the Constitution or of some law or treaty of the United States, and cases arising under the law of nations. Re Burrus, 136 U. S. 586, 591, 34 L. ed. 500, 502, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 850; Andrews v. Swartz, 156 U. S. 272, 275, 39 L. ed. 422, 423, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 389; Storti v. Massachusetts, 183 U. S. 138, 142, 46 L. ed. 120, 124, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 72.

And it did not appear in this case that petitioner was restrained in violation of the Constitution or any law or treaty of the United States.

The circuit court held that the house of delegates had no power, under the Constitution of West Virginia, to appoint a committee for the purpose of investigating the matters set forth in the resolution, and to clothe it with power to sit and compel the attendance of witnesses in vacation, but took jurisdiction, nevertheless, on [297] the ground that the condition was *so "extraordinary" as to "warrant the intervention of the first court, state or Federal, applied to." This view ignored the settled law that a circuit court of the United States has no jurisdiction to issue the writ to release a citizen from imprisonment by another citizen of the same state, merely because the imprisonment is wrongful. The committee was acting under a resolution of the house of delegates, and in pursuance of a law of the state, giving power to committees of either house, authorized to sit during recess, to enforce obedience to summonses issued by them; and if they did not have the power they assumed to exercise, it was because the resolution or law, or both, was or were repugnant to the state Constitution, and the courts of the state are the appropriate tribunals for the vindication of the state Constitution and laws.

The circuit court was of opinion that the subject which the committee was appointed to investigate was not within the jurisdiction of the legislature, as defined by article 5 of the Constitution of West Virginia, declaring that "the legislative, executive, and judicial departments shall be separate and distinct, so that neither shall exercise the powers properly belonging to either of the others." But that objection does not "present any question under the due process of law clause of the 14th Amendment." Dreyer v. Illinois, 187 U. S. 71, 83, 47 L. ed. 79, 85, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 28; Reetz v. Michigan, 188 U. S. 505, 47 L. ed. 563, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 390.

Viewed in any aspect, we perceive no ground on which Caldwell's case can be considered as arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States.

Final order reversed and cause remanded with a direction to quash the writ and dismiss the petition.

1. Appeal—distinction between appeal and writ of error.—Writ of error, and not appeal, is the proper method of obtaining a review in the Supreme Court of the United States of a judgment of the Oklahoma supreme court, affirming a judgment of the trial court, in an action on a contract, tried by the court without a jury.

delivered under the agreement is to be returned,—is not an option to purchase, but one to return; and, if not exercised at the time named, the sale is complete, and the promise to pay the purchase price becomes absolute.

Argued and submitted December 12, 1905. Decided January 15, 1906.

APPEAL from, and in error to, the Supreme Court of the Territory of Oklahoma, to review a judgment affirming a judgment of the District Court of Logan County, in that territory, in favor of plaintiff in an action to recover the purchase price named in an option contract, which was tried by the court without a jury. Appeal dismissed. Judgment affirmed on writ of error.

See same case below, 14 Okla. 296, 78 Pac. 170.

Statement by Mr. Justice Brewer:

On May 28, 1900, at Guthrie, Oklahoma territory, the parties to this action entered into the following contract:

"Memorandum of agreement made and entered into this 28th day of May, 1900, to wit, as follows: J. T. Nelson agrees on his part to turn over 25 per cent of the capital stock of the following coal companies located in the Creek Nation, to wit: Sapulpa, Choctaw, Catoosa, Wewoka, Red Fork, Neyaka, Concharty, Tulsa, Car Creek, and Broken Arrow Mining Companies, to the following persons: U. C. Guss, W. H. Gray, F. H. Greer, and J. W. McNeal. The consideration of the delivery under which the above-listed stock and other stock as hereinafter described is as follows: This also includes the delivery of the records belonging to each of said above-named companies, the seals and other records that in any way belong to any of said companies. A payment of $500 is to be made in cash upon delivery of the above-named property, and additional property in the way [299] of stock hereinafter listed. The *$500 is to be considered an option on all said property until the 4th day of March, 1901. At that date the above-named parties are to pay to Nelson an additional sum of $4,500.00 (four thousand, five hundred dollars), or in lieu thereof to turn back to said Nelson all the property delivered by him. In addition to the above-mentioned 25 per cent of the capital stock aforesaid, which the said J. T. Nelson represents he owns in his own right, he agrees to turn over and deliver enough more stock to make the aggregate sum of stock delivered by him under this contract as follows:"

(Here follows a list of companies and number of shares of stock in each.)

"The $500.00 above mentioned is to be earnest money, to be forfeited in case the balance of payment is not paid. Nelson also agrees to give U. C. Guss his proxy as director in each of the above-named companies until such time as it may be convenient for him to resign and Guss or someone else be elected to fill the vacancy."

On April 6, 1901, Nelson brought suit in the district court of Logan county, Oklahoma territory, to recover the additional sum named in the contract. After answer the case was tried by the court without a jury, and judgment rendered in his favor on February 20, 1903, for $4,500 and interest. This was affirmed by the supreme court of the territory (14 Okla. 296, 78 Pac. 170), and its judgment was brought here both by appeal and writ of error.

Mr. A. G. C. Bierer argued the cause, and, with Mr. Frank Dale, filed a brief for appellants and plaintiffs in error:

The fact of possession of the stock by the defendants, and the failure to return it, could not be held to be an election to keep, to purchase, and to pay for the stock under the optional contract.

Mr. W. R. Biddle submitted the cause for appellee and defendant in error. Messrs. Selwynn Douglas, George S. Green, and H. B. Martin were on his brief:

On failure of defendants to return the stock within the specified time, they were liable for the price.

Mr. W. P. Dillard also submitted the cause for appellee and defendant in error. Messrs. W. R. Biddle and George S. Green were on his brief.

Mr. Justice Brewer delivered the opinion of the court:

The appeal must be dismissed. Oklahoma City v. McMaster, 196 U. S. 529, 49 L. ed. 587, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 324.

Considering the writ of error, we remark that no rulings were made in respect to the admission or rejection of testimony presenting anything worthy of consideration. No special findings of fact were made by either the district or supreme court, the former finding generally the issues in favor of the plaintiff, and rendering judgment upon such general finding, and the latter merely discussing the right of recovery upon the pleadings and such general finding.

Plaintiffs in error contend that this is a mere option contract, and that no liability could attach to them except upon an election to purchase the property, which they never made, but, on the contrary, declined to make, and notified the plaintiff thereof by letter. They call attention to the clause providing that "the $500 is to be considered an option," refer to the fact that there is nothing in the contract in terms mentioning "sale" or "purchase." There is always danger in applying a generic term to a contract, and then subjecting it to the general rules controlling contracts of that nature, irrespective of its special stipulations. While an option is given by the contract, and the price paid for the option is named, yet it contains other clauses which are equally binding, and from which liability arises. Option contracts are not all alike. As said in Hunt v. Wyman, 100 Mass. 198, 200, quoted approvingly by this court in Sturm v. Boker, 150 U. S. 312, 329, 37 L. ed. 1093, 1100, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 99, 104:

"An option to purchase if he liked is essentially different from an option to return a purchase if he should not like. In one case, the title will not pass until the option is determined; in the other, the property passes at once, subject to the right to rescind and return."

[303] *In the contract before us, while an option running until the 4th of March, 1901, is given, for which $500 is to be paid, the stipulation for such option is followed by this: "At that date the above-named parties are to pay to Nelson an additional sum of $4,500 (four thousand, five hundred dollars), or, in lieu thereof, to turn back to said Nelson all the property delivered by him." Here is an absolute promise on the part of plaintiffs in error to pay an additional sum of $4,500 at a specified date, or, in lieu thereof, to turn back the property. They did not return the property. The amount to be paid and the time of payment are expressly named, and that stipulation in the contract is as significant and binding as any other. It shows that the option given is an option to return, and that, if it is not exercised at the time named, the sale is complete, and the promise to pay the balance of the purchase price becomes absolute. This construction of the contract is reinforced by the fact that not only was the stock to be delivered to the plaintiffs in error, but also Nelson agreed to give, and did give, his proxy as director in each of the companies, so that the possession of the stock and all the rights which attached to it passed to the plaintiffs in error, to be exercised by them subject to the right at any time before the 4th of March to return the property. Haskins v. Dern, 19 Utah, 89, 56 Pac. 953, is directly in point.

We see no error in the ruling of the Supreme Court of Oklahoma, and its judgment is affirmed.

Mr. Justice McKenna took no part in the decision of this case.

Argued December 13, 1905. Decided January 22, 1906.

IN ERROR to the Court of Civil Appeals for the Fourth Supreme Judicial District of the State of Texas to review a judgment affirming a judgment of the District Court of Bexar County, awarding a peremptory mandamus to compel a street railway company to issue half-fare tickets. Affirmed.

See same case below (Tex. Civ. App.) 81 S. W. 106.

Statement by Mr. Justice Brown:

This was a petition by Altgelt, suing by his next friend, originally filed in the district court of Bexar county, for a peremptory mandamus against the traction company, a Texas corporation operating a street railway system, commanding it to issue to the plaintiff twenty half-fare street car tickets upon the payment of 50 cents, the same being at the rate of 2½ cents per ticket.

Both parties relied upon the legal effect of certain legislation of the state of Texas hereafter set forth. The mandamus was granted by the district court, whose action was affirmed by the court of civil appeals. An application for a writ of error from the supreme court was denied.

Mr. Charles W. Ogden argued the cause and filed a brief for plaintiff in error:

The power to grant to street railways the property right and franchise to construct and operate a street railway within a city is withdrawn from the legislature by Tex. Const. 1876, art. 10, § 7, and conferred, if not by expressed words, then by necessary implication, upon the municipal authorities.

Houston v. Houston City Street R. Co. 83 Tex. 545, 29 Am. St. Rep. 679, 19 S. W. 127; Detroit v. Detroit Citizens' Street R. Co. 184 U. S. 369, 46 L. ed. 595, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 410; Taylor v. Dunn, 80 Tex. 659, 16 S. W. 732.

A franchise granted by municipal authorities in the exercise of a power conferred directly by the Constitution cannot be destroyed or impaired by the legislature because and for no other reason than that the same Constitution which vested this particular power in the municipal body reserved to the legislature the power to control the privileges granted by it or under its authority.

Detroit v. Detroit Citizens' Street R. Co. 184 U. S. 368, 46 L. ed. 592, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 410; City Water Co. v. State, 88 Tex. 600, 32 S. W. 1033.

The exclusive power conferred by § 7 of article 10 of the Constitution of Texas upon the city authorities to control the use of the streets of the city by street railway companies necessarily involves the right to enter into a contract with a street railway company, imposing upon it such burdens and obligations, and conferring upon it such rights and privileges, including the right to collect a stipulated fare, as the parties to the contract may agree upon.

Detroit v. Detroit Citizens' Street R. Co. supra.

No counsel for defendant in error.

*Mr. Justice Brown delivered the opin-[305] ion of the court:

This case depends upon the construction and validity of certain legislative acts of the state of Texas from 1874, the date of the original charter, to 1903, the date of the act complained of as an impairment of the traction company's contract.

The Constitution of 1869, in force at the time the original company was chartered, contained no limitation upon the power of the legislature to grant franchises in towns, cities, and other subdivisions of the state. The San Antonio Street Railway Company was incorporated in 1874 by special act, in which it was provided, § 8, that "all contracts made and entered into between the mayor and aldermen of the city of San Antonio and said company, or any privileges and rights granted . . . to said company, shall be in all respects legal and binding on the aforesaid contracting parties;" and by § 9, that the charter "shall remain in full force and effect for the period of fifty years."

By ordinance of the city council of October 5, 1875, privilege was granted to the San Antonio Street Railway Company to construct a first-class horse railway, during the term of its charter, upon the streets of said city, upon certain routes; but the ordinance did not fix the rate of fare to be charged for the transportation of persons over its projected lines.

By article 10, § 7, of the Constitution of Texas of 1876, it was provided that "no law shall be passed by the legislature granting the right to construct and operate a street railway within any city, town, or village, or upon any public highway, without first acquiring the consent of the local authorities having control of the street or highway proposed to be occupied by said railway."

Section 17 of article 1 of the Bill of Rights of the same Constitution provides that "no irrevocable or uncontrollable grant of special privileges or immunities shall be made; but all privileges and franchises [306] granted by the legislature, or *created under its authority, shall be subject to the control thereof."

On March 16, 1899, twenty-three years after the adoption of this Constitution, an ordinance of the city was passed, granting an extension of time to the San Antonio Street Railway, and the San Antonio Edison Company, and imposing certain limitations upon the exercise of their franchises, among which was that "said street railway companies shall charge 5 cents fare for one continuous ride over any one of their lines, with one transfer to or from either line to the other."

It was also provided, by § 11 of the same ordinance, that "the rights, privileges, and franchises, or either of them herein referred to and hereby extended, may be assigned by the grantee or grantees to any person or corporation, and the limitations of this ordinance shall apply to the assignee thereof."

On April 4, 1900, all the property of this company was sold under the decree of a state court to a trustee for the stockholders, subject to the payment of the debts of the company, and to the performance of all outstanding contract obligations, which were declared "a preference lien" against all the property sold in the hands of the purchaser. The conveyance expressly stipulated that "within the meaning of the words 'contract obligations' shall be understood any and all existing contracts of the said Antonio Street Railway Company for street railway service over its road, or any portion thereof, had with any person or persons, now binding on said street railway company."

On August 7, 1900, the common council of the city passed an ordinance reciting the sale of the property and privileges of the former corporations, the San Antonio and Edison Companies, to the traction company, and enacting that all the rights and privileges theretofore granted to the former companies, which were said to be "now defunct," with all the limitations, duties, contracts, and obligations imposed and required of the said San Antonio Street Railway Company, were *imposed upon the [307] traction company. This ordinance was accepted.

The legislation remained in this condition until April 10, 1903, when the legislature of the state passed a new act, the 2d section of which reads as follows:

"Sec. 2. All such persons or corporations owning or operating street railways shall sell or provide for the sale of tickets in lots of twenty, each good for one trip over the line or lines owned or operated by such person or corporation, at and for one half the regular fare or charge collected for the transportation of adult persons, to students not more than seventeen years of age, in actual attendance upon any academic public or private school, of grades not higher than the grades of the public high schools of this state, situated within or adjacent to the town or city in which such street railway is located. Such tickets are required to be sold only on the presentation by the student desiring to purchase the same, of the written certificate of the principal of the school upon which he is in attendance, showing that he is not more than seventeen years of age, is in regular attendance upon such school, and is within the grades hereinbefore provided. Such tickets are not required to be sold to such students, and shall not be used, except during the months of the year when such schools are in actual session, and such students shall be transported at half fare only upon the presentation of such tickets."

It is insisted by the plaintiff in error that, under article 10, § 7, of the state Constitution, above quoted, the power to grant to street railways the property rights and franchises to construct and operate a street railway within a city is withdrawn from the legislature, and conferred, if not by express words, then by necessary implication, upon the municipal authorities. We do not so read the section. It merely provides that no such law shall be passed by the legislature, granting the right to construct and operate a street railway, without first acquiring the consent of the local authorities; but we see nothing to prevent the legislature from chartering a [308]street railway, *provided such consent be acquired. Such we understand to be the ruling of the supreme court of that state in Taylor v. Dunn, 80 Tex. 659, 16 S. W. 732, and Houston v. Houston City Street R. Co. 83 Tex. 548, 29 Am. St. Rep. 679. 19 S. W. 127. But whether an act of the legislature be necessary to charter a street railway is not involved in this case, as we are cited only to the original charter of the San Antonio Street Railway Company of 1874; although it is clear that a new charter would be inoperative to authorize the construction of the road without the consent of the municipal authorities.

Assuming, but not deciding, that the ordinance of March 16, 1899, extending the franchise of the San Antonio Street Railway, and imposing certain limitations, constituted a contract pro tanto the question still remains whether the provision "that said street railway companies shall charge 5 cents fare for one continuous ride over any one of their lines, with one transfer to or from either line to the other," constituted a contract with respect to which no further legislation upon that subject could be enacted without impairing its obligation. Even if construed as a contract, it was still subject to the provision of the Constitution of 1876, which, in § 17 of the Bill of Rights, declared that no irrevocable or uncontrollable grant of special privileges or immunities should be made; but that all privileges granted by the legislature or created under its authority shall be subject to the control thereof.

An important consideration in this connection is that the alleged contract was made twenty-three years after the Constitution of 1876 was adopted, declaring that all privileges granted by the legislature shall be subject to its control. Clearly, it was not deprived of that control by the fact that the contract was not entered into by the legislature itself, but by a municipal corporation, since that is but an agency of the state, to which is delegated the power to regulate street railways and other municipal franchises. We have repeatedly held that where a railway was originally chartered before a new constitution took effect (and hence such charter was not limited *thereby), yet, if such road be sub- [309]sequently consolidated with other roads, or accepts new privileges, after a new constitution takes effect, all contracts, privileges, and franchises conferred after the adoption of such constitution are subject to its provisions. Shields v. Ohio, 95 U. S. 319, 24 L. ed 357; Maine C. R. Co. v. Maine, 96 U. S. 499, 24 L. ed. 836; Atlantic & G. R. Co. v. Georgia, 98 U. S. 359, 25 L. ed. 185; Keokuk & W. R. Co. v. Missouri, 152 U. S. 301, 38 L. ed. 450, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 592; Yazoo & M. Valley R. Co. v. Adams, 180 U. S. 1, 23, 45 L. ed. 395, 407, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 240.

In this case not only did the original San Antonio Street Railway Company become extinct by the foreclosure and sale of its property, but, under the ordinance of August 7, 1900, declaring the prior companies to be "now defunct," the traction company also became the owner of all the property, assets, rights, and privileges of another company, known as the San Antonio Edison Company, which thus became absorbed with the street railway company in the new corporation known as the traction company, which is admitted to have been incorporated since 1876, though the charter is not in the record. We are clearly of the opinion that, under these circumstances, it received its franchise under the Constitution of 1876, which forbade either the legislature or the municipal authorities to make any irrevocable contract.

It is true that in this ordinance it was provided that all rights and privileges previously granted to the street railway company and the Edison company were conferred unto the traction company, including all the limitations, contracts, and obligations; but this ordinance must be construed in connection with the Constitution of 1876, which made all such privileges and franchises subject to the control thereof. Such was the view taken by the court of civil appeals of Texas in this case, which expressly waived the question whether the provision of the former ordinance fixing a 5 cent fare constituted a contract or not, declaring that if it did, it was subject to further legislative control.

Under the Bill of Rights of that Constitution, the legislature could not reduce the fares to a confiscatory amount, or to an *amount which would render it unprofitable [310]to operate the road. There is no allegation of that kind in this bill, and no evidence that the reduction of the school tickets in question would seriously impair its revenues. Indeed, it was found in the opinion of the court below that it was not contended there, and that there was nothing in the evidence tending to show, that the rate of fare claimed by the appellee under the act of 1903 is not such as to leave to the company a sufficient income to pay for repairs and a fair income on its investment.

The judgment of the Court of Civil Appeals is affirmed.

Taxes—state taxation of Federal obligation.—United States Treasury checks, or orders issued for interest accrued upon registered bonds of the United States, where intended for immediate payment, may be taxed by a state, in the hands of the owner, without violating U. IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of California to review a judgment affirming a judgment of the Superior Court in and for the City and County of San Francisco, in that state, in favor of defendant in an action to recover certain taxes paid under protest upon United States Treasury checks or orders. Affirmed.

See same case below, 139 Cal. 205, 96 Am. St. Rep. 100, 72 Pac. 920.

Statement by Mr. Justice Brown:

This was an action by the plaintiff in error, begun in the state superior court, to recover certain taxes paid under protest upon two checks or orders for $120,000 and $1,875, respectively, signed by the Treasurer of the United States, and addressed to the Treasurer or an Assistant Treasurer of the United States, for interest accrued upon certain registered bonds of the United States, owned by the plaintiff. These checks were issued in compliance with Rev. Stat. § 3698, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 2479, which requires that "the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause to be paid, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, any interest falling due or accruing on any portion of the public debt authorized by law." These checks, [311] which were payable at the United States Treasury at San Francisco at any time within four months from their date, were not presented immediately for payment, but were withheld by the plaintiff until the first Monday in March, 1899, the day when the status of property, for the purpose of taxation, is determined. Plaintiff did not list these two checks for assessment; but the assessor, in making up his roll for the ensuing year, included them, and, after a fruitless effort to be relieved from the assessment, plaintiff paid the amount of the tax, and brought this suit to recover it back. There were claims for other taxes included in the action, upon which plaintiff was successful; but, in respect to the tax upon the two orders above mentioned, judgment went for the defendant, which was affirmed by the supreme court. 139 Cal. 205, 96 Am. St. Rep. 100, 72 Pac. 920.

Mr. T. C. Van Ness submitted the cause for plaintiff in error. Messrs. Tobin & Tobin were on the brief:

An unbroken line of cases has established the inherent nontaxability by the states of property held by the United States, and of bonds and obligations issued by the United States.

M'Culloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 316, 4 L. ed. 579; Howard Sav. Inst. v. Newark, 63 N. J. The obligations here in question being as clearly within the very terms of § 3701 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. Comp. Asso.* v. Connelly) supra, within the terms of the then-existing statute of exemption, are not the state courts in both instances equally powerless to determine the effect of municipal taxation upon the facility with which the object of their issue may be accomplished?

NOTE.—On the limitations of taxing power from the mutual independence of Federal and state governments—see note to Grether v. Wright, 23 C. C. A. 515.

Messrs. Percy V. Long and William I. Brobeck submitted the cause for defendant in error:

Exemption from taxation enjoyed by Federal agencies is not without its limitations. It is based upon the necessity present in the national government, as in all governments, of exercising freely and without interference the powers conferred upon it by the states. When that necessity is served, the reason for the exemption ceases, and the inherent and reserve power of the state to tax everything within its boundaries not so exempted is reasserted and may be re-employed.

Mr. Justice Brown delivered the opinion of the court:

This case involves the question whether the two checks or orders upon which the tax was imposed are exempt from state taxation under Rev. Stat. § 3701, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 2480, declaring that "all stocks, bonds, Treasury notes, and other obligations of the United States, shall be exempt from taxation by or under state or municipal or local authority." The basis of this exemption is the fact that a tax upon the obligations of the United States is virtually a tax upon the credit of the government, and upon its power to raise money for the purpose of carrying on its civil and military operations. The efficiency of the government service cannot be impaired by a taxation of the agencies which it employs for such service, and, as one of the most valuable and best known of these agencies is the borrowing of money, a tax which diminishes in the slightest degree the value of the obligations issued by the government for that purpose impairs pro tanto their market value.

The inability of the states to tax the official agencies of the Federal government, whether in the form of banks chartered under its authority, or of obligations issued by it as a means of providing a revenue, or for the payment of its debts, was applied in M'Culloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 316, 4 L. ed. 579, to a stamp tax upon notes of the United States bank; in Weston v. Charleston, 2 Pet. 449, 7 L. ed. 481, and in New York ex rel. Bank of Commerce v. Tax Comrs. 2 Black, 620, 17 L. ed. 451, to stock issued for loans made to the government of the United States; and in the Bank Tax Case (New York ex rel. Bank of Commonwealth v. Tax & A. Comrs.) 2 Wall. 200, 17 L. ed. 793, to a tax laid on banks on a valuation equal to the amount of their capital stock, when their property consisted of stocks of the Federal government; in The Banks v. New York (New York ex rel. Bank of N. Y. Nat. Bkg. Asso. v. Connelly) 7 Wall. 16, 19 L. ed. 57, to certificates of indebtedness of the United States, issued to the creditors of the government for sup- [314] plies furnished in carrying on the Civil War; in Bank of New York v. New York County (New York ex rel. Bank of New York v. New York County) 7 Wall. 26, 19 L. ed. 60, to notes of the United States intended to circulate as money; and in Van Brocklin v. Tennessee (Van Brocklin v. Anderson) 117 U. S. 151, 29 L. ed. 845, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 670, to land purchased by the United States, for the amount of a direct tax laid thereon.

The principle, however, upon which this exemption is claimed, does not apply to obligations such as checks and warrants, intended for immediate use, and designed merely to stand in the place of money until presented at the Treasury, and the money actually drawn thereon. In such case the tax is virtually a tax upon the money which may be drawn immediately upon presentation of the checks. As was said by Mr. Justice Miller in First Nat. Bank v. Kentucky, 9 Wall. 353, 362, 19 L. ed. 701, 703: "That limitation [upon the power to tax] is, that the agencies of the Federal government are only exempted from state legislation, so far as that legislation may interfere with, or impair, their efficiency in performing the functions by which they are designed to serve that government."

In Union P. R. Co. v. Peniston, 18 Wall.

5, 21 L. ed. 787, it was insisted by the plaintiff in error that the property of the Union Pacific Railroad Company was exempt from state taxation by virtue of the incorporation of the company by the United States, as a means for the performance of certain public duties of the government, enjoined and authorized by the Constitution. It was said, however, by Mr. Justice Strong, in delivering the opinion of the court, that no constitutional implications prohibited a state tax upon the property of an agent of the government merely because it is the property of such agent, but "that the agencies of the Federal government are uncontrollable by state legislation, so far as it may interfere with, or impair, their efficiency in performing the functions by which they are designed to serve that government. It is, therefore, manifest that exemption of Federal agencies from state taxation is dependent, not upon the nature of the agents, or upon the mode of their [315] constitution, or upon *the fact that they are agents, but upon the effect of the tax; that is, upon the question whether the tax does, in truth, deprive them of power to serve the government as they were intended to serve it, or does hinder the efficient exercise of their power. A tax upon their property has no such necessary effect. It leaves them free to discharge the duties they have undertaken to perform. A tax upon their operations is a direct obstruction to the exercise of Federal powers."

Had the government, in the absence of money for the immediate payment of interest upon its bonds, issued new obligations for the payment of this interest at a future day, it might well be claimed that these were not taxable, as the taxation of such notes would, to the extent of the tax, impair their value and negotiability in the hands of the holder. This was practically the case in The Banks v. New York (New York ex rel. Bank of N. Y. Nat. Bkg. Asso. v. Connelly) 7 Wall. 16, 19 L. ed. 57, where certificates were issued at a time when the government had no money to pay its obligations, and made use of its credit to obtain further time. But where checks are issued payable immediately, they merely stand in the place of coin, which may be immediately drawn thereon. As observed by the court below, the checks were, for all practical purposes, the money itself. People v. Stockton & V. R. Co. 45 Cal. 306, 313; Metropolitan Nat. Bank v. Sirret, 97 N. Y. 320, 325; Re Staten Island Rapid Transit R. Co. 38 Hun, 382, 101 N. Y. 636. A check may be given in evidence under the money counts. Wells v. Brigham, 6 Cush. 6, 52 Am. Dec. 750; Cruger v. Armstrong, 3 Johns. Cas. 5, 2 Am. Dec. 126.

While Congress has not amended Rev. Stat. § 3701, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 2480, upon which plaintiff relies in this case, it did, by act approved August 13, 1894 (28 Stat. at L. 278, chap. 281, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 2398), declare "that circulating notes of national banking associations and United States legal tender notes, and other notes and certificates of the United States, payable on demand, and circulating, or intended to circulate, as currency, . . . shall be subject to [state] taxation as money on hand or on deposit."

Although the checks in question were not intended to circulate *as money, and [316] therefore do not fall within the letter of the statute, the reasons that apply to that class of obligations we think apply with equal force to checks intended for immediate payment, though not intended to circulate as money. While the checks are obligations of the United States, and within the letter of § 3701, they are not within its spirit, and are proper subjects of taxation.

Had the plaintiff drawn the money immediately upon these checks, it would have become at once a part of the general property of the bank; and the fact that the money had been derived from the United States, and paid to the bank as interest on its obligations, would not have prevented its becoming part of the general property of the bank, and subject to state taxation.

Affirmed.

Constitutional law—equal protection of the laws—negroes as jurors.—A discrimination against negroes because of their race, in the selection of grand or petit jurors, forbidden by U. S. Const., 14th Amend., is not shown by verified written motions to quash respectively the indictment and the panel of petit jurors, charging such discrimination, where no evidence was either introduced or offered to establish the facts stated in the motions.

IN ERROR to the Court of Criminal Appeals of the State of Texas to review a judgment affirming a conviction of murder in the District Court of Tarrant County, in that state. Affirmed.

See same case below (Tex. Crim. App.) 83 S. W. 390; on rehearing, 83 S. W. 391.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Watson E. Coleman submitted the cause for plaintiff in error. Messrs. O. P. Easterwood and O. E. Smith were with him on the brief.

Mr. C. K. Bell submitted the cause for defendant in error. Messrs. Robert Vance Davidson and Claude Pollard were with him on the brief.

By an indictment returned in the district court of Tarrant county, Texas, the plaintiff in error was charged with the crime of murder. Having been duly arraigned and pleaded not guilty, the accused (who is a negro) moved to quash the indictment, on the ground, stated in writing under oath, that all persons of the African race had been excluded from the grand jury, because of their race, although about one fourth of the inhabitants of the county, competent under the law to act as grand jurors, were of that race. The facts upon which the motion was based were set out, and the accused, in the written motion, prayed that testimony be heard in support of its grounds. The state's attorney, in writing, denied such discrimination, and offered to prove that only about one hundred and fifty persons of the African race in the county, as compared with twelve thousand whites, were competent under the law to act as grand jurors.

The accused then moved in writing, verified by his oath, to quash the panel of petit jurors, upon the ground that from the panel had been excluded all persons of the African race, because of their race, although about one fourth of the persons in the county competent under the law to serve as jurors were of that race. The facts set out in that motion were also denied in writing by the state's attorney.

Both motions were overruled by the court, the accused excepting. There was a verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree, and the accused was sentenced to suffer death. The judgment of conviction was affirmed in the court of criminal appeals, the highest court of the state in which a decision of the case could be had. One of the assignments of error in that court was the overruling of the motion to quash the indictment; but no error was there assigned in respect of the overruling of the motion to quash the panel of petit jurors.

It is not contended that the Constitution or laws of Texas authorized any discrimination, on account of race merely, in the selection of grand or petit jurors. Nor is it contended that *the prescribed qualifications for [319] jurors were not appropriate in order to secure an impartial jury for the trial of an accused. Nevertheless, if, upon the hearing of the written motion to quash the indictment, the facts stated in the motion had been established by affirmative proof, or if the trial court had refused to admit evidence to prove them, we should not hesitate to reverse the judgment. For it is the settled doctrine of this court that "whenever, by any action of a state, whether through its legislature, through its courts, or through its executive or administrative officers, all persons of the African race are excluded solely because of their race or color, from serving as grand jurors in the criminal prosecution of a person of the African race, the equal protection of the laws is denied to him, contrary to the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States." Carter v. Texas, 177 U. S. 442, 447, 44 L. ed. 839, 841, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 687; Strauder v. West Virginia, 100 U. S. 303, 25 L. ed. 664; Neal v. Delaware, 103 U. S. 370, 397, 26 L. ed. 567, 574; Gibson v. Mississippi, 162 U. S. 565, 40 L. ed. 1075, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 904; Rogers v. Alabama, 192 U. S. 226, 231, 48 L. ed. 417, 419, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 257. So if, upon the hearing of the written motion to quash the panel of petit jurors, the facts stated in that motion had been proved, or if the opportunity to establish them by evidence had been denied to the accused, the judgment would be reversed.

But the record before us makes no such case. Although the accused in each of his written motions prayed the court to hear evidence thereon, it does not appear that he introduced any evidence whatever to prove discrimination against his race because of their color, or made any actual offer of evidence in support of either motion. The reasonable inference from the record is that he did not offer any evidence on the charge of discrimination, but was content to rely simply on his verified written motions, although the facts stated in them were controverted by the state. The trial court, it must be assumed from the record, had nothing before it, when deciding the motions to quash, except the written motions and the written answers thereto. In Smith v. Mississippi, 162 U. S. 592, 600, 601, 40 L. ed. 1082, 1085, 1086, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 900,—which was a prosecution of a negro for the crime of *murder, [320] it appeared that the accused, upon grounds stated in writing, and similar to those assigned in this case, moved to quash the indictment. He moved, also, upon similar grounds, in writing, to quash the panel of petit jurors. Each motion was overruled. This court said: "No evidence was offered in support of the motion by the accused to quash the indictment, unless the facts set out in the written motion to quash, verified 'to the best of his knowledge and belief,' can be regarded as evidence in support of the motion. We are of opinion that it could not properly be so regarded. . . . The facts stated in the written motion to quash, although that motion was verified by the affidavit of the accused, could not be used as evidence to establish those facts, except with the consent of the state prosecutor or by order of the trial court. No such consent was given. No such order was made. The grounds assigned for quashing the indictment should have been sustained by distinct evidence introduced, or offered to be introduced, by the accused. He could not, of right, insist that the facts stated in the motion to quash should be taken as true simply because his motion was verified by his affidavit. The motion to quash was, therefore, unsupported by any competent evidence; consequently, it cannot be held to have been erroneously denied." To the same effect were Tarrance v. Florida, 188 U. S. 519, 521, 47 L. ed. 572, 573, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 402, and Brownfield v. South Carolina, 189 U. S. 426, 428, 47 L. ed. 882, 883, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 513. The present case cannot be distinguished from the Smith Case; and we are unable to hold, upon this record, that it was error to overrule the motions to quash; for, as already stated, it does not appear that the facts stated in those motions were established by evidence, or that the accused, after filing his motions, made any separate offer to prove them by witnesses, or was denied the opportunity to make such proof.

A different conclusion in this case would mean that, in a criminal prosecution of a negro for crime, an allegation of discrimination against the African race because of their race could be established by simply proving that no one of that race was on the grand jury that returned the indictment, or [321] on the *petit jury that tried the accused; whereas, a mixed jury, some of which shall be of the same race with the accused, cannot be demanded, as of right, in any case; nor is a jury of that character guaranteed by the 14th Amendment. What an accused is entitled to demand, under the Constitution of the United States, is that, in organizing the grand jury as well as in the impaneling of the petit jury, there shall be no exclusion of his race, and no discrimination against them, because of their race or color. Virginia v. Rives (Ex parte Virginia) 100 U. S. 313, 323, 25 L. ed. 667, 671; Re Wood, (Wood v. Brush) 140 U. S. 278, 285, 35 L. ed. 505, 508, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 738. Whether such discrimination was practised in this case could have been manifested only by proof overcoming the denial on the part of the state of the facts set out in the written motions to quash. The absence of any such proof from the record in this case is fatal to the charge of the accused that his rights under the 14th Amendment were violated.

Judgment affirmed.

UNITED STATES. (No. 165.)

1. Public lands—bona fide purchaser—constructive notice.—A purchaser of the property of a lumber company is not charged with the knowledge of the wrongful character, as against the Federal government, of certain conveyances of standing timber, which might have been gained by a searching investigation of the books and papers turned over by the lumber company as evidence of its titles, where there were no circumstances disclosed which cast suspicion upon those titles.

2. Public lands—bona fide purchaser of timber lands—purchase after patent—relation.—A purchaser from the patentees for value, and without notice of any fraud on the part of the entrymen, is a bona fide purchaser within the meaning of the timber act of June 3, 1878 (20 Stat. at L. 89, chap. 151 U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1545), and, as such, is entitled to protection, although such purchaser may have acquired an interest in the lands under a contract for the standing timber before the patents issued; since, by the doctrine of relation, the patents, when issued, became operative as of the date of the entries.

3. Public lands—bona fide purchaser—relation.—The doctrine of relation operates to protect the bona fide purchaser of timber lands from the patentees against the consequences of the wrongful conduct of the entrymen.

4. Public lands—liability of purchaser of standing timber after avoidance of patent.—A bona fide purchaser of standing timber from the holders of receivers' final receipts for the purchase price of lands entered under the timber act of June 3, 1878 (20 Stat. at L. 89, chap. 151, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1545), cannot, upon avoidance for the fraud of the entrymen of the patents afterwards issued, be required to account to the Federal government for the timber which it has paid for and cut and removed in reliance upon its purchase.

CROSS APPEALS from the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit to review a decree of that court which, on appeal from a decree of the Circuit Court for the Western District of Arkansas dismissing a bill to cancel, for the fraud of the entrymen, certain patents for timber lands, some of which lands were still in the possession of the patentees and some of which had been conveyed to a bona fide purchaser, and to recover the value of the timber cut and removed therefrom, modified such decree by directing the cancelation of the patents for the lands still in the possession of the patentees, and affirmed the decree so far as it denied any relief against the bona fide purchaser. Affirmed.

Statement by Mr. Justice Brewer:

These are cross appeals from a decree of the circuit court of appeals for the eighth circuit, affirming in part and reversing in part a decree of the circuit court for the western district of Arkansas.

The bill was filed on April 5, 1902, by the United States against the Detroit Tim-[323] ber & Lumber Company, the Martin-*Alexander Lumber Company, and a number of individual defendants. The object of the bill was to set aside patents to 44 tracts of land, issued to the individual defendants, and all conveyances, contracts, and leases from them purporting to convey title to or a right to cut and remove timber from the lands, and also for an accounting of the timber cut and removed from the lands by the two companies, and judgment therefor.

The charge was that the lands were entered under the timber act of June 3, 1878 (20 Stat. at L. 89, chap. 151, U S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1545), and in fraud of its provisions, in that the purchase money was advanced by the Martin-Alexander Company under contracts with the entrymen that after the entries they should convey to it all the standing timber thereon. The Martin-Alexander Company denied that there were any such contracts, and the Detroit Company in addition pleaded that it was a bona fide purchaser from the former company. It appeared from the testimony that for some time prior to January 14, 1901, the Martin-Alexander Company owned and operated a sawmill plant in the vicinity of these lands; that most, if not all, of the entrymen were its employees; that it furnished all the money for the purchase prices of these lands, as well as for the expenses connected with the entries, and that after the entries the entrymen, with three exceptions, executed conveyances to it of all the standing timber. Fifty-eight and one half per cent of the stock of the Martin-Alexander Company belonged to E. B. Martin, while A. V. Alexander controlled the remainder, which was owned by himself, his wife, and J. O. Means.

On January 14, 1901, the Detroit Company purchased the entire property of the Martin-Alexander Company for $60,000 cash and an assumption of its obligations, amounting to $17,456.79. Prior to May 9, 1901, patents were issued for all the lands, thirteen having been issued before January 14, 1901. After the purchase from the Martin-Alexander Company the Detroit Company obtained deeds of the lands from the patentees of twenty-seven of the tracts.

*The circuit court found that the trans-[324] actions between the entrymen and the Martin-Alexander Company were not in conflict with the statute, that there were no agreements between them and it prior to the entries in respect to conveyances of the standing timber, and that there was only the mere expectation on the part of the company that it would be able to purchase the timber. Thereupon it dismissed the bill. 124 Fed. 393. The court of appeals, reviewing the testimony, held that there were contracts between the parties making the entries and the Martin-Alexander Company prior to the entries, and that therefore those entries were in fraud of the act, but it also found that the purchase by the Detroit Company was in good faith, and that therefore that company was entitled to protection in its purchase. It ordered the bill dismissed as to the 27 tracts for which patents had been issued and conveyances made to the Detroit Company. As to the seventeen which had not been conveyed, it ordered a decree canceling the patents, but dismissing the bill so far as respects any relief claimed against the Detroit Company. 67 C. C. A. 1, 131 Fed. 668.

Mr. Marsden C. Burch argued the cause, and, with Solicitor General Hoyt, filed a brief for the United States:

The case is the same in principle, indeed, it is the same in fact, as that of the United States v. Trinidad Coal & Coking Co. 137 U. S. 160, 34 L. ed. 640, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 57.

The case of Hawley v. Diller, 178 U. S. 476, 44 L. ed. 1157, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 986, clearly shows the error in this decree.

Clark knew that the company had no record title to the lands described. He states on the stand that the Martin Company had final receipts covering the timber tracts. Had he supposed the Martin Company held deeds to the land, he, of course, would have asked for them in place of the mere final receipts. He had no legal right to rely upon the bare statement of interested parties whose interest might prompt them to make false or misleading statements.

Price v. McDonald, 1 Md. 403, 54 Am. Dec. 657.

A purchaser may part with a valuable consideration, may have no notice of any opposing claim, and yet lack the good faith which is essential to render his position a protection and his defense available. The party claiming to be a bona fide purchaser must come into a court of equity with absolutely clean hands.

Passive good faith will not serve to excuse wilful ignorance.

A purchaser who is put upon inquiry does not discharge his duty by making inquiry of his vendor alone, but must exhaust all reasonable and available sources of information.

23 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 515.

Mr. Fred A. Maynard also argued the cause for the United States.

Mr. James F. Read argued the cause, and, with Messrs. Thomas C. McRae, U. M. Rose, and George B. Rose, filed a brief for the lumber companies:

There is nothing to indicate that the mill company preferred illegal to legal entries, and, since they could be made according to law or contrary to law, there is a wise and charitable presumption that legal entries were intended.

United States v. Budd, 144 U. S. 154, 163, 36 L. ed. 384, 387, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 575.

The entries were not made for the purpose of speculation.

Where an inference of notice is to affect an innocent purchaser, it must appear that the inquiry suggested, if fairly pursued, would lead to a discovery of the defect.

Simms v. Morse, 4 Hughes, 579, 2 Fed. 325.

It can hardly be supposed that a vendee is bound to inquire of the parties to a conveyance whether they are committing a fraud by suppressing an anterior deed, for it is evident that if fraud was intended, deception would be carried out by denial. Such inquiries are not resorted to in practice in business transactions.

Notes to Am. Lead. Cas. in Eq. (2 Hare & W.) pp. 66, 67; Miller v. Fraley, 23 Ark. 745; Ferguson v. May, 4 Ky. L. Rep. 989.

A concealed defect or secret equity arising from the conduct of those who originally owned the property, of which the purchaser had no notice, cannot be set up against him.

Danbury v. Robinson, 14 N. J. Eq. 213, 82 Am. Dec. 244.

To secure in equity all the rights of a bona fide and duly vigilant purchaser one is not required to make inquiry whether there is fraud or trust, where the title and possession give no indication that there is either.

Leach v. Ansbacher, 55 Pa. 85; Yardley v. Torr, 67 Fed. 857; Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cranch, 135, 3 L. ed. 177; Anderson v. Roberts, 18 Johns. 531, 9 Am. Dec. 235.

The omission of the party to make inquiry cannot be material when such inquiry would not have led to a knowledge of the fact with the notice of which it is sought to charge him. The question is whether the inquiry, if it had been made, would have afforded information on any fact material to his rights. If his conduct would have been the same whether he had or had not made inquiry, his omission cannot be a reason for charging him with notice.

21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 588.

A party may have notice of conflicting claims, and still, in the exercise of an honest judgment as to the rightful owner, buy property and pay for it, and be acting in good faith.

United States v. Southern P. R. Co. 184 U. S. 54, 46 L. ed. 428, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 285.

There is no testimony that the Detroit Timber & Lumber Company procured the lands for an inadequate consideration; but, had they done so in fact, there are authorities that hold that all that was necessary was that the consideration should be valuable.

23 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 488; Bullock v. Sadlier, 2 Ambl. 764; Dean v. Anderson, 34 N. J. Eq. 508; Wait, Fraud. Convey. § 369.

It does not matter in this case that the Detroit Timber & Lumber Company did not acquire the legal title at the time it paid the purchase price for these lands.

Pom. Eq. Jur. § 727; Adams, Eq. 161, 162; Dueber Watch Case Mfg. Co. v. Daugherty, 62 Ohio St. 589, 57 N. E. 455; Lea v. Polk County Copper Co. supra.

Even if the Detroit Timber & Lumber Company had never acquired the legal title, it might well be contended that, as they had a right to call for it, the government could not recover in this case. The Detroit Timber & Lumber Company in good faith paid the purchase money and were in possession of the property. The title of the government is only an equitable one.

23 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 486; St. Johnsbury v. Morrill, 55 Vt. 165.

Since the patents issued before the government sought to attack the entries, the bona fide purchaser from the entrymen is in the same position he would have occupied if the patents had issued before his purchase. If the patent issues before it is attacked, whether before or after sale by the patentee is immaterial.

United States v. Clark, 125 Fed. 774.

Mr. W. E. Hemingway also argued the cause for the lumber companies.

Mr. Justice Brewer delivered the opinion of the court:

The able and elaborate opinions of both the circuit court and the court of appeals relieve us from much labor. There are two questions of fact: First, whether the parties making the entries had, prior to acquiring title from the government, made any agreement with the Martin-Alexander Company for a conveyance of an interest in the properties, or were seeking to acquire title solely for their own benefit. Second, whether *the Detroit Company was a pur- [329] chaser in good faith from the Martin-Alexander Company. With reference to the first question, the circuit court was of the opinion that there were no agreements between the parties. The court of appeals was of a different opinion, and held that the entries were made in pursuance of such agreements. This is a case in equity, and while in such a case questions of fact are always open to consideration by an appellate court, great respect is paid to the conclusions of the trial court in respect to them. Certainly, if the circuit court and the court of appeals had agreed, we should be very loath to disturb their conclusion. Differing as they do in the present case, we have examined this question, and agree with the court of appeals. The entire management of these entries was in the hands of an agent of the Martin-Alexander Company. It furnished the moneys, both for the purchase prices and all expenses; and it is not easy to believe that it did all this on a mere expectation that, after the entries had been made, it could purchase the timber. It is a much more reasonable conclusion that it had an understanding with the parties making the entries respecting purchases and prices. It is quite likely that the entrymen were not conscious of wronging the government, and thought that if it received the full price demanded, that was enough. The testimony of one witness suggests at least that they may have been advised that there was no contract unless it was in writing, and that hence they could conscientiously take the oath required in connection with an entry. So, without casting any imputation of intentional perjury on those parties, we agree with the court of appeals that the testimony points strongly to the fact that the entries were in pursuance of an understanding or agreement with the Martin-Alexander Company that, as it was advancing all the money, the entrymen should convey to it the standing timber at a fixed price.

With reference to the second question of fact, the circuit court made no finding, having disposed of the case by its conclusion in respect to the first. The court of appeals found *that the Detroit Company was a [330] purchaser in good faith from the Martin-Alexander Company. Here, too, we have examined the testimony, and are satisfied that the conclusion of the court of appeals was correct. A brief statement of the salient facts may be not unimportant. The headquarters of the Detroit Company were in St. Louis, of the Martin-Alexander Company in southwest Arkansas. They dealt at arm's length. On December 20, 1900, Alexander, of the Martin-Alexander Company, applied to U. L. Clark, president of the Detroit Company, at St. Louis, to purchase Martin's interest in the Martin-Alexander Company. Clark declined, stating that the Detroit Company would make no purchase of a fractional interest in the property. Thereupon it was arranged that he should make an examination with a view to the purchase of the entire property. The Detroit Company's inspector was sent to Arkansas to examine the lands. Clark himself went down in the January following, and, after receiving the report of the inspector, terms of sale were, on January 14, agreed upon; $60,000 cash and the assumption of the Martin-Alexander Company's debts. The $60,000, by agreement between the stockholders of the Martin-Alexander Company, were divided, $34,850 to Martin, $24,850 to Mrs. Alexander, $150 to A. V. Alexander, and $150 to J. O. Means. Martin and Means were paid at once; the debts were also promptly paid. Alexander desired to take stock in the Detroit Lumber Company in lieu of the money coming to his wife and himself. Clark was not then authorized to make such arrangement, but subsequently the stock of the Detroit Lumber Company was increased and the Alexanders were paid in full in that stock. The entire property of the Martin-Alexander Company, included in which were the sawmill, tram and logging roads, these timber contracts and other like contracts, and also all stock on hand, was, at the time of the purchase,—January 14,—turned over to the Detroit Lumber Company, which thereafter continued the business. The Martin-Alexander Company had no deeds of the lands in controversy, [331] but simply contracts for the timber *thereon, and, in order to be relieved from the necessity of keeping accounts with respect to the different tracts, the Detroit Company proceeded to obtain deeds from twenty-seven of the patentees, paying on an average $25 apicce therefor, which was a fair price for the lands after the timber had been cut off. It had no knowledge or intimation that there was anything wrong in the titles until the last of September or the first of October, 1901,—more than four months after the government had issued its patents for all the lands,—when it received a notice to that effect from a government inspector.

Now we remark that there is no intimation in the testimony that the purchase price was not paid by the Detroit Company in cash and stock as agreed upon, no suggestion that the price was an unreasonable one. There was nothing strange or unnatural in the contract between the companies; on the contrary, it was one which might well be entered into by parties situated as these were. But it is contended by the government that if the Detroit Company had examined with care the books of the Martin-Alexander Company, and the papers which it turned over as evidences of its titles, it would have perceived that the timber contracts were made shortly after the issue of the final receiver's receipts, that the parties making the contracts were all or nearly all employees of the Martin-Alexander Company, to whom moneys had been advanced, and with each of whom an account was being kept; that it was its duty to critically examine these matters in order to be sure that the titles which it was acquiring were good. In their brief, counsel for the government say:

"We claim that the law as laid down in Hawley v. Diller, 178 U. S. 476, 44 L. ed. 1157, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 986, that one who takes title before the issuance of patent cannot claim to be a bona fide purchaser, made it the duty of the Detroit Company to make the most searching inquiry, at least as to all of the timber contracts except the thirteen for which patents to the land had issued."

We do not understand the law to be as stated, or that one who enters into an ordinary and reasonable contract for the *pur- [332] chase of property from another is bound to presume that the vendor is a wrongdoer, and that, therefore, he must make a searching inquiry as to the validity of his claim to the property. The rule of law in respect to purchases of land or timber is the same as that which obtains in other commercial transactions, and such a rule as is claimed by counsel would shake the foundations of commercial business. No one is bound to assume that the party with whom he deals is a wrongdoer, and if he presents property, the title to which is apparently valid, and there are no circumstances disclosed which cast suspicion upon the title, he may rightfully deal with him, and, paying full value for the same, acquire the rights of a purchaser in good faith. Jones v. Simpson, 116 U. S. 609–615, 29 L. ed. 742–744, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 538. He is not bound to make a searching examination of all the account books of the vendor nor to hunt for something to cast a suspicion upon the integrity of the title.

It is further said that the written contract of sale from the Martin-Alexander Company to the Detroit Company was not executed till March 1, 1901, and that on the 14th of January, 1901, Martin resigned his position as president of the Martin-Alexander Company, and Clark, the president of the Detroit Company, was elected president of the former company; that, as the chief executive of that company, he was charged with knowledge of all that the company knew, and that therefore, before the written contract was entered into, he and the Detroit Company had constructive notice of the wrongful character of these timber contracts. But that is a mere evasive technicality. The bill charges and the answer admits the sale on January 14, and the facts, as disclosed by the testimony, are that Martin desired to leave at once on receipt of his money, and return to his home in Illinois; that Clark was put in his place as president to enable the Martin-Alexander Company to close up its outstanding affairs. The real contract between the parties was entered into before Clark became president, and all that was afterwards done was simply to put in writing the terms of [333] the contract which had been *agreed upon. Equity looks at the substance, and not at the mere form in which a transaction takes place. The rule in respect to constructive notice was thus stated in Wilson v. Wall, 6 Wall. 83, 91, 18 L. ed. 727, 730:

"A chancellor will not be astute to charge a constructive trust upon one who has acted honestly and paid a full and fair consideration without notice or knowledge. On this point we need only refer to Sugden on Vendors, p. 622, where he says: 'In Ware v. Egmont, 4 De G. M. & G. 460, the Lord Chancellor Cranworth expressed his entire concurrence in what, on many occasions of late years, had fallen from judges of great eminence on the subject of constructive notice, namely, that it was highly inexpedient for courts of equity to extend the doctrine. When a person has not actual notice, he ought not to be treated as if he had notice, unless the circumstances are such as enable the court to say, not only that he might have acquired, but also that he ought to have acquired it, but for his gross negligence in the conduct of the business in question. The question, then, when it is sought to affect a purchaser with constructive notice, is not whether he had the means of obtaining, and might, by prudent caution, have obtained the knowledge in question, but whether not obtaining was an act of gross or culpable negligence.'"

And, again, in Townsend v. Little, 109 U. S. 504, 511, 27 L. ed. 1012, 1014, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 357:

"Constructive notice is defined to be in its nature no more than evidence of notice, the presumption of which is so violent that the court will not even allow of its being controverted. Plumb v. Fluitt, 2 Anstr. 432; Kennedy v. Green, 3 Myl. & K. 699. . . . As said by Strong, J., in Meehan v. Williams, 48 Pa. 238, what makes inquiry a duty is such a visible state of things as is inconsistent with a perfect right in him who proposes to sell. See also Holmes v. Stout, 4 N. J. Eq. 492; M'Mechan v. Griffing, 3 Pick. 149, 15 Am. Dec. 198; Hanrick v. Thompson, 9 Ala. 409."

In the light of these authorities we see nothing which casts any imputation on the conduct of the Detroit Company, or *that [334] tends to show that it was not a purchaser in absolute good faith.

Now, what is the law controlling under these circumstances? Much reliance is placed by the government on Hawley v. Diller, 178 U. S. 476, 44 L. ed. 1157, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 986, which, affirming prior cases, holds that an entryman under the timber act acquires only an equity, and that a purchaser from him cannot be regarded as a bona fide purchaser within the meaning of the act. But the Detroit Company purchased 27 tracts after the issue of the patents therefor. And in making these purchases it dealt not with the Martin-Alexander Company, but directly with the patentees. While the amounts paid were small, yet, as counsel for the government admit in their brief that "the land without the timber is of no value," there can be no suggestion of inadequacy of price. As, also, it had no knowledge or suspicion of wrong in the titles, it is, as to these tracts, strictly and technically, within the language of the act, a bona fide purchaser. If it be contended that, by virtue of the contracts for the sale of timber, it had acquired some interest in the lands prior to the issue of patents, it is sufficient to say that, by the doctrine of relation, the patents, when issued, became operative as of the dates of the entries. It is true that this doctrine is but a fiction of law, but it is a fiction resorted to whenever justice requires. It is that principle by which an act done at one time is considered to have been done at some antecedent time. It is a doctrine of frequent application, designed to promote justice. Thus, a sheriff's deed takes effect, not of its date, but of the time when the lien of the judgment attached. The ordinary railroad land grants have been grants in præsenti, and under them the title has been adjudged to pass, not at the completion of the road, but at the date of the grant. Leavenworth, L. & G. R. Co. v. United States, 92 U. S. 733, 23 L. ed. 634; St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. v. Phelps, 137 U. S. 528, 34 L. ed. 767, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 168; St. Paul & P. R. Co. v. Northern P. R. Co. 139 U. S. 1, 35 L. ed. 77, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 389; United States v. Southern P. R. Co. 146 U. S. 570, 36 L. ed. 1091, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 152. A patent from the United States operates to transfer the title, not merely from the date [335]of the *patent, but from the inception of the equitable right upon which it is based. Shepley v. Cowan, 91 U. S. 330, 23 L. ed. 424. Indeed, this is generally true in case of the merging of an equitable right into a legal title. Although the patents in this case were not issued until after the sales of the timber, yet, when issued, they became operative as of the date of the original entries. This doctrine has frequently been recognized by this and other courts. Landes v. Brant, 10 How. 348, 13 L. ed. 449; French v. Spencer, 21 How. 228, 16 L. ed. 97; Stark v. Starr, 6 Wall. 402, 18 L. ed. 925; Lynch v. Bernal, 9 Wall. 315, 19 L. ed. 714; Gibson v. Chouteau, 13 Wall. 92, 20 L. ed. 534; Simmons v. Wagner, 101 U. S. 260, 25 L. ed. 910; Jackson ex dem. De Forest v. Ramsay, 3 Cow. 75, 15 Am. Dec. 242; Welch v. Dutton, 79 Ill. 465; Ormiston v. Trumbo, 77 Mo. App. 310. In the first of these cases it was said (p. 372, L. ed. p. 459):

"To protect purchasers, the rule applies, 'that where there are divers acts concurrent to make a conveyance, estate, or other thing, the original act shall be preferred; and to this the other acts shall have relation,'—as stated in Viner's Abr. title Relation, 290. . . . Cruise on Real Property, vol. 5, pp. 510, 511, lays down the doctrine with great distinctness. He says: 'There is no rule better founded in law, reason, and convenience than this: that all the several parts and ceremonies necessary to complete a conveyance shall be taken together as one act, and operate from the substantial part by relation'. . . . Applying the doctrine of relation, and taking all the several parts and ceremonies necessary to complete the title together, 'as one act,' then the confirmation of 1811 and the patent of 1845 must be taken to relate to the first act,—that of filing the claim in 1805."

In Simmons v. Wagner, p. 261, L. ed. p. 911:

"Where the right to a patent has once become vested in a purchaser of public lands, it is equivalent, so far as the government is concerned, to a patent actually issued. The execution and delivery of the patent after the right to it has become complete are the [336]mere ministerial acts of *the officers charged with that duty. Barney v. Dolph, 97 U. S. 652, 24 L. ed. 1063."

See also United States v. Freyberg, 32 Fed. 195, a case in the circuit court for the eastern district of Wisconsin, in which it was held by Judge Dyer that an action brought by the government to recover for timber cut from land which had been entered as a homestead, but the full equitable title of which had not then passed to the entryman, either by the required occupation of the premises or by a commuting of the homestead to a pre-emption entry—an action maintainable at the time it was commenced—was defeated by the issue of the final receiver's receipt and the consequent perfection of a full equitable title.

Counsel for the government deny the application of this principle in the present case on the ground, first, that it gives vitality and validity to a wrongful acquisition of title from the government. They say that equity is never founded on a wrong, and that because the original entries were wrongful the doctrine of relation will not be applied. But this is a clear misunderstanding of the purpose and scope of the doctrine of relation. If the original entries were rightful, there is no need of its application, for the patents would pass perfect titles. The equity is founded on the rightful conduct of the purchaser, and not on the wrongful conduct of the entrymen. It upholds the purchaser in his honest purchase notwithstanding the wrongful character of the entries. This is akin to the ordinary rule in respect to a bona fide purchaser. Equity sustains the title in spite of the fact that his grantor may have wrongfully obtained it, and upholds it because of his rightful conduct.

Counsel also say that the question is settled by the decision in Hawley v. Diller, supra, relying upon the second paragraph in the headnotes:

"An entryman under this act acquires only an equity, and a purchaser from him cannot be regarded as a bona fide purchaser within the meaning of the act of Congress unless he become *such after the govern- [337]ment, by issuing a patent, has parted with the legal title."

There are two or three answers to this contention. In the first place, the headnote is not the work of the court, nor does it state its decision,—though a different rule, it is true, is prescribed by statute in some states. It is simply the work of the reporter, gives his understanding of the decision, and is prepared for the convenience of the profession in the examination of the reports. In the second place, if the patent referred to in that headnote is a patent issued upon a wrongful entry, no such fact appeared in the case, because no patent was issued upon the entry charged to have been wrongful, but after that entry had been canceled, a patent was issued to Diller on a new entry. If it refers to some other patent than one issued upon a wrongful entry, it has no pertinency, for the doctrine of relation never carries a patent back to the date of any other entry than that upon which it is issued. And finally, the headnote is a misinterpretation of the scope of the decision.

With reference to the other tracts and the denial of any relief, by accounting or otherwise, against the Detroit Company, it is contended that as prior to the issue of a patent, the Land Department could have set aside the entries on account of the fraudulent contracts, the courts will now grant the same relief; and further, that inasmuch as the patents are by this decree canceled and the title restored to the government, the Detroit Company must be regarded as a wrongdoer in respect to the timber which it took from the lands prior to the decree, and an accounting should have been ordered. But this ignores the fact that the Detroit Company acted in good faith, and purchased the timber from those having an apparently perfect equitable title thereto. It becomes necessary to inquire what is the significance of a final receiver's receipt and the effect of a cancelation by the Land Department of such a receipt. The receipt is an acknowledgment by the government that it has received full pay for the land, that it holds the legal title in trust for the entry-[338] man, and will in due course issue to *him a patent. He is the equitable owner of the land. It becomes subject to state taxation, and under the control of state laws in respect to conveyances, inheritances, etc. Carroll v. Safford, 3 How. 441, 11 L. ed. 671; Witherspoon v. Duncan, 4 Wall. 210, 18 L. ed. 339; Simmons v. Wagner, supra; Winona & St. P. Land Co. v. Minnesota, 159 U. S. 526, 40 L. ed. 247, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 83; Cornelius v. Kessel, 128 U. S. 456, 32 L. ed. 482, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 122; Hastings & D. R. Co. v. Whitney, 132 U. S. 357, 33 L. ed. 363, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 112; Benson Min. & Smelting Co. v. Alta Min. & Smelting Co. 145 U. S. 428, 36 L. ed. 762, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 877.

Indeed, in some of the opinions of this court, emphasizing the value of a receiver's receipt, there are expressions which seem to underestimate the significance of a patent. Wisconsin C. R. Co. v. Price County, 133 U. S. 496, 510, 33 L. ed. 687, 694, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 341; Deseret Salt Co. v. Tarpey, 142 U. S. 241, 251, 35 L. ed. 999, 1002, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 158. For it must be remembered that the latter is the instrument which passes the legal title, and that until it is issued the legal title remains with the government, and is subject to investigation and determination by the Land Department. Barden v. Northern P. R. Co. 154 U. S. 288, 326, 38 L. ed. 992, 1001, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1030; Michigan Land & Lumber Co. v. Rust, 168 U. S. 589, 592, 42 L. ed. 591, 592, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 208; Guaranty Sav. Bank v. Bladow, 176 U. S. 448, 44 L. ed. 540, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 425. But while, until the issue of the patent the land is under the control of the Land Department, which, upon proper investigation and for sufficient reasons, may set aside the certificate of entry, yet this power of the Land Department cannot arbitrarily be exercised without notice to the entryman, and if improperly exercised the rights of the entryman may be enforced in the courts after the patent has issued to other parties. Guaranty Sav. Bank v. Bladow, supra. It is true, as against the government, and while the title remains in the government, he may not be able to enforce his equity, because no action can be maintained against the government except upon contract, express or implied. United States v. Jones, 131 U. S. 1, 33 L. ed. 90, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 669. But while he may not sue on his equity, he may protect that equity when sued by the government. It is sometimes said that a legal title with an equity is paramount to an equity alone; but this is not strictly true unless the equities are equal, for sometimes a superior equity *may be [339] adjudged paramount to a legal title and an inferior equity. Garland v. Wynn, 20 How. 8, 15 L. ed. 801; Lytle v. Arkansas, 22 How. 193, 16 L. ed. 306; Lindsey v. Hawes, 2 Black, 554, 17 L. ed. 265; Wirth v. Branson, 98 U. S. 118, 25 L. ed. 86; 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 678, and following. But we need not stop to inquire what rights the Detroit Company will have after a patent has issued. It is enough now to hold that it can defend its equities against the suit of the government.

It is a mistake to suppose that for the determination of equities and equitable rights we must look only to the statutes of Congress. The principles of equity exist independently of, and anterior to, all congressional legislation, and the statutes are either annunciations of those principles or limitations upon their application in particular cases. In passing upon transactions between the government and its vendees we must bear in mind the general principles of equity, and determine rights upon those principles, except as they are limited by special statutory provisions. And clearly, upon those principles, a party purchasing an equitable right is entitled to be protected in his purchase so far as it can be done without trespassing upon the rights of other parties. The statute provides that if an entry is wrongfully made, it may, prior to patent, be set aside by the Land Department, the entryman forfeiting the money which he has paid. In other words, by the action of the Department the equitable title is canceled and restored to the government. It then has both the full title to the land and the money which had been paid for it. And this is the penalty which is imposed for the wrongful entry. Certainly, when the government retains the full price which it has placed upon the land and also recovers the land itself, it is abundantly compensated for any wrong which has been attempted by the entryman. And a party who deals with such entryman—relying upon the evidences of his entry, which are in all respects in form good and sufficient, and are an acknowledgment by the government officials of a rightful entry—is justly entitled to the consideration of a court of equity. In [340] this case, finding *the entryman holding apparently valid equitable titles to the lands, it entered into contracts with them for the purchase of the timber. It cut and removed the timber—all in good faith. It is equitable that, having thus acted in good faith, it should not be held to account for the timber which it has already paid for and cut and removed in reliance upon these contracts. The government has every dollar which it would have received in case of a perfectly valid entry, and has also recovered the land. Surely it is not just for it to ask further payment, and from a party who dealt in good faith with the entrymen, relying upon the titles which it had created. If the Detroit Company has taken some timber from the land, it has once paid for it and ought not to be compelled to pay a second time, and to the government, which has already received full pay for the land, timber and all. It is inequitable to give to the government not merely the land and the price which it charged for the land, but also the value of the timber obtained by the Detroit Company. It is doubling the penalty which the statute imposes, or, if not doubling, at least, largely increasing it.

We think the decision of the Court of Appeals was right, and it is affirmed.

[341] *SOUTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY, Homer S. King, Trustee, and Central Trust Company of New York, Appts.,

v.

UNITED STATES.

1. Equitable jurisdiction — adequate remedy at law.—The objection that complainant had an adequate remedy at law does not—when not made until the hearing—require the dismissal of a cause the subject-matter of which is within the jurisdiction of a court of equity, such as is presented by a bill filed on behalf of the United States, which avers that certain public lands had been erroneously patented to a railroad company, and, in addition to the relief sought by way of cancelation of the patents for lands still held by the railroad company, which was eliminated from the litigation by the decree, prays a discovery of any sales to bona fide purchasers, and a confirmation of their titles, and asks a recovery from the railroad company of the value of the lands so conveyed.

2. Public lands—railroad land grants—recovery of value of lands erroneously patented.— Irrespective of the adjustment acts of March 3, 1887 (24 Stat. at L. 556, chap. 376, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1595), and March 2, 1896 (29 Stat. at L. 42, chap. 39, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1603), the Federal government had the right to sue a railroad company to recover the value of lands erroneously patented to such company, and sold by it to persons who dealt with it in good faith.

Argued January 24, 1906. Decided February 19, 1906.

APPEAL from the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit to review a decree which affirmed a decree of the Circuit Court for the Southern District of California, confirming the titles of bona fide purchasers of land erroneously patented to a railroad company, and adjudging that the United States recover from the company the value of such lands. Affirmed.

See same case below, 66 C. C. A. 581, 133 Fed. 651.

Statement by Mr. Justice Brewer:

This was a suit begun in the circuit court of the United States for the southern district of California, by bill filed April 13, 1899. The parties named as defendants were the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, the trustees in certain mortgages, and a number of individuals sued as representatives *of a class. In a general way it may [342] be said that the bill averred that a large body of lands, some 30,000 acres and over, had been erroneously patented to the railroad company, and that portions thereof had been conveyed by it to bona fide purchasers. The relief sought was the confirmation of the titles of bona fide purchasers, the cancelation of the patents to the other lands, and the recovery from the railroad company of the value of the lands conveyed by it to bona fide purchasers, in accordance with the terms of the acts of Congress of March 3, 1887 (24 Stat. at L. 556, chap. 376, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1595), February 12, 1896 (29 Stat. at L. 6, chap. 18, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1596), March 2, 1896 (29 Stat. at L. 42, chap. 39, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1603), providing for the adjustment of railroad land grants. After answers by the railroad company and some of the individual defendants, proofs were taken, and upon a hearing a decree was entered which, in separate paragraphs, specifically confirmed the titles to the several tracts held by bona fide purchasers, and adjudged that the United States recover from the railroad company the value of those lands, a sum amounting in the aggregate to $33,596.92. 117 Fed. 544. This decree was affirmed by the court of appeals (66 C. C. A. 581, 133 Fed. 651), from whose decision the railroad company and the trustees appealed to this court.

Mr. Maxwell Evarts argued the cause and filed a brief for appellants:

In such a case as the one at bar, in which the complainant's remedy at law is complete and adequate, and the case is nothing more than an action of debt, and in which no costly proceedings have been imposed upon the complainant by the failure of the defendant to object in his pleadings to the jurisdiction of the court of equity, the rule seems to be that the objection taken for the first time at the hearing is good.

The act of Congress of March 2, 1896 (29 Stat. at L. 42, chap. 39, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1603), so far as it purports to give a right of action in favor of the United States to recover the government price of $1.25 an acre for all land erroneously patented to the railroad and sold by it to bona fide purchasers, is unconstitutional.

The bill alleges and the case shows that these lands were excepted from the grant to the defendant railroad by the terms of the acts of Congress of March 3, 1871, and July 27, 1866, they having been granted to and set apart for the Atlantic & Pacific Railroad Company, but were erroneously patented to the Southern Pacific.

Special jurisdiction in equity has been conferred by Congress upon the circuit court to confirm titles of bona fide purchasers and render judgment against the railroad company for value of lands.

This is a constitutional exercise of power by Congress, and creates an additional and new ground of equity which may be administered.

Mr. Justice Brewer delivered the opinion of the court:

[349] *The appellants challenge the decree on two grounds: First, that a suit in equity cannot be maintained because there is a plain, adequate, and complete remedy at law; and, second, that the United States cannot by legislation create an obligation of the railroad company for the value of the land patented to and conveyed by it to bona fide purchasers.

No objection was made to the jurisdiction of the court as a court of equity by any pleading or before the hearing. It is undoubtedly true that a suit in equity cannot be maintained when there is a plain, adequate, and complete remedy at law. Such is the mandate of the Revised Statutes (Rev. Stat. § 723, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 583) as well as the general rule in equity. Lewis v. Cocks, 23 Wall. 466, 23 L. ed. 70; Killian v. Ebbinghaus, 110 U. S. 568, 28 L. ed. 246, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 232; Litchfield v. Ballou, 114 U. S. 190, 29 L. ed. 132, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 820; Allen v. Pullman's Palace Car Co. 139 U. S. 658, 35 L. ed. 303, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 682. It is also true that this objection need not always be raised by some pleading, but may be presented on the hearing even in the appellate court; and, if not suggested by counsel, may be enforced by the court on its own motion. See authorities just cited. But, on the other hand, it is equally true that where the objection that the plaintiff has an adequate remedy at law is not made until the hearing, and the subject-matter is of a class over which a court of equity has jurisdiction, the court is not necessarily obliged to entertain it, even though, if taken in limine, it might have been worthy of attention. Wylie v. Coxe, 15 How. 415, 420, 14 L. ed. 753, 755; Reynes v. Dumont, 130 U. S. 354, 395, 32 L. ed. 934, 945, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 486; Kilbourn v. Sunderland, 130 U. S. 505, 514, 32 L. ed. 1005, 1008, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 954; Brown, B. & Co. v. Lake Superior Iron Co. 134 U. S. 530, 33 L. ed. 1021, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 604; Insley v. United States, 150 U. S. 512, 515, 37 L. ed. 1163, 1165, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 158; Perego v. Dodge, 163 U. S. 160, 164, 41 L. ed. 113, 116, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 971; 1 Dan. Ch. Pl. & Pr. 4th ed. p. 555. It is necessary, therefore, to notice more in detail the allegations in the bill. That sets forth land grants to the Atlantic & Pacific Railroad Company, the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, and the Texas Pacific Railroad Company. It shows the acceptance by the Atlantic & Pacific Company of its grant, the filing of its maps of definite location, a failure to complete its road within the state of California, an act of Congress forfeiting *the lands along the [350] line of said road within that state, a claim of the Southern Pacific Company to some of those lands, the erroneous patenting of them to that company, a demand for a reconveyance, and the acts of Congress in respect to the adjustment of railroad land grants. The bill further alleges that more than one thousand persons, among whom are the individual defendants named in the bill, who are sued as representatives of the class, had purchased by immediate or mesne conveyances from the Southern Pacific Company certain of those lands specifically described in Exhibit A; that all these purchasers claim an interest in the lands, but the nature and extent of their claims are unknown; that a prior suit, brought to vacate and annul patents, included those lands, and had been dismissed as to them without prejudice, upon the claim of the Southern Pacific Company that it had conveyed them to bona fide purchasers. In an amendment to the bill is a prayer (in order to secure an accounting with the railroad company) for a statement of the sales of these tracts, with the names of the purchasers, dates of sales, purchase prices, and amounts paid. The bill also alleges that there is a dispute between the railroad company and the persons purchasing or contracting with it, in respect to the validity of the title conveyed, or attempted to be conveyed by the company; avers that the United States has no desire to question the title of bona fide purchasers, but, on the contrary, seeks to have such title confirmed. It prays for a determination of the tracts sold to bona fide purchasers, to the end that the titles thereto may be confirmed, for a decree vacating and annulling the patents for any lands not so sold, and quieting the title of the United States thereto, and that the railroad company be required to account to the United States for the value of the lands sold to bona fide purchasers, or such sum as had been received by the company from those sales, not exceeding $1.25 per acre, and for such other and further relief as is just and equitable.

It is contended by the railroad company [351] that this is merely *an action in assumpsit to recover the amount claimed to be due for the lands patented to and sold by it to bona fide purchasers. But this ignores the full scope of the suit. The bill asked cancelation of the patents and a quieting of the title of the plaintiff to those lands still held by the company, or not sold to bona fide purchasers. It prayed a discovery of all sales and conveyances, with the dates of the sales and the amounts received thereon. It also sought a confirmation specifically of the titles of bona fide purchasers, and finally an accounting with and recovery from the company. A cancelation of patents and a quieting of title is obtainable in equity. Hughes v. United States, 4 Wall 232, 18 L. ed. 303; Moore v. Robbins, 96 U. S. 530, 24 L. ed. 848; Mullan v. United States, 118 U. S. 271, 30 L. ed. 170, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1041; Williams v. United States, 138 U. S. 514, 34 L. ed. 1026, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 457; Germania Iron Co. v. United States, 165 U. S. 379, 41 L. ed. 754, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 337. It is true no decree was entered for the cancelation of any patents, and that matter was thus eliminated from the litigation. But the confirmation of the title of specific tracts to bona fide purchasers, which did pass into decree is equally within the jurisdiction of a court of equity. While discovery is now seldom the object of a suit in equity, and doubtless would not uphold such a suit when the full information was obtainable by proceedings at law, yet it was a well-recognized ground of equity jurisdiction (Kennedy v. Creswell, 101 U. S. 641, 645, 25 L. ed. 1075, 1076; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. 11th ed. §§ 689 and following; 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 193 and cases cited in notes), and whether in any given case a court of equity would be justified in acting is a question for its determination. It is unnecessary to determine whether, if properly challenged, the allegations in this bill were sufficient. Probably not. United States v. Bitter Root Development Co. 200 U. S. 451, post, 550, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 318. It is enough that discovery was sought, that discovery is not obtainable in an action at law, but only in a suit in equity. It may be that in order to support a recovery from the railroad company it was not necessary that there be a formal confirmation of the titles of the purchasers from it, or that the purchasers be made parties defendant, *yet it was competent [352] for the court, under the pleadings, to enter such a decree, and the government was justified in asking for it. Indeed, such action seems to have been contemplated by the statute, for in the 2d section of the act of March 2, 1896, it is provided: "An adverse decision by the Secretary of the Interior on the bona fides of such claimant shall not be conclusive of his rights, and if such claimant, or one claiming to be a bona fide purchaser, but who has not submitted his claim to the Secretary of the Interior, is made a party to such suit, and if found by the court to be a bona fide purchaser, the court shall decree a confirmation of the title, and shall render a decree in behalf of the United States against the patentee, corporation, company, person, or association of persons for whose benefit the certification was made, for the value of the land as hereinbefore provided."

If only an action at law had been brought to recover the value of these lands from the railroad company, unless the verdict had been for the full amount claimed, $1.25 an acre, or unless there had been specific findings of fact showing the particular tracts on account of which recovery was given, it would be open to grave doubt whether any titles would be confirmed even by inference; and a cloud would be left hanging over the titles of each of these purchasers. Clearly the case here presented was within the jurisdiction of a court of equity; and if there was any objection to that jurisdiction it should have been made in limine, and not after pleadings had been perfected and proofs taken.

Passing to the other question, it is charged in the bill that these statutes constituted a valid contract between the government and the railroad company. Now whether that be strictly true we need not stop to consider. It is enough that upon the facts the government was entitled to recover from the company. Erroneously and by mistake the officers of the government executed patents to the railroad company conveying the legal title to the lands. The railroad company accepted such title and subsequently conveyed the lands to *parties [353] who dealt with it in good faith. When by mistake a tract of land is erroneously conveyed, so that the vendee has obtained a title which does not belong to him, and before the mistake is discovered the vendee conveys to a third party purchasing in good faith, the original owner is not limited to a suit to cancel the conveyances and re-establish in himself the title, but he may recover of his vendee the value of the land up to at least the sum received on the sale, and thus confirm the title of the innocent purchaser. The conveyance to the innocent purchaser is equivalent to a conversion of personal property. Irrespective, therefore, of the act of Congress, the government had the right, when it found that these lands had been erroneously patented to the railroad company, and by it sold to persons who dealt with it in good faith, to sue the railroad company, and recover the value of the lands so wrongfully received and sebsequently conveyed. The acts of Congress really inure to the benefit of the railroad company, and restrict the right of the government, for they provide that the recovery shall in no case be more than the minimum government price. In other words, the government asks only its minimum price for public land, no matter what the value of the tracts or the amounts received by the company may be.

It may be noticed in this connection that in no case was the value of any land sold fixed in the decree above the sum received by the company therefor, and that in many instances that sum exceeded the minimum price of $1.25 per acre. It may also be noticed that by stipulation it appears that within the indemnity limits there still remains a large body of lands from which the railroad company can select lands in lieu of those involved in the suit.

We see nothing in this decision of which the railroad company can complain. The decree of the Circuit Court of Appeals is affirmed.

UNITED STATES.

1. Public lands—railroad land grants—lands sub judice.—Lands within the place limits of a railroad land grant, but which were also included by the lines of an official survey of a Mexican grant, made at the instance of the person to whom such grant was confirmed to remove the uncertainty as to its boundaries due to the generality of the description in the decree of confirmation, must be deemed sub judice,—at least, until the survey is set aside,—and therefore excluded from the grant to the railroad company, although the claimant may not have insisted upon the boundaries as so established.

2. Public lands—railroad land grants—lands sub judice.—The objection that there had not been the final order of confirmation requisite under the act of March 3, 1851 (9 Stat. at L. 631, chap. 41), § 13, to justify an official survey of a Mexican grant, because the Federal government had appealed to the Federal Supreme Court from the decree of confirmation in the district court, is not available to defeat the contention that lands within the place limits of a railroad grant, which were also, when the map of definite location was filed and approved, included by the lines of such survey, were sub judice, and therefore excluded from the grant to the railroad company, where such appeal had practically been abandoned before the survey through a delay of ten years in filing the transcript of record in the appellate court, and the government did not question the right to the survey when the application therefor was made.

Argued January 24, 25, 1906. Decided February 19, 1906.

APPEAL from the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit to review a decree which affirmed a decree of the Circuit Court for the Southern District of California, canceling certain patents erroneously issued to a railway company, quieting the title of the government to the lands, confirming the titles of bona fide purchasers of other lands erroneously patented to the company, and adjudging that the United States recover from the company the value of the lands so conveyed. Affirmed.

See same case below, 66 C. C. A. 560, 133 Fed. 662.

Statement by Mr. Justice Brewer:

This case, in which, on February 28, 1901, the United States filed its bill in the circuit court for the southern district of California, resembles the one immediately preceding, in that it was a suit to cancel certain patents erroneously issued to the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, and to quiet the title of the government to the lands mentioned therein; to confirm the title of certain other lands erroneously patented to the company and by it conveyed to bona fide purchasers; and to obtain an accounting and recovery from the company of the value of the lands so conveyed to bona fide purchasers. By the decree the full relief asked—cancelation, confirmation, and recovery—was granted. The question presented is different in that the railroad company denies that the patents were erroneously issued. The lands were within the place limits of the railroad company's grant, but the plaintiff contends that they *were[355] excluded from the grant because within the claimed and undetermined limits of a Mexican land grant.

In 1838 one Juan Bandini received from

NOTE.—As to land grants to railroads—see note to Kansas P. R. Co. v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 28 L. ed. U. S. 794.

tne Mexican government a grant of what is termed the Jurupa ranch. After California was acquired under the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo [9 Stat. at L. 922], and on September 25, 1852, Bandini presented his petition to the commissioners appointed under the act of Congress of March 3, 1851 (9 Stat. at L. 631, chap. 41), asking confirmation of his title, and on October 17, 1854, it was confirmed, the order of confirmation describing the boundaries of the rancho in substantially the language of the act of juridical possession.

An appeal was taken to the district court of the United States for the southern district of California, as authorized by the statute, which court, on April 5, 1861, sustained the action of the commissioners. The boundaries of the grant were thus described:

"The said boundaries being as follows: Commencing at the foot of a small hill, standing alone, at the cañada which the Messrs. Yorba recognize as their boundary, on the further side of the river of Jurupa, which hill the Indians in their tongue call 'Pachappa,' which was taken for a landmark, placing on it certain stones on top of others; thence course westerly along the bank of the said river thirty thousand varas to the point of the same table land on which Mr. Bandini had established his house; and where the said river makes a bend, where a stake was driven for a landmark; thence northerly, fronting towards the mountains of Cucamonga, seven thousand varas, passing between the two springs of Guspar, ending at the first white sand bank which there is on said course towards Cucamonga; thence easterly the same thirty thousand varas to a small lone mountain on the left hand of the high road going from San Gabriel to San Bernardino, called by the Indians 'Catalmacay,' and which was designated as a landmark; thence southerly seven thousand varas to the point of beginning at the foot of the small hill called 'Pachappa,' which makes a corner east, west."

[356] *The confirmation was made in the name of Abel Stearns, a purchaser pending the proceedings, and substituted of record for the original petitioner. On January 14, 1869, the surveyor general of California, on application of the claimant and deposit by him of the estimated cost thereof, directed a survey of the rancho. This was made, and on February 26, 1872, the survey and field notes were filed in the office of the surveyor general of California, and by him approved. On May 13, 1876, the Commissioner of the General Land Office at Washington directed a correction of some alleged errors in this survey. On appeal from this order the Secretary of the Interior, on February 21, 1877, ordered a resurvey. This was made, and on May 23, 1879, a patent was issued conforming to such resurvey. The lands in dispute are within the limits of the first, but outside those of the second, survey, and are not included in the patent.

On May 1, 1862, an appeal to this court was prayed and allowed in the district court of California. On January 8, 1875, an order was here entered which, after stating that an appeal had been allowed by the district court, as shown by an inspection of the certificate of the clerk of that court, recites:

"And whereas, in the present term of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-four, the said cause came on to be heard before the said Supreme Court, and it appearing that the said appellant has failed to have its cause filed and docketed in conformity to the rules of this court, it is now here ordered, adjudged, and decreed by this court that this appeal from the district court of the United States for the district of California be, and the same is hereby, docketed and dismissed."

Upon these facts a decree in favor of the plaintiff was entered by the circuit court, June 15, 1903 (59 C. C. A. 683, 123 Fed. 1007), which was affirmed by the circuit court of appeals on October 17, 1904 (66 C. C. A. 560, 133 Fed. 662), and thereupon this appeal was taken.

Mr. Maxwell Evarts argued the cause and filed a brief for appellants:

The decree of the district court was not final within the meaning of the statute, while the appeal to this court was pending.

Mr. Joseph H. Call argued the cause and filed a brief for appellee:

Lands embraced within the limits of a Mexican or Spanish grant, sub judice when the grant takes effect, or which are covered by a subsisting pre-emption or homestead filing, or mineral claim, or other claims or rights, or otherwise reserved, are excepted from railroad grants.

Whenever the law provides for a survey of a Mexican grant by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, or by his inferior officer, the surveyor general for the district of California, it is presumed, when such survey has been made and approved, that survey was made in accordance with law; and it will be binding upon the government and all others until reversed or set aside by a higher authority.

Mr. Justice Brewer delivered the opinion of the court:

The single question is whether these lands were, between the dates of the two surveys, sub judice, and therefore not passing under the grant to the railroad company. The map of definite location was filed and approved in 1874, and at that time, which was between the dates of the two surveys, the grant took effect. The description of the lands in the Mexican grant and in the decree of confirmation was not in the language of the United States land legislation, by section, township, and range, nor was it such that, without a survey, the exact boundaries could be determined. No one could say from reading this description whether the true north boundary was shown by the first or the second survey. The regular land surveys made by the government, establishing section, township, and range lines, would not locate the boundaries of the grant, nor would they identify either of those lines with any particular boundary. There was that generality of description which required a special survey to locate the grant. It is said that the patentee never claimed the land north of the boundary line established by the second survey, and therefore that it was in no just sense sub judice. But the boundaries being uncertain, he applied to the department authorized by Congress to determine them. It acted upon his application, and, by its survey, located the boundaries. He made no challenge of its action, but, so far as the record shows, was content therewith. While a new survey was subsequently ordered, it was not at his instance. So, at least until the first survey was set aside, it was the measure of his claim, and the lands within the boundaries established by it were sub judice. No affirmative dec-[358] laration that he insisted *upon his right to them was essential to make them a part of his claims.

But the special contention of the appellants is that the first survey was without any authority of law, because the statute provides that upon final confirmation of the claim a survey may be ordered, and it is insisted that there was no final confirmation until the order made by this court in 1875; that, although the confirmation by the district court was in 1861, yet an appeal was allowed which transferred the case to this court, and held the question of confirmation in abeyance until the order here made in 1875. The statute (§ 13) provides:

" . . . and for all claims finally confirmed by the said commissioners, or by the said district or Supreme Court, a patent shall issue to the claimant upon his presenting to the General Land Office an authentic certificate of such confirmation, and a plat or survey of the said land, duly certified and approved by the surveyor general of California, whose duty it shall be to cause all private claims which shall be finally confirmed to be accurately surveyed, and to furnish plats of the same."

Hence it is contended that the entire proceedings under the first survey were void and may be put out of consideration in determining whether the lands were sub judice. But this ignores the fact that, anterior to the first survey, the United States had practically abandoned its appeal from the order of the district court. It had for ten years failed to file any transcript in this court, and the petitioner had been entitled to the formal entry of docket and dismissal which he obtained in 1875,—an entry implying an abandoned appeal, and made to place that fact upon record. The government, which was the party interested against the petitioner, and the party taking the appeal, did not, when the application was made in 1869 to the surveyor general of California, question the right to a survey. It did not suggest that there had been no final order of confirmation, nor has it at any time raised any question of the right to that survey, and the Land Department ordered *the [359] second only upon a doubt of the accuracy of the first. It does not lie within the mouth of a third party to say that the government had a right to appeal, could have insisted on that right, and could have objected to the first survey on the ground of a failure to obtain a final order of confirmation. It is enough that the government recognized that it had abandoned its appeal, and was willing that proceedings should be taken looking to a survey and patent. Nor were the proceedings so absolutely void that it can be said that no claim was pending.

The surveyor general was the official of the government, placed in charge of surveys, who, on application, was to determine whether the conditions had arisen which justified him in acting. If he decided erroneously his action could be set aside on review, but it was not a nullity. Even between individuals, if one brings a suit in a Federal court to quiet his title to a tract of land, and obtains a decree in accordance with his bill, and on appeal this court sets aside the decree and orders the suit to be dismissed for lack of proper allegations in respect to diverse citizenship,—while it may be that the proceedings are ineffectual to determine the title, yet, can it be said that no suit was pending, no claim was made? Put the question in another aspect: Suppose no challenge of the first survey had been made, and the Land Department, acting on that survey, had caused a patent to be issued,—could the government obtain a decree setting it aside upon that showing alone, and without a disclosure of equities? In Williams v. United States, 138 U. S. 514, 34 L. ed. 1026, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 457, and Germania Iron Co. v. United States, 165 U. S. 379, 41 L. ed. 754, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 337, something more than premature action in certificate and patent was shown,—something which presented an equity entitling the United States to maintain its suit for cancelation.

Another matter; at the time the map of definite location was filed and approved, this first survey had been made and approved by the surveyor general of California, and by that survey the lands in dispute were included within the Mexican grant. The railroad company, therefore, took title to its land grant with this fact apparent on the records of the Land Depart-[360] ment. *In an early case in this court (Kansas P. R. Co. v. Dunmeyer, 113 U. S. 629, 28 L. ed. 1122, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 566) in which the question of the relative rights of railroads to granted lands and individuals claiming rights to separate tracts within the place limits was presented, we said (p. 641, L. ed. p. 1126, Sup. Ct. Rep. p. 571):

"It is not conceivable that Congress intended to place these parties as contestants for the land, with the right in each to require proof from the other of complete performance of its obligation. Least of all is it to be supposed that it was intended to raise up, in antagonism to all the actual settlers on the soil whom it had invited to its occupation, this great corporation, with an interest to defeat their claims, and to come between them and the government as to the performance of their obligations.

"The reasonable purpose of the government undoubtedly is that which is expressed; namely, while we are giving liberally to the railroad company, we do not give any lands we have already sold, or to which, according to our laws, we have permitted a preemption or homestead right to attach. No right to such land passed by this grant."

And this proposition has been repeatedly reaffirmed in later cases. Hastings & D. R. Co. v. Whitney, 132 U. S. 357, 33 L. ed. 363, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 112; Sioux City & I. F. Town Lot & Land Co. v. Griffey, 143 U. S. 32, 36 L. ed. 64, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 362; Whitney v. Taylor, 158 U. S. 85, 39 L. ed. 906, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 796.

One thing more; it appears from a stipulation of counsel that within the indemnity limits of the grant to the Southern Pacific Railroad there remain more than 50,000 acres of surveyed public lands for which there has been no selection or application to select by the company. So that there is no such equity in favor of the company as was suggested in the case of United States v. Winona & St. P. R. Co. 165 U. S. 463, 482, 41 L. ed. 789, 797, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 368.

The decree of the Court of Appeals is affirmed.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION. (No. 24.)

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION, Appt.,

v.

CHESAPEAKE & OHIO RAILWAY COMPANY, and New York, New Haven, & Hartford Railroad Company. (No. 27.)

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 361–405.)

1. Commerce — Federal regulation — maintenance of published rates by interstate carrier — undue preferences and discrimination.—An interstate carrier not empowered by its charter or by any legislation existing at the time of the adoption of the act to regulate commerce to mine and market coal violates the mandate of that act respecting the maintenance of published rates, and its prohibitions against undue preferences and discriminations, by stipulating to sell and transport coal at an agreed price, insufficient to yield its published freight rates after deducting the cost of purchase and delivery.

2. Commerce — Federal regulation — maintenance of published rates by interstate carrier — undue preferences and discrimination.—Deliveries of coal by an interstate carrier not empowered to mine and market coal by its charter or by any legislation existing at the time of the adoption of the act to regulate commerce, under a contract to sell and transport such coal at a stipulated price, come within the requirement of that act respecting the maintenance of published rates, and its prohibitions against undue preferences and discrimination whenever, from any cause, the gross sum realized is insufficient to yield the carrier its published freight rates after deducting the purchase price of the coal and the cost of delivery, although the contract may not have been open to that objection when made.

3. Statutes—construction by the body charged with enforcement.—The prohibitions of the act to regulate commerce as to rebates, favoritism, and discrimination having been construed by the Interstate Commerce Commission, charged with its execution, to be inapplicable to the freight rates for coal charged by interstate carriers empowered to mine and market coal by their charters or by legislation existing at the time of the adoption of that act, this construction, which has long obtained in practical execution, and has been impliedly sanctioned by the re-enactment of the statute without alteration in the particulars construed, must be treated as read into the statute.

4. Injunction—extent of relief—general injunction.—A carrier which has been adjudged to have violated the act to regulate commerce in a specific particular may be restrained from further like violations of the act, but should not be enjoined in general terms from violating the act in the future in any particular.

Argued October 25, 26, 1905. Decided February 19, 1906.

CROSS APPEALS from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Virginia to review a decree enjoining an interstate carrier from violating prohibitions of the act to regulate commerce against undue preferences and discriminations. Modified by enjoining the taking of less than the published tariff of freight rates by means of dealing in the purchase and sale of coal, and as modified, affirmed.

See same case below, 128 Fed. 59.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. John W. Daniel argued the cause, and, with Mr. Fred Harper, filed a brief for the New York, New Haven, & Hartford Railroad Company:

So long as a sufficient sum is realized from the sale of the coal by the vender-carrier to cover its transportation charges, bearing in mind that the contract of sale is not a mere device to evade the law, there can be no unjust discrimination in the freight rates.

Mr. John W. Griggs also argued the cause and filed a brief for the New York, New Haven, & Hartford Railroad Company.

Mr. Randolph Harrison argued the cause, and, with Mr. A. R. Long, filed a brief for the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company:

Before the court will exercise the power of injunction, the bill must specifically allege the thing or act to be restrained, and the order must clearly and definitely put the defendant on notice of what he "may or may not do without making himself liable as in contempt of the order."

A restraining order that neither forbids nor commands the doing of any specific act, but simply repeats the general admonitions of the interstate commerce act, should not be granted, since such an injunction does not give any additional sanction to the statute, but leaves all vital questions concerning violations of the law to be tried by proceedings for contempt, instead of being tried in the usual manner, before a court and jury.

Mr. Justice White, delivered the opinion of the court:

Following an inquiry, begun in consequence of a complaint to it made, the Interstate Commerce Commission, through the Attorney General of the United States, filed under the act to further regulate commerce (32 Stat. at L. 847, chap. 708, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1905, p. 599), in the circuit court of the United States for the western district of Virginia, this proceeding against the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company, *a Virginia corporation, and [382] the New York, New Haven, & Hartford Railroad Company, a corporation, of the state of Connecticut. In this opinion we shall hereafter respectively speak of the parties as the Commission, the Chesapeake & Ohio, and the New Haven. The petition averred that the Chesapeake & Ohio was engaged in the carriage of coal as interstate traffic between the Kanawha district of West Virginia and Newport News, Virginia, for delivery thence to the New Haven, in Connecticut, and charged that the traffic was being moved at less than the published rates, and in such a way as to produce a discrimination in favor of the New Haven road and against others, all in violation of the act to regulate commerce and the amendments thereto. Specifying the grounds of the complaint, it was alleged that in the spring of 1903 the Chesapeake & Ohio made a verbal agreement with the New Haven to sell to that road 60,000 tons of coal, to be carried from the Kanawha district to Newport News, and thence by water to Connecticut, for delivery to the buyer at $2.75 per ton, and that a considerable portion had already been delivered and the remainder was in process of delivery. It was averred that the price of the coal at the mines where the Chesapeake & Ohio bought it, and the cost of transportation from Newport News to Connecticut, would aggregate $2.47 per ton, thus leaving to the Chesapeake & Ohio only about 28 cents a ton for carrying the coal from the Kanawha district to Newport News, whilst the published tariff for like carriage from the same district was $1.45 per ton.

Referring to the developments before the Commission, and annexing as part thereof the testimony taken on such hearing and the documents connected therewith, the petition further alleged that the Chesapeake & Ohio asserted that, although the total price which it received for the coal covered by the verbal agreement was less than the total outlay in delivering the coal, including its published rates, such fact did not amount to a departure from the published rates, and was not a discrimination, for two reasons: First. Because if such difference existed, [383] *it was a loss suffered by the Chesapeake & Ohio, not from taking less than its published rates, but because it had received less as seller than the coal had cost. Second. That even if it had not the lawful right thus to impute the payment of the price of the coal, the Chesapeake & Ohio had, in fact, received much more for the coal than the price in money agreed on, because, at the time the verbal agreement to sell was made, the New Haven had a claim exceeding $100,000 against the Chesapeake & Ohio, arising from a previous written contract to deliver coal, which was to be extinguished by the completion of the delivery of the coal, and this caused that price largely to exceed the cost of the coal to the Chesapeake & Ohio, including its published rates. Averring that the prior contract was in itself void because it also embodied an agreement to take less than the published rates, and was discriminating, it was charged that the New Haven had entered into both agreements with the Chesapeake & Ohio, knowing that they were in violation of the interstate commerce law. The prayer was that the Chesapeake & Ohio and the New Haven be made parties; that both roads be enjoined, the one from further executing the verbal agreement to deliver coal, and the other from seeking to enforce it; that the Chesapeake & Ohio be enjoined from "accepting or receiving any rebate, concession, or discrimination in respect of the transportation of any property in interstate or foreign commerce carried by it," and be, moreover, enjoined from "doing anything whatever, whereby coal or any other property shall, by any device whatever, be transported . . . at a less rate than named in the tariffs published and filed by such carrier, as is required by the act to regulate commerce and acts amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto, or whereby any other advantage may be given or discrimination practised." And that the New Haven road "be enjoined and restrained from accepting or receiving any rebate, concession, or discrimination in respect of the transportation of any property in interstate or foreign commerce carried by it."

*A preliminary restraining order was is- [384] sued, conforming to the prayer of the petition. The Chesapeake & Ohio by its answer admitted that it had made, in the spring of 1903, a verbal agreement with the New Haven road for about 60,000 tons of Kanawha coal for the price alleged in the petition, to be transported by it to Newport News, and thence delivered by ocean transportation to the New Haven in Connecticut. It was admitted that the purchase price agreed to be paid was less than the market price of the coal, plus the published rates and the cost of transportation and delivery from Newport News to Connecticut, but it was averred that this was only apparently the case, because the contract to sell included the discharge of a debt of about $100,000, arising from the previous written contract to which the petition referred. The validity of both the previous written contract and the later verbal agreement was averred. The right of the Chesapeake & Ohio to buy and sell coal, and to impute any loss on the sale of the coal to itself as dealer instead of to itself as a carrier, was averred. Both the original contract and the one of 1903 were averred to have been made in good faith, not with any intention to avoid the published rates, and it was charged that, at about the time the original contract was made, arrangements had been made by the railroad for a rate of transportation from Newport News to Connecticut which would have caused the contract price to be adequate to pay the market price of the coal and all other charges, including the published rates, but that, subsequently thereto, the persons with whom this contract for transportation was made had violated their agreement, and that by strikes the price of coal had advanced, and thereby the loss of $100,000 to the Chesapeake & Ohio was occasioned.

The New Haven road, in its answer, asserted its good faith in making both the original contract and the verbal agreement. It alleged that by the original contract it was a mere purchaser of coal from the Chesapeake & Ohio, and not a shipper over that road; that the coal bought was intended for its own use *in the operation of [385] its railroad; that it had no knowledge of the price which the Chesapeake & Ohio would be obliged to pay for the coal, or the sum which it would cost that road to deliver it, and therefore had no knowledge that the total cost would not equal the market price of the coal, the cost of delivery, and the published rate of the Chesapeake & Ohio. It averred the validity of the agreement, the legality of the debt of $100,000 which resulted from it, and charged that, taking that debt into consideration, the sum which it paid the Chesapeake & Ohio for the coal under the 1903 verbal agreement largely exceeded the market price and the cost of delivery, including the published rates of the Chesapeake & Ohio. It denied that there was any departure from the published rates or any discrimination, asserted that at the time the original contract was made the price was sufficient to have enabled the Chesapeake & Ohio to perform the contract without losing anything either as a seller or as a carrier, and that if, in execution of the contract, a condition arose where a loss was suffered by the Chesapeake & Ohio in either capacity, it was caused by subsequent events which could not affect the validity of the contract when made, and especially denied that in any way, directly or indirectly, had it knowingly lent itself to any discrimination, or any taking by the Chesapeake & Ohio of less than its published rates.

The case was heard on the testimony taken in the proceeding before the Commission and the documents forming a part of the same, and upon further documents and testimony stipulated by counsel.

For reasons to which we shall hereafter have occasion to advert, the court held that, considering both the original contract and the verbal agreement of 1903, there was no violation of the provisions of the 2d and 6th sections of the act to regulate commerce, forbidding the taking of less than the published rates. [24 Stat. at L. 379, chap. 104, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3154.] It, however, held that the contracts amounted to an undue discrimination and a violation of the 3d section of the act. The court, hence, permanently enjoined the Chesapeake [386] & *Ohio from discharging any obligation arising from the original contract of 1896, and from further executing or attempting to execute, in any manner whatever, directly or indirectly, the verbal agreement of 1903, and it permanently enjoined the New Haven from asserting or attempting to enforce any claim arising from the contract of 1896, or in any manner, directly or indirectly, attempting to enforce the verbal agreement of 1903. Thereafter the court denied a request made by the Commission, that the injunction be expanded so as, in general terms, to command the Chesapeake & Ohio perpetually to observe in the future its published rates.

The New Haven appealed. The Commission also prosecuted a cross appeal because of the refusal of the court to grant its prayer to make the injunction against the Chesapeake & Ohio general in its nature, and that company, in an elaborate and separate printed argument in its own behalf, assails the judgment below on the merits, and in effect asks its reversal on the merits.

It is apparent from the case as thus stated that, in order to decide the issues which arise, we may not confine our attention to the verbal agreement of 1903, the execution of which it was the immediate object of the proceeding to enjoin, but must consider the prior contract of 1896, since primarily the rights, if any, which arose under the verbal agreement, are inextricably involved in and dependent upon the contract of 1896. In other words, the controversy, as considered by the Commission on the inquiry by it conducted, and as decided below, and as here presented, involves an analysis of all the dealings under both contracts, and the legal rights, if any, which arose from them. We must, therefore, consider the subject in this aspect, and to do so we state at once the facts which are admitted or which are undisputably established, reserving such questions of fact as are in dispute for separate consideration when we approach the legal propositions which arise from the undisputed facts.

The Chesapeake & Ohio, chartered by the state of Virginia, *operates a road which [387] reaches both the New River and the Kanawha coal fields of West Virginia, and extends to Newport News. The New Haven, chartered by the state of Connecticut, operates a road principally situated in New England. On December 3, 1896, these two roads entered into a written contract, the one to sell and the other to buy, between July 1, 1897, and July 1, 1902, not to exceed 2,000,000 gross tons of bituminous coal, to be taken from the line of the Chesapeake & Ohio road; deliveries to be made not exceeding 400,000 tons per annum. The price agreed upon was $2.75 per gross ton, New Haven basis, settlement to be made monthly. The coal was to be delivered by the seller on the line of the New Haven. The contract is reproduced in the margin.†

†Contract Made between the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company and the New York, New Haven, & Hartford Railroad Company.

Said Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company, for the consideration hereinafter mentioned, hereby agrees to furnish to said railroad company not to exceed 2,000,000 gross tons of bi-

The Chesapeake & Ohio, not in its own name, but through others who really, although not ostensibly, acted for it, made a contract with operators in the New River district of West Virginia, for the delivery to it of the coal to fulfil the contract which had been made with the New Haven. In [388] consequence *of failure of some of the operators to perform their part of the contract, changes were made at various times, which it is unnecessary to note. Deliveries of the coal were made to the New Haven as required up to the winter of 1900–1901, when, because of strikes and other difficulties, delivery ceased, and the New Haven bought coal in the open market and presented to the Chesapeake & Ohio a bill for the increased price which it had paid, and the Chesapeake & Ohio paid $160,000 to cover such loss. Subsequently, in 1902, further strikes supervened and deliveries again ceased, at a time when about 60,000 tons remained yet to be delivered. The New Haven again presented a bill for damages amounting to $103,000. Thereupon the verbal agreement of 1903 was made, by which it was provided that the shortage of 60,000 tons upon the original contract might be discharged by delivery on the part of the Chesapeake & Ohio of that amount of coal from the Kanawha district at the contract price of $2.75, and when this delivery was consummated it was agreed that the Chesapeake & Ohio would be absolutely relieved from the payment of the damage claim just referred to.

At the time this verbal agreement was made the contract price was, leaving out of view the claim for damages, inadequate to pay the market price, as admitted by the pleadings, of the coal plus the published rates of the Chesapeake & Ohio to Newport News, and the charges thence to the point of delivery. To put itself in a position to car-[389] ry out the agreement, *an individual who represented the Chesapeake & Ohio made contracts in his own name with the operators in the Kanawha district to furnish the desired coal. Without stopping to state the particular methods of accounting by which the result was accomplished, it is indisputable that the Chesapeake & Ohio bore the loss arising from the difference between the contract price, the price of the coal at the mines, the published rate to Newport News, and the cost of transporting thence to the point of delivery.

Undoubtedly long prior to the making of the first contract the Chesapeake & Ohio, besides its business as a carrier, bought and sold coal. This business was carried on by the company from about 1874 up to the time of the making of the contract of 1896, as testified by the president who made that contract, as follows:

"The coal was handled by a separate and distinct department of the railway company, the mine operators delivering for an agreed price at the mines to the coal agent of the railway company all coal mined by them, the net result realized from the selling price of the coal representing the freight earned by the railway company."

And the same official testified that he made the contract of 1896 as a continuation of this system.

In 1895, however, the state of West Virginia passed "An Act to Prevent Railroad Companies from Buying or Selling Coal or Coke and to Prevent Discrimination." The 1st section of this act made it unlawful for any railroad corporation to engage directly or indirectly in the business of buying and selling coal or coke. In consequence of this act, prior to the making of the contract of 1896, the coal department of the railroad was abolished. And it was the existence of the West Virginia statute which caused the Chesapeake & Ohio, when it contracted with operators in West Virginia to procure as to both contracts the coal for delivery to the New Haven, to do so not in its own name, but through another.

tuminous coal from its line in such quantities monthly as wanted from July 1, 1897, to July 1, 1902, without charge for demurrage. Deliveries to be made not exceeding 400,000 tons per annum.

And said Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company further agrees that all said bituminous coal shall be of the best quality, first-class in every respect, and satisfactory to said railroad company, and said railway company has the right to terminate this contract at any time if said bituminous coal be of poor quality, or if its delivery be unnecessarily delayed.

And said Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company further agrees to deliver all said bituminous coal to said railroad company in its bins at such ports upon its lines as required by the monthly requisitions of its purchasing agent.

In consideration of the faithful performance by the said Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company of all its agreements herein contained, said railroad company agrees to pay for said bituminous coal at the rate of two and seventy-five one-hundreths dollars per gross ton. New Haven basis, settlement to be made monthly.

Said railway company has the right to cancel any and all portions of said quantity of bituminous coal remaining undelivered on July 1, 1902.

Witness the names of the parties hereto this, the 3d day of December, 1896.

Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company,
By M. E. Ingalls, President.
The New York, New Haven, & Hartford Railroad Company,
By C. E. Mellen, Second Vice President.

For value received, I hereby guarantee that the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company shall not fail to deliver coal on account of strikes.

J. Pierpont Morgan.

Before applying to these undisputed facts [390] the legal question *arising for decision, we must determine a question of fact as to which there is some dispute; that is, was the price at which the Chesapeake & Ohio contracted in 1896 to sell the coal to the New Haven sufficient to pay the cost of the coal at the mines, as well as the expense of delivery, including the published freight rate? Without stopping to go into the evidence, we content ourselves with saying that we think the court below correctly held that the price was not adequate to accomplish these purposes, and that from the inception of delivery under the contract, and during the whole period thereof, except for a brief time, caused by a lowering of the freight rates, the contract price was inadequate to net the railroad its proper legal tariff.

We are brought, then, to determine whether the contract made in 1896 for the 2,000,000 tons of coal was void because in conflict with the act to regulate commerce and its amendments. In approaching the consideration of the act to regulate commerce, we, for the moment, put out of view the provisions of the West Virginia statute, and its influence upon the validity of the contract made in West Virginia for the purpose of acquiring the coal which the Chesapeake & Ohio had obligated itself to deliver. We shall also assume, for the purpose of the inquiry, that the Chesapeake & Ohio, although not expressly authorized, was not prohibited by its Virginia charter from buying and selling and transporting the coal in which it dealt. The case, therefore, will be considered solely in the light of the operation and effect of the provisions of the act to regulate commerce, and we shall not direct our attention to expressly determining whether the assertion by a carrier of a right to deal in the products which it transports would not be so repugnant to the general duty resting on the carrier as to cause the exertion of the power to deal in the products which it transports to be unlawful, irrespective of statutory restrictions.

The question, therefore, to be decided is this: Has a carrier engaged in interstate commerce the power to contract to sell and transport in completion of the contract the [391] commodity *sold, when the price stipulated in the contract does not pay the cost of purchase, the cost of delivery, and the published freight rates?

The previous decisions of this court concerning the interstate commerce act do not afford much aid in determining this question. This is the case, because, although that act was adopted in 1887, and questions concerning the import of the act have been often here, such questions have not generally involved the operation and effect of the act concerning the command that published rates be adhered to, and the prohibitions, against discrimination, favoritism, or rebates, but have mainly concerned the meaning of the act in other respects; that is, involved deciding whether powers asserted as to other subjects were vested by the act in the Interstate Commerce Commission.

There are several leading cases decided by the Commission, which are relied upon by the two railroads, directly relating to the question we have stated, but, as we shall have occasion hereafter to weigh their import, we shall not now pause to analyze and apply them.

It cannot be challenged that the great purpose of the act to regulate commerce, whilst seeking to prevent unjust and unreasonable rates, was to secure equality of rates as to all, and to destroy favoritism, these last being accomplished by requiring the publication of tariffs, and by prohibiting secret departures from such tariffs, and forbidding rebates, preferences, and all other forms of undue discrimination. To this extent and for these purposes the statute was remedial and is, therefore, entitled to receive that interpretation which reasonably accomplishes the great public purpose which it was enacted to subserve. That a carrier engaged in interstate commerce becomes subject as to such commerce to the commands of the statute, and may not set its provisions at naught whatever otherwise may be its power when carrying on commerce not interstate in character, cannot in reason be denied. Now, in view of the positive command of the 2d section of the act, that no departure from the published rate shall be made, "directly *or indirectly," how [392] can it in reason be held that a carrier may take itself from out the statute in every case by simply electing to be a dealer and transport a commodity in that character? For, of course, if a carrier has a right to disregard the published rates by resorting to a particular form of dealing, it must follow that there is no obligation on the part of a carrier to adhere to the rates, because doing so is merely voluntary. The all-embracing prohibition against either directly or indirectly charging less than the published rates shows that the purpose of the statute was to make the prohibition applicable to every method of dealing by a carrier by which the forbidden result could be brought about. If the public purpose which the statute was intended to accomplish be borne in mind, its meaning becomes, if possible, clearer. What was that purpose? It was to compel the carrier, as a public agent, to give equal treatment to all. Now if, by the mere fact of purchasing and selling merchandise to be transported, a carrier is endowed with the power of disregarding the published rate, it becomes apparent that the carrier possesses the right to treat the owners of like commodities by entirely different rules. That is to say, the existence of such a power in its essence would enable a carrier, if it chose to do so, to select the favored persons from whom he would buy, and the favored persons to whom he would sell, thus giving such persons an advantage over every other, and leading to a monopolization in the hands of such persons of all the products as to which the carrier chose to deal. Indeed, the inevitable result of the possession of such a right by a carrier would be to enable it, if it chose to exercise the power, to concentrate in its own hands the products which were held for shipment along its line, and to make it, therefore, the sole purchaser thereof and the sole seller at the place where the products were to be marketed; in other words, to create an absolute monopoly. To illustrate: If a carrier may, by becoming a dealer, buy property for transportation to a market and eliminate the cost of transportation to such market, a faculty possessed by no other owner of [393] the commodity, it must *result that the carrier would be in a position where no other person could ship the commodity on equal terms with the carrier in its capacity of dealer. No other person owning the commodity being thus able to ship on equal terms, it would result that the owners of such commodity would not be able to ship, but would be compelled to sell to the carrier. And as, by the departure from the tariff rates, the person to whom the carrier might elect to sell would be able to buy at a price less than any other person could sell for, it would follow that such person, so selected by the carrier, would have a monopoly in the market to which the goods were transported. And that the result arising from an admission of the asserted power of the carrier as a dealer to disregard the published rates conduces immediately, and not merely remotely, to the production of the injurious results stated, is not only demonstrated by the very nature of things, but is established to be the case by the facts indisputably shown on this record. For here it is unquestioned that the Chesapeake & Ohio, as a result of its being a dealer, had become, long prior to the adoption of the interstate commerce law, and continued to be thereafter, up to the passage of the West Virginia statute prohibiting a carrier from dealing in coal, virtually the sole purchaser and seller of all the coal produced along the line of its road. That this result was not merely accidental, but was in effect engendered by the power of the carrier to deal and transport a commodity, is illustrated by the case of Atty. Gen. v. Great Northern R. Co. 29 L. J. Ch. N. S. 794. In that case Vice Chancellor Kindersley was called upon to determine whether dealing in coal by the railway company was illegal, because incompatible with its duties as a public carrier and calculated to inflict an injury upon the public. In deciding that the act of Parliament granting the charter to operate the railway implied a prohibition against the company's engaging in any other business, the reason for the rule was thus expressed (p. 798):

"These large companies, joint-stock companies generally, *for whatever purpose [394] established, and more particularly railway companies, are armed with powers of raising and possessing large sums of money,—large amounts of property,—and if they were to apply that money, or that property, to purposes other than those for which they were constituted, they might very much injure the interests of the public in various ways."

Illustrating the danger to the public, as established by the case before him, the Vice Chancellor said (p. 799):

"Here we find this company, having the traffic from the north of England, where the great coal fields are (at least, some of the principal coal fields), supplying the country with coal, or capable of supplying it; this company buys the coal, which gives to the company an interest in checking, as much as possible, those who will not deal with them; and it is quite clear that it is possible, by the mode in which this company may (I will not say has)—but by the mode in which this company may exercise such powers as either it has or assumes to have—this company may get into their hands the traffic; that is, the dealing in all the coal in the large districts supplying coal to the country. They have, to a considerable extent, done so, and there is no reason why it should not go on progressing. I observe that in the eight [?] years from 1852 to 1857, inclusive, the amount of their coal business has increased from 73,000 tons to 794,000 tons; and there is no reason, as the affidavits show, why they should not—there is great danger that they may—get into their hands the entire business in the coal of all that district of country. If they can do that with regard to coal, what is to prevent their doing it with regard to every species of agricultural produce all along the line? Why should they not become purchasers of corn, of all kinds of beasts, and of sheep, and every species of agricultural produce, and become great dealers in the supply of edibles to the markets of London and why not every other species of commodity that is produced in every part of the country from which or to which their railway runs? I do not know where it is to stop, if the argument on the part of the company is to prevail. There is, [395] therefore, *great detriment to the interests of the public, for this reason, taking merely the article of coal."

It is apparent that the construction of the statute which is now claimed by the carriers would, if adopted, not only destroy its entire remedial efficacy, but would cause the provisions of the statute to accentuate and multiply the very wrongs which it was enacted to prevent.

Without a statutory requirement as to publication of rates and the imposition of a duty to adhere to the rates as published, individual action of the shippers, as between themselves and in their dealings with the carrier, would have full play, and thereby every shipper would have the opportunity to procure such concessions as might result from favoritism or other causes. Interpreting the prohibitions of the statute as it is contended they should be, it would follow that every individual would be bound by the published tariff, and the carrier alone would be free to disregard it. Thus the statute, whilst subjecting the public to the prohibitions, would exempt the carrier, and would thereby enormously increase the opportunities of the latter to do the wrongs which the statute was enacted to prevent.

And the considerations previously stated serve also to demonstrate that the prohibitions of the act to regulate commerce concerning "undue or unreasonable preference or advantage," "undue or unreasonable prejudice or disadvantage," and unjust discrimination," are in conflict with the asserted right of a carrier to become a dealer in commodities which it transports, and, as such dealer, to sell at a price less than the cost and the published rates. Certain also is it, when the reasons previously stated are applied to those prohibitions of the statute, the possession of the power by a carrier to deal in merchandise and to sell and transport at less than published rates would not only destroy the remedy intended to be afforded by the provisions in question, but would cause the statute to fructify the growth of the wrongs which it was intended to extirpate. In a general sense the considerations which we have previously stated, moreover, dispose of all the contentions [396] *urged at bar to establish the right of the carrier to become a dealer under the circumstances stated. Even although it may give rise to some repetition, we more particularly notice the various contentions.

(a) It is said that when a carrier sells an article which it has purchased and transports that article for delivery, it is both a dealer and a carrier. When, therefore, the price received for the commodity is adequate to pay the published freight rate and something over, the command of the statute as to adherence to the published rates is complied with, because the price will be imputed to the freight rate, and the loss, if any, attributed to the company in its capacity as dealer, and not as a carrier. This simply asserts the proposition which we have disposed of, that a carrier possesses the power, by the form in which he deals, to render the prohibitions of the act ineffective, since it implies the right of a carrier to shut off inquiry as to the real result of a particular transaction on the published rates, and thereby to obtain the power of disregarding the prohibitions of the statute.

(b) It is said that, as in the case in hand, it is shown that there was no intention on the part of the carrier in making the sale of the coal to violate the prohibitions of the statute, and, on the contrary, as the proof shows an arrangement made by the carrier for transporting the coal from Newport News to Connecticut, which, if it had been carried out, would have provided for the full published rate, therefore an honest contract made by the carrier should not be stricken down because of things over which the carrier had no control. The proposition involves both an unfounded assumption of fact and an unwarranted implication of law. It is true the court below found that the proof did not justify the inference that the Chesapeake & Ohio had, in 1896, made the contract to sell the coal to the New Haven with the purpose of avoiding a compliance with the published rates. But in this conclusion of fact we cannot agree. Whilst it may be that the proof establishes that the contract for the sale of coal was not made as a mere device *for avoiding the [397] operation of the statute, we think the proof leaves no doubt that, in making the contract in question, the Chesapeake & Ohio was wholly indifferent to and did not concern itself with, the prohibitions of the statute, of which, of course, it must be assumed to have had full knowledge. As we have seen, the president of the Chesapeake & Ohio, by whom the corporation was represented in making the contract, expressly testified that from the beginning that corporation had pursued the policy of acquiring all the coal mined on its line, and sold it, relying upon the net result of such sales for its freight compensation, and that the particular contract was made in continuation of that policy. We find it impossible to conclude, from the proof, that the Chesapeake & Ohio could have made a contract for so large an amount of coal, to be delivered over so long a period, without taking into view the existing prices and the cost necessarily to be occasioned by the delivery of the coal, if the full published freight rates were to be realized. Indeed, the proof leaves no doubt upon our minds that, in making the contract, the Chesapeake & Ohio sought to accomplish results which it deemed beneficial by means which it considered effectual, even although resort to such means was prohibited by the interstate commerce act. In other words, we think it is established beyond doubt that, desiring to stimulate the production of coal along its line, and thereby, as it conceived, to increase the carriage of that commodity, and to benefit the railroad and those living along its line by the reflex prosperity which it was deemed would arise from giving a stimulus to an industry tributary to the railroad, the Chesapeake & Ohio bought and sold the coal without reference to whether the net result to it would realize its published rates. And it would seem that this means of stimulating the industry in question was resorted to instead of attempting to bring about the same result by a lowering of the published rates, because to have so done would have engendered disparity between coal rates and the tariff on all the other articles contained in the same classifi-[398] cation, and would *besides have caused other and competing roads to make a similar reduction on the published rates, and thereby would have frustrated the very advantage to itself and those along its lines which the Chesapeake & Ohio deemed it was bringing about by the method pursued. That is to say, we think it is shown that the mode of dealing adopted was simply the result of a disregard by the Chesapeake & Ohio of the economic conceptions upon which the interstate commerce law rests, and a substitution in their stead of the conceptions of the Chesapeake & Ohio as to what was best for itself and for the public. Further, as the prohibition of the interstate commerce act is ever operative, even if the facts established that at the particular time the contract was made, considering the then cost of coal and other proper items, the net published tariff of rates would have been realized by the Chesapeake & Ohio from the contract, which is not the case, it is apparent that the deliveries under the contract came under the prohibition of the statute whenever, for any cause, such as the enhanced cost of the coal at the mines, an increase in the cost of the ocean carriage, etc., the gross sum realized was not sufficient to net the Chesapeake & Ohio its published tariff of rates. This must be the case in order to give vitality to the prohibitions of the interstate commerce act against the acceptance at any time by a carrier of less than its published rates. We say this because we think it obvious that such prohibitions would be rendered wholly ineffective by deciding that a carrier may avoid those prohibitions by making a contract for the sale of a commodity stipulating for the payment of a fixed price in the future, and thereby acquiring the power during the life of the contract to continue to execute it, although a violation of the act to regulate commerce might arise from doing so. Besides, all the contentions just noticed proceed upon the mistaken legal conception that the application of the statutory prohibitions depends not upon whether the effect of the acts done is to violate those prohibitions, but upon whether the carrier intended to violate the statute.

*(c) It is urged that if the requirement [399] of the act to regulate commerce as to the maintenance of published rates and the prohibitions of that act against undue preferences and discriminations be applied to a carrier when engaged in buying and selling a commodity which it transports, the substantial effect will be to prohibit the carrier from becoming a dealer when no such prohibition is expressed in the act to regulate commerce, and hence a prohibition will be implied which should only result from express action by Congress. Granting the premise, the deduction is unfounded. Because no express prohibition against a carrier who engages in interstate commerce becoming a dealer in commodities moving in such commerce is found in the act, it does not follow that the provisions which are expressed in that act should not be applied and be given their lawful effect. Even, therefore, if the result of applying the prohibitions as we have interpreted them will be practically to render it difficult, if not impossible, for a carrier to deal in commodities, this affords no ground for relieving us of the plain duty of enforcing the provisions of the statute as they exist. This conclusion follows, since the power of Congress to subject every carrier engaging in interstate commerce to the regulations which it has adopted is undoubted.

But it is in effect said, conceding this to be true as an original question, the prohibitions of the act ought not now to be interpreted as applying to a carrier who is a dealer in commodities, because of an administrative construction long since given to the act by the interstate commerce commission, the body primarily charged with its enforcement, and which has become a rule of property, affecting vast interests, which should not be judicially departed from, especially as such construction, it is asserted, has been impliedly sanctioned by Congress by frequently amending the act without changing it in this particular.

Passing, for the present, the legal conclusion, let us first ascertain whether the premise itself is well founded. The two rulings of the Interstate Commerce Com-[400] mission upon which *the premise is based are Haddock v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 4 I. C. C. Rep. 296, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 302, and Coxe Bros. v. Lehigh Valley R. Co. 4 I. C. C. Rep. 535, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 460, decided respectively in 1890 and 1891.

Without going into detail, we content ourselves with saying that in both of the cases complaints were made to the Interstate Commerce Commission concerning the defendant railroads, and it was charged that whilst acting as common carriers they were dealing in coal, and as a result violating the prohibitions of the interstate commerce act as to rates and undue preferences and discriminations. It was shown in both cases that the carriers, prior to the adoption of the interstate commerce act, were authorized by their charters or legislative authority to carry on both the business of mining and selling the coal so mined, and transporting the same to market. Indeed, it was found in both cases that the functions of producing and transporting, as authorized, were so interblended that it was impossible to separate one from the other. Whilst it is true that in both of the cases it was also shown that the carriers bought, sold, and transported some coal which was not produced in the mines which they owned, this fact was evidently treated, in view of the other circumstances of the case, as of minor importance, since the commingled powers of producing, selling, and transporting were alone made the basis of the conclusion reached by the Commission as to the character of relief which could be afforded. Solely in view of the lawful power of the carriers to mine, sell, and transport, existing before the passage of the act to regulate commerce, the Commission decided that its authority, under that statute and under the circumstances of the case, was confined to compelling the exaction of rates which were just and reasonable. The fact that the rulings in the two cases just referred to were solely placed upon the peculiar powers of the defendant corporations possessed by them prior to the passage of the interstate commerce act was pointed out by the Commission in Re Alleged Unlawful Rates, 7 I. C. C. Rep. 33. In that case, in [401] deciding *that the defendant carrier was without power to purchase grain for the purpose of securing the right to transport it, and thus evade the law which would have applied to its transportation had it been owned by any other party, the Commission, in distinguishing the case before it from the Haddock and Coxe Bros. Cases, said (p. 38):

"Those cases are in no respect similar to this. In both the common carrier was also the owner of extensive coal fields, and indeed it had become a common carrier largely for the purpose of transporting the product of those mines to market. This state of things existed before the passage of the act, and had no reference to the act. Unless the carrier was permitted to transport its coal, the result would be in effect the confiscation of its property; and to order it to charge itself with a particular rate would merely result in a matter of bookkeeping. Under these circumstances it was held that the only remedy was to inquire whether the rate charged the complainant was a reasonable one."

Now, without at all intimating that, as an original question, we would concur in the view expressed in the case last cited, that to have applied the act to regulate commerce, under proper rules and regulations for the segregation of the business of producing, selling, and transporting, as presented in the Haddock and Coxe Bros. Cases would have been confiscatory, and without reviewing the rulings made by the Interstate Commerce Commission in those cases, and adhered to by that body during the many years which have followed those decisions, we concede that the interpretation given by the Commission in those cases to the act to regulate commerce is now binding, and, as restricted to the precise conditions which were passed on in the cases referred to, must be applied to all strictly identical cases in the future; at least, until Congress has legislated on the subject. We make this concession because we think we are constrained to so do, in consequence of the familiar rule that a construction made by the body charged with the enforcement of a statute, which construction has long obtained in practical *execution, and [402] has been impliedly sanctioned by the reenactment of the statute without alteration in the particulars construed, when not plainly erroneous, must be treated as read into the statute. Especially do we think this rule applicable to the case in hand, because of the nature and extent of the authority conferred on the Commission from the beginning concerning the prohibitions of the act as to rebates, favoritism, and discrimination of all kinds, and particularly in view of the repeated declarations of the court that an exertion of power by the Commission concerning such matters was entitled to great weight, and was not lightly to be interfered with. The concessions thus made, however, are wholly irrelevant to the case before us. This follows since the Chesapeake & Ohio was, neither by its charter nor by legislative grant existing at the time of the adoption of the act to regulate commerce, possessed of the commingled attributes of carrier and producer, which was the controlling consideration in the decisions made in the Haddock and Coxe Bros. Cases.

Concluding, therefore, that both the contracts made by the Chesapeake & Ohio with the New Haven were contrary to public policy, and void because in conflict with the prohibitions of the act to regulate commerce, it obviously follows that such contracts were not susceptible of being enforced by the New Haven, and afforded no legal basis for a claim of the New Haven against the Chesapeake & Ohio, and therefore the court below was correct in so deciding.

This leaves only for consideration the question raised by the cross appeal of the Interstate Commerce Commission. That proposition is thus stated in the first of the assignments of error filed on behalf of the Commission:

"That the circuit court of the United States for the western district of Virginia, after finding that the claim of the New York, New Haven, & Hartford Railroad Company against the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company for $103,910.69, asserted as damages arising from a partial nonperformance by said railway company of a con-
[403] tract of December 3, 1896, set *out in the record, is, as to the whole of said claim and interest thereon, an illegal and unenforceable claim, and after finding that the verbal agreement between said companies, made in April, 1903, and set out in said record, whereby said railway company undertook to furnish to said railroad company 59,966 tons of coal, to be transported from West Virginia to Newport News, Virginia, over the lines of said railway company, and thence transported by vessels to certain New England ports, said coal to be delivered at said ports at the price of $2.75 per ton, New Haven basis, to be an invalid and illegal agreement; that said court merely enjoined and restrained the said Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company, its officers, agents, and employees from, in any manner, direct or indirect, executing or performing, or attempting to execute or perform, either said contract of December 3, 1896, or said agreement of April, 1903, and from in any manner discharging or satisfying any obligation or seeming obligation arising from said agreements or either of them, or arising from any arrangement or agreement made in lieu of said agreements, or either of them; whereas said court should have further enjoined and restrained the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company from giving to said railroad company, or to any other person, firm, or company, any undue or unreasonable advantage or preference, and should further have restrained and enjoined the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company from transporting coal from one state to or through any other state for the New York, New Haven, & Hartford Railroad Company, or for any firm, person, or company, at a less rate than the duly established freight rate of the said railway company in force at the time, and from further failing to observe its published tariffs, or from giving to the said New York, New Haven, & Hartford Railroad Company, or to any person, firm, or company, in any manner whatsoever, any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage; and said decree, entered by the court on the 19th day of February, 1904, in addition to the provisions thereof, should have enjoined and restrained the New York, New Haven, & Hartford *Railroad Company [404] and its officers and agents from seeking or accepting, in any manner, any direct or indirect rebate of the duly established freight rates of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company on any interstate commerce, and from seeking or accepting in any manner from said railway company any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage."

The contention, therefore, is that, whenever a carrier has been adjudged to have violated the act to regulate commerce in any particular, it is the duty of the court, not only to enjoin the carrier from further like violations of the act, but to command it in general terms not to violate the act in the future in any particular. In other words, the proposition is that, by the effect of a judgment against a carrier concerning a specific violation of the act, the carrier ceases to be under the protection of the law of the land, and must thereafter conduct all its business under the jeopardy of punishment for contempt for violating a general injunction. To state the proposition is, we think, to answer it. Swift & Co. v. United States, 196 U. S. 375, 49 L. ed. 518, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 276. The contention that the cited case is inapposite because it did not concern the act to regulate commerce, but involved a violation of the antitrust act, we think is also answered by the mere statement of the proposition. The requirement of the act to regulate commerce, that a court shall enforce an observance of the statute against a carrier who has been adjudged to have violated its provisions, in no way gives countenance to the assumption that Congress intended that a court should issue an injunction of such a general character as would be violative of the most elementary principles of justice. The injunction which was granted in the case of Re Debs, 158 U. S. 564, 39 L. ed. 1092, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 900, was not open to such an objection, as its terms were no broader than the conspiracy which it was the purpose of the proceeding to restrain. To accede to the doctrine relied upon would compel us, under the guise of protecting freedom of commerce, to announce a rule which would be destructive of the fundamental liberties of the citizen.

As the court below did not decide that the [405] 2d and 6th *sections of the act, relating to the maintenance of rates, had been violated, the injunction by it issued was not made as directly responsive to the commands of the statute on that subject as we think it should have been. We, therefore, conclude that the injunction below should be modified and enlarged by perpetually enjoining the Chesapeake & Ohio from taking less than the rates fixed in its published tariff of freight rates, by means of dealing in the purchase and sale of coal. And, as thus modified, the decree below is affirmed.

CITY DEPOSIT BANK COMPANY.

1. Error to state court—Federal question—certificate of state court.— The certificate of a state court of last resort may serve to remove any doubt whether rights under the Federal bankrupt law were so relied upon and passed upon in affirming, without opinion, a judgment dismissing a suit brought by a trustee in bankruptcy to recover an alleged asset of the bankrupt estate, as to sustain a writ of error, under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 709, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 575, from the Federal Supreme Court.

2. Bankruptcy—assets of bankrupt estate.— A bank which, in payment of a clearing house check drawn in its favor on another member, and held as a result of the day's clearings, receives the proceeds of checks presented by such other member for clearing on the next morning, shortly before suspending payment, must account therefor to the bankrupt estate of such defaulting member, where the clearing house, in the revision of the clearings made necessary by such suspension, eliminated and returned the checks which had been debited against the defaulting member, and which were subsequently dishonored; and this is no less true because the clearing house, under its rules, might have called on its other members to pay pro rata the amount of the checks drawn upon the defaulting member, and might have treated the credits in favor of the defaulting member as belonging proportionally to the contributing members, since, even under these rules, a check which was a result of the clearings of the previous day would not be entitled to participation.

Submitted December 12, 1905. Decided February 19, 1906.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Ohio to review a judgment which affirmed a judgment of the Circuit Court of Franklin County, in that state, which had in turn affirmed a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas of that county, dismissing an action by a trustee in bankruptcy to recover an asset of the bankrupt estate. Reversed and remanded for further proceedings.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. David F. Pugh submitted the cause for plaintiff in error. Messrs. Fred C. Rector and Pugh & Pugh were on the brief:

If the title of the bankrupt is not questioned, and if the question is whether the property passed to his trustee under the bankrupt act, then this court has jurisdiction.

The petition here recites the assignment for the benefit of creditors under the state law, the insolvency of the assignors, the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, the adjudication in bankruptcy, the appointment of the trustee,—all of which, together with the allegations about the transfer and payment of the money, show a voidable preference, and that the petitioner intended to assert a right under the bankrupt law. All of this appears on the face of the record, and is in strict conformity with the rule as laid down in Hoyt v. Shelden, 1 Black, 518, 7 L. ed. 65; Maxwell v. Newbold, 18 How. 515, 15 L. ed. 508, and in other subsequent cases.

If the petition should be deemed too general and indefinite, the certificate of the chief justice of the supreme court of Ohio makes it more specific and certain, which is the function of a certificate.

Brown v. Atwell, 92 U. S. 327, 23 L. ed. 511.

It was not necessary that the petition

NOTE.—On certificate of state court as showing the presence of a Federal question—see note to Cincinnati, P. B. S. & P. Packet Co. v. Bay, ante, 428.

should aver in so many words, or positively, that the right which the petitioner claimed was derived from or under the bankrupt law.

Crowell v. Randell, 10 Pet. 368, 9 L. ed. 458; Miller v. Nichols, 4 Wheat. 311, 4 L. ed. 578; Willson v. Black Bird Creek Marsh Co. 2 Pet. 245, 7 L. ed. 412.

The petition of the plaintiff in error was abundantly sufficient to authorize a recovery, even if there had been no preference intended, and there had been simply a conversion by the defendant in error.

The import of the decision by the circuit court is that there was a variance between the proof offered by the plaintiff in error and the allegations of his petition. If there was a mere variance, and not a failure of proof, the objection should have been made on the trial. It was too late to make the objection, for the first time, in the appellate court.

Speer v. Bishop, 24 Ohio St. 598; Hoffman v. Gordon, 15 Ohio St. 211.

Mr. Talfourd P. Linn submitted the cause for defendant in error. Messrs. Outhwaite, Linn, & Thurman were on the brief:

There must be a definite issue as to the possession of the right, distinctly deducible from the record, before the state court can be held to have disposed of such Federal question by its decision.

Sayward v. Denny, 158 U. S. 180, 39 L. ed. 941, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 777.

The certificate of the presiding judge of the state court cannot itself confer jurisdiction upon this court to re-examine the judgment, and the petition for the writ of error forms no part of the record, upon which action can be taken here.

Ibid.

To render a Federal question available on writ of error to the state court, it must have been raised in the case before judgment, and cannot be claimed for the first time in a petition for rehearing.

Turner v. Richardson, 180 U. S. 87, 45 L. ed. 438, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 295. See also Yazoo & M. Valley R. Co. v. Adams, 180 U. S. 1, 45 L. ed. 395, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 240.

The question cannot be raised for the first time in the assignments of error.

Jacobi v. Alabama, 187 U. S. 133, 47 L. ed. 106, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 48; Johnson v. New York L. Ins. Co. 187 U. S. 491, 47 L. ed. 273, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 194.

A writ of error to a state court must be dismissed where no Federal question was raised in the record, and the case was disposed of in the state courts on a ground wholly independent of a Federal question.

New York C. & H. R. R. Co. v. New York, 186 U. S. 269, 46 L. ed. 1158, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 916.

This court will not review, on error, mere questions of construction of Federal statutes, or applications of facts to those statutes, when the validity of the act or statute is not involved, and where no right to proceed under the statute is denied by the state court.

To the same effect is the case of Cramer v. Wilson, 195 U. S. 409, 49 L. ed. 257, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 94.

McKenna v. Simpson, 129 U. S. 506, 32 L. ed. 771, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 365, is also in point. That was a suit brought by an assignee in bankruptcy to set aside a fraudulent conveyance. The court held that it was an action which might have been brought in the United States court direct, but that having been brought in the state court, and no decision having been rendered in the state court against the validity of any statute of, or authority exercised under, the United States, or immunity claimed under the Constitution of the United States, this court had no jurisdiction to review the state decision. It was held, further, that the decision of the state court as to what should be deemed a fraudulent conveyance does not present any Federal question, nor does the application by the court of the evidence in reaching such decision raise a Federal question.

Under the rule announced in Kaufman v. Tredway, 195 U. S. 271, 49 L. ed. 190, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 33, the decision of the supreme court of Ohio, confirming the lower courts, is final, and not subject to review by this court.

The law is too well settled to need citation, that an unlawful preference, within the meaning of the bankruptcy act, must have been a preference obtained by the creditor—in this case, the City Deposit Bank—with full knowledge of the insolvency, and with a deliberate intent to obtain the preference at the expense of other creditors.

Collier, Bankruptcy, 4th ed. 418.

Mr. Justice White delivered the opinion of the court:

The firm of Reinhard & Company, composed of John G. Reinhard and Henry A. Reinhard, carry on a banking business in Columbus, Ohio. On April 10, 1900, the firm made a general assignment under the insolvent laws of Ohio. On the following day a petition in involuntary bankruptcy under the laws of the United States was filed against the firm, and on August 10, 1900, it was adjudged bankrupt, and subsequently Rector, the plaintiff in error, was appointed the trustee.

In a court of common pleas of the state of Ohio the trustee began this suit against the defendant in error to recover the sum of $1,300, which it was subsequently agreed was only $1,161.74. The petition alleged the adjudication in bankruptcy and the appointment of the trustee, and based his right to recover upon the ground that on April 10, 1900, the firm had transferred and assigned to the defendant bank, who had received the same, the sum of money sued for, [410] which it was *alleged was the property of Reinhard & Company, and, in substance, the payment to the bank was alleged to constitute a voidable preference.

The answer admitted the making of the general assignment, the adjudication of the firm as an involuntary bankrupt, and the appointment and qualification of the plaintiff as trustee. The other averments of the petition were denied.

A trial was had to a jury. At the close of the evidence for the plaintiff the court, at the request of the defendant, instructed a verdict in its favor, and judgment was entered dismissing the action. The circuit court of Franklin county affirmed the judgment, which was thereafter affirmed by the supreme court of Ohio, without opinion. The chief justice of the supreme court of Ohio made, and the court caused to be filed and entered on its journal, the certificate which is in the margin.†

[411] *It is contended that this court is without jurisdiction. The argument upon which this proposition is rested is this: First. It is said that whilst, in the petition, the right of recovery was based upon the ground of fraudulent preference, it was not disclosed therein whether the preference relied upon was in violation of the bankrupt law of the United States or of the insolvent laws of the state of Ohio; and therefore a Federal question was not raised, as it was necessary to specially direct the attention of the state court to such a question if it was intended to rely upon it. Second. But even if the Federal question was referred to in the petition, as the cause of action stated in nowise involved the construction or validity of any provision of the bankrupt act, therefore there is no right to review under § 709 of the Revised Statutes, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 575.

Both these contentions might well be disposed of by saying that the action was brought by a trustee appointed under the bankrupt law of the United States, seeking to recover what was asserted to be an asset of the bankrupt estate under that law. This, therefore, presented a Federal question, and the denial of the asserted right was a denial of a right or title specially claimed under a law of the United States. Peck v. Jenness, 7 How. 612, 12 L. ed. 841; Barton v. Geiler, 108 U. S. 161, 27 L. ed. 687, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 387; Williams v. Heard, 140 U. S. 529, 35 L. ed. 550, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 885; Dushane v. Beall, 161 U. S. 513, 40 L. ed. 791, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 637; Stanley v. Schwalby, 162 U. S. 275, 40 L. ed. 967, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 754. Whether expressions, relied upon in argument, contained in Cramer v. Wilson, 195 U. S. 416, 49 L. ed. 258, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 94, must be taken as not in harmony with the previous cases, or whether those expressions simply implied that where a right claimed by a trustee in bankruptcy in its final aspect depended *solely upon a [412] state law, the courts of the United States would follow the construction given by the highest courts of the state to the state law, we do not deem it necessary now to say, for, without reference to the doctrine announced in the previous cases, and without regard to the import of the case of Cramer v. Wilson, the contention as to the want of jurisdiction is without merit. It is to be observed that the matter certified by the supreme court of Ohio was made by that court a part of the record, and, if it be considered as having the force of an opinion of that court, would clearly establish the fact that the court had considered and decided a Federal question, which, apart from other considerations, would obviously give jurisdiction. But even if the action of the court be treated as not an opinion, but a mere certificate, the same result would follow. It is elementary that the certificate of a court of last resort of a state may not import a Federal question into a record where otherwise such question does not arise; it is equally elementary that such a certificate may serve to elucidate the determination whether a Federal question exists. Applying this principle, we think, as the suit was brought by a trustee in bankruptcy in virtue of the power and authority conferred upon him by a law of the United States, the certificate makes clear the fact, if it were otherwise doubtful, that rights under the bankrupt law were relied upon and passed upon below. And as, this being true, the right of the trustee in bankruptcy to recover thus depended upon a law of the United States, there was clearly jurisdiction within the purview of § 709 of the Revised Statutes, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 575. Nutt v. Knut, 200 U. S. 12, ante, 348, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 216.

†On motion of the plaintiff in error, Fred C. Rector, trustee, this court orders it to be certified and made part of the record in this case, and the Honorable William T. Spear, chief justice of said supreme court, does now certify, that in said cause, and on the hearing before this court, it was claimed, contended, and alleged by the said plaintiff in error that, on the 10th day of April, A. D. 1900, Reinhard & Company, a partnership, by deeds of its individual members, committed an act of bankruptcy, to wit: made a general assignment for the benefit of creditors; that on the 11th day of April, A. D. 1900, a petition in bankruptcy was filed in the district court of the United States of the southern district of Ohio, eastern division; that on the 10th day of August, A. D. 1900, said Reinhard & Company were, by said court, adjudged bankrupt, and on September 13, A. D. 1900, said plaintiff in error was appointed trustee thereof; that on the 10th day of April, A. D. 1900, said Reinhard & Company, then being, to the knowledge of the defendant in error, insolvent, assigned and transferred to

Coming to the merits, we premise that if the court below had found the facts we should be bound thereby. Here, however, as we have seen, the court below did not find the facts, but instructed a verdict for the defendant, being of the opinion that, upon no view of the evidence, was there a case made which would have justified a verdict for the plaintiff. This raises a question of law, which is this: Was the evidence such as would have justified the jury, under any [413] reasonable view thereof, to *find for the plaintiff? In other words, Was there sufficient evidence to warrant the submission of the case to the jury? This brings us to consider the evidence, in order to ascertain what inferences, one way or the other, might reasonably have been drawn by the jury therefrom.

Outside the testimony of the trustee as to the insolvency of the bankrupt estate, the only evidence introduced was the testimony of John Field, manager of the Columbus Clearing House Association. By that testimony the following facts were disclosed:

Prior to the bankruptcy of Reinhard & Company that firm carried on a banking business in the city of Columbus, Ohio, and the firm, as well as the City Deposit Bank Company, were members of the clearing house association. In order to accomplish the purpose of its existence the clearing house association was an agent, for a limited purpose, of the banks composing the association; that is, its duty was to clear or balance daily the claims of the respective banks, one against the other, resulting from the checks drawn upon and held by the different members. The only source from which the association derived the means to carry on its operations was from assessments upon the members, which were made solely for the purpose of paying rent, salaries, and similar expenditures. To effect the clearings each member of the association, on banking days, sent to the clearing house, at a specified hour, the checks held by it against other banks. The checks sent by each member were considered as remaining the property of the member, the association being simply an agent for collection. Where the sum of the checks presented by one bank exceeded the sum of the checks against it presented by other members of the association, that bank had, of course, a credit balance. Where the checks presented by a particular bank against other banks were less than the sum of the checks against it presented by other banks, that bank had a debit balance. Where a bank was entitled to a credit or payment corresponding to the excess which the sum of the checks presented by it exceeded the sum *of the checks against it, the clearing [414] house paid that bank the difference by drawing its check upon one or more of the debtor banks; and each member constituted the manager of the association its agent to draw a check or checks upon such member for any balance found to be due by that member.

In making the clearings on April 9, 1900, the day before the assignment of Reinhard & Company, the checks presented against that the defendant in error, The City Deposit Bank Company, and that the said last-named company then and there received from said Reinhard & Company, the sum of $1,161.74 of moneys belonging to said Reinhard & Company; that said assignment and transfer was an unlawful preference, given to the said defendant in error, and violated the provisions of § 60*a* and §60*b* of the United States bankrupt law; that it became and was material to the said cause for this court to determine whether the said sum of $1,161.74 was so assigned and transferred; whether it was an unlawful preference; whether it was a violation of said § 60*a* and § 60*b* of the said bankrupt law; and whether the said plaintiff in error, under said law, was entitled to have the said assignment and transfer set aside and declared null and void, and to have a judgment and order for the recovery of said money against said defendant in error; that the decision of this court was adverse to the claims and contentions of the said plaintiff in error, in this: that said court decided that said assignment and transfer of said sum of $1,161.74 was not an unlawful preference, in violation of the said provisions of the bankrupt law, and that the said plaintiff in error was not deprived of any right under said law, and was not entitled to have said assignment and transfer set aside, and to recover the said sum of $1,161.74 from said defendant in error.

firm in the clearings exceeded the checks presented by it against other banks by $1,161.74; that is, Reinhard & Company, as a result of the clearing, was indebted in that amount. On the same day the City Deposit Bank presented in the clearings checks drawn upon other banks which exceeded by $10,245.63 the amount of the checks presented against that bank; in other words, as a result of the clearings it was entitled to receive the amount of money just stated. In payment of the balance the clearing house gave to the City Deposit Bank a check on Reinhard & Company for the sum due by that firm, viz., $1,161.74, and a check upon the Capital City Bank for $9,083.89. There was nothing in the evidence to show upon what bank the checks were drawn which were held by the City Deposit Bank on April 9, and which it presented for clearing on that day, nor was there anything in the evidence to show upon what banks the checks were drawn which were presented by Reinhard & Company for clearing on the same day. The check of the clearing house on Reinhard & Company for the balance due by that firm in the clearings, and which, as we have said, was given to the City Deposit Bank, was not on that day presented by the City Deposit Bank on April 9, and which it prepayment. On the contrary, the City Deposit Bank held the clearing house check until the next day. When, on the morning of the 10th of April, the City Deposit Bank presented its checks for clearing, it treated the clearing house check on Reinhard & Company as being entitled to participate in the clearing, and included it in the checks presented for that purpose.

On the morning of April 10, the checks, as [415] presented to the *clearing house by the City Deposit Bank, including the clearing house check, exceeded the amount of the checks presented against it by other banks in the sum of $4,875.98; and the clearing house gave to the City Deposit Bank its check on the Deshler National Bank for that sum. On that day the checks presented by Reinhard & Company against other banks aggregated $2,132.19, whilst the checks against it presented by other banks amounted to $6,369.30, leaving a balance due by Reinhard & Company in the clearing of $4,237.11. Shortly after the clearing was made it developed that Reinhard & Company had made a general assignment for the benefit of their creditors and had suspended payment, and as a result, of course, it was certain that the firm of Reinhard & Company would not meet its obligations. The rules of the clearing house had provided for such a contingency as follows:

"In case of failure to respond promptly to the checks of the manager, on the part of any member of the association, they shall be immediately returned to the manager, who shall call upon the other banks or bankers to make up the sum for which payment has been refused in proportion to the amount of checks upon the defaulting member sent into the clearing house at the preceding settlement, which sums so furnished or contributed shall constitute claims in the hands of the responding members respectively against the defaulting members, and it is hereby agreed that the checks received from the clearing house by the defaulting members shall be delivered, if required, to the member owning the same, without mutilation; the agency of the clearing house in the matter, it is understood, is only as a trustee, and in no case is the association to be held responsible for any loss that may occur."

All the checks drawn against Reinhard & Company, and which figured in the morning settlement, were returned to the clearing house with the information that Reinhard & Company had failed. The clearing house thereupon revised the previous settlements by deducting, wherever appearing, the credits which had been given for checks drawn on Reinhard & Company, *which had [416] been presented by other banks, and changed the balances to correspond with such deductions, and the dishonored checks were returned to the respective banks. Having thus returned all the checks which had been presented against Reinhard & Company on that morning, the entire sum which had been collected on the checks sent to the clearing house by Reinhard & Company on the same morning for the purpose of the clearing, viz., $2,132.19, remained in the hands of the clearing house without any debit against it. Being thus in possession of the sum referred to, the manager testified that he paid $970.45 thereof to the Commercial Bank and the balance of $1,161.74 to the City Deposit Bank. With a view of making the payment to the last-named bank, the manager went to the office of the City Deposit Bank. Conflicting versions were given of what took place at the interview, which was had with an officer of the City Deposit Bank named Jennings. The manager at first testified:

"I told him that the Reinhards had failed, and that his check had been returned, and that I had a balance due Reinhard & Company, and that I would substitute a check on the Capital City Bank for this check on Reinhard, which had been returned. Mr. Jennings said that he would—

I think he said he would telephone Mr. Outhwaite, and if it was all right he would return my check,—the Reinhard check. . ."

Subsequently, referring to checks which the witness had carried to the City Deposit Bank to give to that bank in exchange for the prior check of $4,875.98, he said:

"It runs in my mind . . . that I told him that I wanted to substitute those, and that he asked me what for, and I told him not to ask any questions,—I am not sure about that,—that I wanted to substitute those checks."

Certain it is, however, that the manager took up the check for $4,875.98 drawn on the Deshler Bank, which had been given to the City Deposit Bank in discharge of the credit balance in its favor as the result of the previous clearing of that day, and substituted for it a check for $3,714.24, [417] drawn on the Deshler *National Bank, and in addition gave a check drawn on the Capital City Bank for $1,161.74, the exact amount of the clearing house check which had been thrown out of the clearings.

Analyzing these facts for the purpose of arriving at the inferences which may reasonably be deduced from them, this plainly results: When, on the morning of April 10, 1900, as the result of the failure of Reinhard & Company, the clearings of that day required revision, the clearing house having received back the checks drawn on Reinhard & Company which it had cleared for its members that morning made new settlements with those members based upon deductions from the original settlements of the sum of the checks which had been put in the clearings on that morning and were afterwards dishonored. The result of each new settlement was that the amount due to the member was reduced or the indebtedness shown on the original settlement was increased, according as, by the original settlement, the member was a creditor of or a debtor in the clearing; and, as a necessary consequence of the new settlements having eliminated all the debits against Reinhard & Company, the clearing house held, as the property of that firm, the proceeds of the checks on other banks which that firm had sent for clearing on that morning.

The statements of the manager as to what was done with the clearing house check which had been put in the clearings by the City Deposit Bank are not perfectly clear. In one aspect he returned that check to the City Deposit Bank as he had returned the other dishonored checks, and then gave to the City Deposit Bank a check for the amount due it on the revision of the clearing ($3,714.24), and also delivered a check for $1,161.74, to take up the dishonored clearing house check. In another aspect the same result was brought about without any return of the dishonored check. The mere form of the transaction, however, does not affect its nature. The payment out of this fund by the manager, in part to the City Deposit Bank and in part to another bank, therefore amounted simply to *this: [418] that in the revision of the clearings, although the clearing house eliminated, and returned the checks which had been debited against Reinhard & Company, and were subsequently dishonored, it retained and appropriated the credits arising from the checks put in by Reinhard & Company for the purpose of the clearing of the morning. Having thus appropriated those credits, it used them pro tanto to pay the clearing house check on Reinhard & Company held by the City Deposit Bank as the result of the clearings of the previous day. But as the clearing house had received the checks from Reinhard & Company on the morning of April 10, 1900, for the purpose of making the clearing on that day, such agent was without power, after returning to the banks which had presented the same, the checks debited against the firm, to hold on to the credits of Reinhard & Company, and treat them as subject to be appropriated. Indeed when the inferences from the proof are thus accurately fixed it is apparent that the transaction was in substance like the one which was held by this court in Yardley v. Philler, 167 U. S. 344, 42 L. ed. 192, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 835, to be a misappropriation, and besides to constitute a fraudulent preference within the meaning of the national banking act.

The result, however, of the proof would not be different, even if it be conceded that, under the rule as to clearings, which we have quoted, the clearing house would have had the power, upon the default of one of its members, simply to call upon the other members to pay in a pro rata proportion of the amount of the check or checks which had been drawn upon the defaulting member, and to treat the credit standing in the clearing in favor of the defaulting member as belonging proportionately to the contributing members. We say this because even under such hypothesis the clearing house check held by the City Deposit Bank would not have been entitled to so participate. That check was the result of the clearings of the previous day; and, under the hypothesis as to the meaning of the rule in which we have indulged, the holder was only entitled to obtain payment, pro rata, from those who had presented checks *against [419]

Reinhard & Company in the clearing wherein the check was given.

Was the receipt and appropriation of the $1,161.74 by the City Deposit Bank a preference within the bankruptcy law? is, then, the question. It is said that it was not, because, to constitute a preference under that law, the transfer or payment must have been the act of the bankrupt. Western Tie & Timber Co. v. Brown, 196 U. S. 502, 49 L. ed. 571, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 339. Here it is insisted that it cannot be so held, because there was nothing in the proof warranting the implication that the firm authorized or ratified the misappropriation, or that the clearing house was the agent of the firm when it made such misappropriation. The latter proposition rests on the contention that whatever agency the association possessed in virtue of its authority to make clearings was revoked by the fact of the voluntary assignment made by Reinhard & Company before the money was appropriated to the City Deposit Bank. Whilst it may be conceded that these propositions are well founded, it does not follow that the inferences deducible from the evidence did not warrant the conclusion that, under the bankrupt law of the United States, there was a duty on the part of the City Deposit Bank to pay over to the trustee the sum received by it of the funds of Reinhard & Company deposited on April 10, 1900, with the clearing house for the purposes of the clearing of that date. From the inferences, which we have stated were properly deducible from the evidence, it follows that the jury would have been amply justified in finding that the clearing house had made a wrongful disposition of a trust fund in favor of the City Deposit Bank, which institution had notice, either actual or constructive, of the misappropriation. Western Tie & Timber Co. v. Brown, supra.

We interpret the certificate of the supreme court of Ohio as establishing that that court did not rest its affirmance of the judgment rendered by the trial court against the trustee upon the mere technical ground that the petition counted upon a voidable preference, and there could not [420] be a recovery unless *the facts constituted such preference, even although the evidence justified the inference that the money which the City Deposit Bank received from the clearing house association, under the circumstances we have stated, was the property of Reinhard & Company, which the bank, by operation of the bankrupt law, was obliged to account for to the bankrupt estate. We so conclude, because the supreme court of Ohio not only certified that its decision "was adverse to the claims and contentions of the said plaintiff in error, in this: that said court decided that said assignment and transfer of said sum of $1,161.74 was not an unlawful preference, in violation of the said provisions of the bankrupt law;" but in addition, moreover, certified that the case was decided against the trustee, because, under the facts proved, the trustee "was not deprived of any right under said (bankrupt) law, and was not entitled to have said assignment and transfer set aside, and to recover the said sum of $1,161.74 from said defendant in error."

The judgment of the Supreme Court of Ohio must be reversed and the cause be remanded to that court for further proceedings, not inconsistent with this opinion.

COMMERCIAL NATIONAL BANK.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 420–424.)

Bankruptcy—assets of bankrupt estate.—A bank which receives from a clearing house association the proceeds of checks presented for clearing by a member shortly before suspending payment cannot escape liability to account to the estate in bankruptcy of the defaulting member, where the clearing house, in revising the day's clearings because of such suspension, eliminated and returned the checks which had been debited against the defaulting member, on the theory that, under the doctrine of rescission and following of trust funds, the bank had the right to appropriate any property of the defaulting member and apply it to the reduction of an advance of currency made on that day,—especially where such currency was paid out by such defaulting member over its counters to its customers.

Submitted December 12, 1905. Decided February 19, 1906.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Ohio to review a judgment which affirmed a judgment of the Circuit Court of Franklin County, in that state, which had in turn affirmed a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas of that county, dismissing an action by a trustee in bankruptcy to recover an asset of the bankrupt estate. Reversed and remanded for further proceedings.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. David F. Pugh submitted the cause for plaintiff in error. Messrs. Fred C. Rector and Pugh & Pugh were on the brief:

It may be that, upon the face of the petition, the Federal question appears in language that may be called general. A reference to the certificate shows that it makes more specific what may be otherwise general. The certificate may be relied upon for this purpose.

Parmelee v. Lawrenee, 11 Wall. 36, 20 L. ed. 48; Lawler v. Walker, 14 How. 149, 14 L. ed. 364; Brown v. Atwell, 92 U. S. 327, 23 L. ed. 511.

The trustee had title to the money, which was given to the defendant bank without authority, because it was the money of Reinhard & Company, and, by virtue of the bankruptcy act, the title passed to the trustee upon the adjudication of Reinhard & Company as bankrupts. This fact distinguishes Cramer v. Wilson, 195 U. S. 408, 49 L. ed. 256, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 94.

Where a state court decides against the claim of the assignee in bankruptcy to certain of the bankrupt's property under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5044, the decision is against a right or title claimed under the statute of the United States within the meaning of U. S. Rev. Stat. § 709, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 575, and its judgment is subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States.

This court considered the question as to whether a judgment and execution might be held to have been a preference committed by a bankrupt so as to amount to a violation of the bankrupt act in Wilson Bros. v. Nelson, 183 U. S. 191, 46 L. ed. 147, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 74, and Thompson v. Fairbanks, 196 U. S. 516, 49 L. ed. 577, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 306.

If a Federal question is fairly presented by the record, and its decision is actually necessary to the determination of the case, a judgment which rejects the claim, but avoids all reference to it, is as much against the right, within the meaning of § 709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 575), as if it had been specifically referred to and the right directly refused.

Chapman v. Goodnow (Chapman v. Crane) 123 U. S. 540, 548, 31 L. ed. 235, 238, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 211.

Mr. F. F. D. Albery submitted the cause for defendant in error:

It has been frequently decided that mere questions of construction, either of Federal or state laws, will not be considered unless the question of their validity is involved.

It was not the intention to give a general review of all questions of law and fact involved.

This decision of the state court is final.

Kaufman v. Tredway, 195 U. S. 271, 49 L. ed. 190, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 33.

Even if the decision of the state court undertakes to construe a Federal statute, that does not give jurisdiction.

Kennard v. Nebraska, 186 U. S. 304, 46 L. ed. 1175, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 879.

The bankrupt's trustee in bankruptcy, therefore, obtains no right, title, or privilege, as such, under the various provisions of the statute. His rights can be worked out under the state law just as well (McKenna v. Simpson, 129 U. S. 506, 32 L. ed. 771, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 365). He is simply an intermediary and factor of the court, appointed for the purpose of administering the estate according to the statute. In this case there was never any question as to his right to make the claim which he made. No right, title, or privilege was ever denied him. The record must show that he has been deprived of some title, right, privilege, or immunity secured to him by the Constitution of the United States, which was specially set up or claimed in the state court.

Kennard v. Nebraska, supra.

If he failed to make out his case to the satisfaction of the state courts, that was a mere matter of failure of proof, or, possibly, a failure of the state courts to properly understand and apply the law to the facts; but that is very far from bringing the case within the provisions of U. S. Rev. Stat. § 709 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 575), and there was no decision at any time "against the right especially set up or claimed."

Cramer v. Wilson, 195 U. S. 409, 49 L. ed. 257, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 94.

The question whether any conveyance, etc., was in fact made with intent to defraud creditors, when passed upon in the state court, is not one of a Federal nature.

Thompson v. Fairbanks, 196 U. S. 516, 523, 49 L. ed. 577, 585, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 306; McKenna v. Simpson, supra; Cramer v. Wilson, 195 U. S. 408, 49 L. ed. 256, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 94.

The record must show that a Federal question was raised in the state court in the manner in which a question of that nature should be raised by the state practice.

Sayward v. Denny, 158 U. S. 180, 39 L. ed. 941, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 777.

Whatever the question is, it must be raised before the judgment of the supreme court of the state, and if it relates to a title, right, privilege, or immunity, it must be specially set up.

Yazoo & M. Valley R. Co. v. Adams, 180 U. S. 1, 45 L. ed. 395, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 240; Turner v. Richardson, 180 U. S. 87, 45 L. ed. 438, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 295.

It cannot be raised for the first time in the assignments of error.

Jacobi v. Alabama, 187 U. S. 133, 47 L. ed. 106, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 48; Johnson v. New York L. Ins. Co. 187 U. S. 491, 47 L. ed. 273, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 194.

Moreover, the record must show that the case in the state court "turned on the Federal question" which was passed upon.

Detroit City R. Co. v. Guthard, 114 U. S. 136, 29 L. ed. 118, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 811; New York C. & H. R. R. Co. v. New York, 186 U. S. 269, 46 L. ed. 1158, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 916.

Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Texas, 177 U. S. 78, 44 L. ed. 680, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 545.

To constitute a fraudulent preference, there must be mutual understanding between the bankrupt and the creditor; there must be the intent to prefer and the intent to receive a preference; the preference must be fraudulent; the effect of it must be to work a fraud; the relation of creditor and debtor must exist; there must have been actual insolvency on the part of the bankrupt; the fact of the insolvency must have been known to the creditor; and the debt must have been an antecedent debt.

Suppose that, at the time the $2,000 was obtained by Reinhard & Company, security of some kind had been given by them to the Commercial National Bank,—is there any doubt that the transactions would have been valid?

This case is governed by the principles which controlled the decision just announced in the case of the same plaintiff in error against the City Deposit Bank Company, No. 137. [200 U. S. 405, ante, 527, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 289.]

In the trial court judgment was prayed for $970.45, on the ground that on April 10, 1900, that amount of money, the property of Reinhard & Company, had been by that firm transferred to the defendant in error, and that the transaction constituted a voidable preference. The answer was in substance a general denial of the allegations of the petition in the particulars just stated.

The case was submitted to the court upon the pleadings and the following agreed statement of facts:

"For ten years or more prior to April 10, 1900, Reinhard & Company kept an open account with the Commercial National Bank, depositing their outside items on places where they had no correspondent, for the purpose of saving themselves the exchange or collection charges on some of these items. The balance with the Commercial National Bank on the morning of April 10, 1900, was ten hundred and sixty-seven and 76-100 dollars ($1,067.76). On that morning John G. Reinhard came to the Commercial National Bank with Reinhard & Company's draft on New York for two thousand (2,000.00) dollars, for which the Commercial National Bank gave him the currency. This money was used by Reinhard & Company to pay checks drawn on them, and was paid out over their counter on April 10 to their customers.

"At 12.15 o'clock, P. M., on said day, Reinhard & Company, a partnership, composed of John G. Reinhard and Henry A. Reinhard, said partnership and each of said partners being then insolvent, filed a deed of assignment in the probate court of Franklin county, Ohio, and at about the same hour and afternoon of said day their banking house was closed, at the same time each of said partners filed deeds of assignment.

"The following day a petition was filed [422] in the district court *of the United States for the southern district of Ohio by certain creditors, alleging that said assignment was an act of bankruptcy; and thereafter such proceedings were had that said Reinhard & Company were on August 11, 1900, adjudged bankrupt, and the plaintiff became their trustee, pending which election of trustee one Walter Zinn was appointed and acted as receiver of Reinhard & Company, but the fact of such insolvency and the making of said assignment were not known to said The Commercial National Bank except by hearsay until after said amount of two thousand ($2,000.00) dollars was charged back on the account of Reinhard & Company, and until after it had received the check of the manager of the clearing house for said sum of nine hundred and seventy and 45-100 ($970.45) dollars.

"During said day of April 10, 1900, the Commercial National Bank learned by street rumor that Reinhard & Company's draft on New York would probably not be paid, and it charged the same back on the account of Reinhard & Company, which overdrew their account nine hundred and thirty-two and 24-100 ($932.24) dollars.

"On the 10th day of April, 1900, Reinhard & Company sent their representative to the clearing house as usual at 12.30 P. M. They received checks from the clearing house as usual, which their representative took back to their bank, and the checks which they brought to the clearing house were cleared on the respective banks as usual in all cases. Then about one o'clock P. M. after the manager of the clearing house had made his adjustment of balances for the day and had made out the checks to pay for the same, Reinhard's representative brought back the checks which the different banks of the clearing house had cleared on them that day.

"The manager took these checks back to the different banks that had cleared them and deducted the amounts of their clearings that day. This left a balance of $—— due to Reinhard & Company from the clearing house for that day. Out of this balance he gave a check for $——to the City De- [423] posit Bank, *and for the balance of $970.45 he gave a check to the Commercial National Bank.

"When Mr. Field, the manager of the clearing house, went to the Commercial National Bank to return the checks which they had cleared on Reinhard & Company that day, he informed Mr. Hoffman, the cashier, that that bank had suspended, and that he had a balance on hand due Reinhard & Company of $——, $—— of which he was going to pay to the City Deposit bank, leaving a balance of $970.45 due the said Reinhard & Company, which he did not know what to do with. Mr. Hoffman informed him that he had advanced Reinhard & Company $2,000.00 on that morning, and suggested that he pay the balance to him. He agreed to this, and gave him the check as suggested. Said amount was credited by the Commercial National Bank to Reinhard & Company, leaving a balance, as shown by the books of the Commercial National Bank, due from said bank to Reinhard & Company of thirty-eight and 21-100 ($38.21) dollars, which amount was paid over to Walter Zinn, as receiver of Reinhard & Company, upon his check as such receiver, drawn on the Commercial National Bank on the 16th day of May, 1900."

Judgment was entered against the trustee, and that judgment was affirmed by the appellate courts. The supreme court of Ohio entered upon its journal a certificate, made by its chief justice, which is precisely like that set out in the opinion delivered in the City Deposit Bank Case.

A motion assailing the power of this court to entertain this writ of error is overruled, for the reasons given in passing upon a similar motion filed in case No. 137. And, applying the principles announced in the case just referred to, it inevitably follows that the payment made on April 10, 1900, by the clearing house association, out of the credits of Reinhard & Company in the hands of the clearing house association, was a transfer of property belonging to Reinhard & Company which the trustee in bankruptcy was entitled to demand and receive from the defendant in error. We need not dwell upon the contention *made in argument that [424] because the defendant in error, on the morning of April 10, 1900, gave Reinhard & Company $2,000 in currency in return for Reinhard & Company's draft on New York for a like sum, the transaction, even if fraudulent, invested the defendant in error with the right, upon the suspension of Reinhard & Company, to appropriate any property belonging to Reinhard & Company which they might be able to possess themselves of, and to apply the same in reduction of the advance made upon the security of the draft. The doctrine of rescission and following of trust funds can have no application, especially when, as expressly agreed in the statement of facts, the money which the defendant in error gave to Reinhard & Company in exchange for its draft "was used by Reinhard & Company to pay checks drawn on them, and was paid out over their counter on April 10, 1900, to their customers."

The judgment of the Supreme Court of Ohio must be reversed and the case remanded to that court for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

[425]*FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF OTTAWA, Illinois, Plff. in Err.,

v.

THEODORE R. CONVERSE, Receiver of the Minnesota Thresher Manufacturing Company.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 425–445.)

1. Corporations—ultra vires—power of national banks—purchase of stock in speculative enterprise.—It is ultra vires of a national bank to take stock in a corporation organized to embark in the purely speculative business of buying and selling the stocks and assets of an existing and insolvent corporation, with power, but without the obligation, to engage, as an independent enterprise, in a manufacturing business, although the bank takes such stock in exchange for a claim against the insolvent corporation.

2. Corporations—ultra vires as defense in action against national bank.—Want of authority of a national bank to subscribe for capital stock in a speculative enterprise is a valid defense to an action against it to enforce its statutory liability as a stockholder.

Argued January 25, 26, 1906. Decided February 19, 1906.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Illinois to review a judgment in favor of the receiver of an insolvent corporation in an action against a national bank as a stockholder, to recover the statutory liability, entered upon overruling a demurrer to the declaration. Reversed and remanded with directions to sustain the demurrer and enter judgment for the bank.

Statement by Mr. Justice White:

NOTE.—As to what corporate acts are ultra vires—see notes to Scranton Electric Light & Heat Co.'s Appeal, 1 L.R.A. 285; Rockhold v. Canton Masonic Mut. Benev. Asso. 2 L.R.A. 420; Portland Lumbering & Mfg. Co. v. East Portland, 6 L.R.A. 290; and Central Transp. Co. v. Pullman's Palace Car Co. 35 L. ed. U. S. 55.

As to estoppel of corporation to set up plea of ultra vires—see notes to Central Transp. Co. v. Pullman's Palace Car Co. 35 L. ed. U. S. 55; Wood v. Corry Waterworks Co. 12 L.R.A. 168; and Miller v. American Mut. Acci. Ins. Co. 20 L.R.A. 765.

Power of national bank to take corporate stock in satisfaction of a debt or as collateral security.

As a general proposition, a national bank is disqualified from investing its money in the stock of another corporation, but, under extraordinary circumstances, it may be necessary and proper for it to acquire stock in another corporation in satisfaction of a valid debt or by way of security therefor, but with a view to its subsequent sale or conversion into money. First Nat. Bank v. National Exch. Bank, 92 U. S. 128, 23 L. ed. 681, Affirming 39 Md. 600; First Nat. Bank v. Hawkins, 174 U. S. 364, 43 L. ed. 1007, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 739.

A contract, by the terms of which a national bank receives corporate stock in payment of a debt owing to the bank by the corporation, is not ultra vires as to the bank, when, at the time of making the contract, the corporation is financially embarrassed and unable to meet its financial obligations as they mature. Tourtelot v. Whithed, 9 N. D. 467, 84 N. W. 8.

A national bank may also accept stock in another corporation as collateral security for a loan. Germania Nat. Bank v. Case, 99 U. S. 628, 25 L. ed. 448; California Nat. Bank v. Kennedy, 167 U. S. 362, 42 L. ed. 198, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 831; Shoemaker v. National Mechanics' Bank, 2 Abb. (U. S.) 416, Fed. Cas. No. 12,801; Canfield v. State Nat. Bank, Fed. Cas. No. 2,382.

The bank, under such circumstances, may sell the stock at any time after the maturity of the debt. Canfield v. State Nat. Bank, supra.

And it may protect itself against loss by accepting a formal transfer of the stock in part payment. Westminster Nat. Bank v. New England Electrical Works (N. H.) 62 Atl. 971.

The doctrine of the principal case, that a national bank cannot take stock in a new speculative corporation, although in satisfaction of a debt, is followed in Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Wehrmann, 202 U. S. 295, post, 1036, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 613, where it is held that a national bank may not become the absolute owner, in satisfaction of a debt, of shares represented by transferable certificates in a partnership formed to purchase, improve, divide into lots, and sell, a leasehold.

Harvey, 18 L.R.A. 252, on the Power of corporation to deal in the stock of other corporations, or in its own stock, and note to Anglo-American Land, Mortg. & A. Co. v. Lombard, 68 C. C. A. 120, on Acquisition by corporation of stock of other corporation.

United States for the northern district of Illinois. The object of the action was to recover from the bank, as the owner of 274 shares of preferred stock in the Minnesota Thresher Manufacturing Company, the amount of an assessment of $18 per share, levied upon said stock for the payment of the debts of the thresher company. A demurrer to an amended declaration having been overruled, and the bank electing not to plead further, judgment was entered for the receiver, and, on account of constitutional questions raised by the demurrer, the case was brought directly to this court.

The averments of the amended declaration may be summarized as follows: In May, 1884, the Northwestern Manufacturing & Car Company was a corporation engaged in the manufacturing business at Stillwater, Minnesota. At the date mentioned the car company owed a large amount of debt, which it was unable to pay, among which was a sum due to the bank for money lent. In that month a receiver was appointed for the car company by a court of the state of Minnesota having jurisdiction. Some time afterwards, in November, 1884, the bank with other creditors, and some of the stockholders of the car company, organized, under the laws of Minnesota, a new corporation, styled the Minnesota Thresher Manufacturing Company. The articles of incorporation of the new company provided "that the objects for which said corporation was formed were the purchase of the capital stock, evidences of indebtedness issued by and the assets of the Northwestern Manufacturing & Car Company, a corporation existing under the laws of the state of Minnesota, or any portion of said capital stock, evidences of indebtedness or assets, and the manufacture and sale of steam engines of all kinds, farm implements and machinery of all kinds, and the manufacture [427] and *sale of all articles, implements, and machinery of which wood and iron or either of them form the principal component parts, and the manufacture of the materials therein used."

The thresher company exchanged its preferred stock at par for the debts of the car company and issued common stock in exchange for the preferred stock of the car company. Subsequently, at a judicial sale, the new company acquired all the assets of the car company, and paid for the same with the claims which it had acquired for issuing its preferred stock as above stated. The stock held by the bank upon which the assessment was sought to be enforced was alleged to have been acquired by the bank in the manner above stated; that is, by an exchange of its claim against the car company for the preferred stock of the new corporation. The declaration alleged that at the time of the acquisition of the stock by the bank, as above stated, under the Constitution and laws of Minnesota, there was a double liability imposed upon the stockholders to pay the debts of the corporation in the event of its insolvency.

After the organization of the thresher company and the purchase of the assets of the car company, as above stated, the thresher company carried on the manufacturing business authorized by its charter. In 1901 it became insolvent. A creditor having sued and obtained judgment, and an execution having been issued and returned unsatisfied, the creditor procured, under the provisions of chapter 76 of the General Statutes of Minnesota and the amendments thereto, the appointment of a receiver of the property of the thresher company, who duly qualified and entered upon the discharge of his duties. In the proceeding in which the receiver was appointed, creditors exhibited claims and demands against the thresher company, aggregating $443,752.17, but no property or assets of the corporation existed available to pay this indebtedness or any portion thereof.

Thereafter, upon petition of the receiver, pursuant to the provisions of chapter 272 of the General Laws of Minnesota *for 1899, [428] copied in the margin, † steps were taken to

Chapter 272.

"An Act to Provide for the Better Enforcement of the Liability of Stockholders of Corporations.

"Sec. 1. Whenever any corporation created or existing by or under the laws of the state of Minnesota, whose stockholders, or any of them, are liable to it or to its creditors, or for the benefit of its creditors, upon or on account of any liability for, or upon, or growing out of, or in respect to, the stock or shares at any time held or owned by such stockholders, respectively, whether under or by virtue of the Constitution and laws of said state of Minnesota, or any statute of said state, or otherwise, has heretofore made, or shall hereafter make, an assignment for the benefit of its creditors, under the insolvency laws of this state; or whenever a receiver for any such corporation has heretofore been or shall hereafter be appointed by any district court of this state, whether under or pursuant to any of the provisions of chapter seventy-six (76) of the General Statutes of eighteen hundred and ninety-four (1894) of Minnesota, and the acts amendatory thereof, or under or pursuant to any other statute of this state, or under the general equity powers and practice of such court, the district court appointing such receiver, or having jurisdiction of the matter of said assignment, may proceed as in this act provided.

"Sec. 2. Under the petition of the assignee or the receiver of any such corporation, or of any creditor of such corporation, who has filed his claim in such assignment or receivership provide a fund for the payment of the debts of the corporation, by enforcing contribution from its stockholders upon the double liability alleged to result from the ownership of its stock. The bank did not appear in the proceeding.

[429] *After compliance with the requirements of the act of 1899 the court made an assessment of $18 upon each of the shares of the stock of the thresher company, and the receiver was authorized and directed, in the [430] event of the failure *of a stockholder to pay, after due notice by mail, "to forthwith institute and prosecute such action or actions or other proceedings against such person, persons, corporation, or party liable in any court having jurisdiction, whether in this state or elsewhere, which said receiver may deem necessary or proper for the recovery of the amount due from such person, persons, corporation, or party under the terms of this order." After alleging the default of the bank to pay the assessment, the amended declaration prayed for a judgment against the bank for the sum of the assessment, that is, $18 per share on the 274 shares of stock of the thresher company, which stood on the books of that company in the name of the bank.

As stated at the outset, the bank demurred to the amended declaration, and, on the demurrer being overruled, stood upon the demurrer, and judgment was entered against it as prayed for. The grounds upon which the amended declaration was demurred to were as follows:

proceedings, the said district court shall, by order, appoint a time for hearing not less than thirty (30) nor more than sixty (60) days from the time of filing said petition with the clerk of said court, and shall direct such notice of such hearing to be given to the party presenting said petition, by publication or otherwise, as the court, in its discretion, may deem proper; but if said petition be filed by a creditor, other than the assignee or receiver of said corporation, the court shall direct that notice of such hearing be personally served on such assignee or receiver.

"Sec. 3. At such hearing the court shall consider such proofs, by affidavit or otherwise, as may then be offered by the assignee or receiver, or by any creditor or officer or stockholder of said corporation, who may appear in person or by attorney, as to the probable indebtedness of said corporation, and the expenses of said assignment or receivership, and the probable amount of assets available for the payment of such indebtedness and expenses, and also as to what parties are or may be liable as stockholders of said corporation, and the nature and extent of such liability. And if it appear to the satisfaction of the court that the ordinary assets of said corporation, or such amount as may be realized therefrom within a reasonable time, will probably be insufficient to pay and discharge in full and without delay, its indebtedness and the expenses of such assignment or receivership, and that it is necessary or proper that resort be had to such liability of the stockholders, the said court shall thereupon, by order, direct and levy a ratable assessment upon all parties liable as stockholders or upon or on account of any stock or shares of said corporation, for such amount, proportion, or percentage of the liability upon or on account of each share of said stock as the court, in its discretion, may deem proper (taking into account the probable solvency or insolvency of stockholders, and the probable expenses of collecting the assessment); and shall direct the payment of the amount so assessed against each share of said stock to the assignee or receiver within such time thereafter as said court may specify in said order.

"Sec. 4. Said order shall direct the assignee or receiver to proceed to collect the amount so assessed against each share of said stock from the parties liable therefor; and shall direct and authorize said assignee or receiver, in case of the failure of any party liable upon or on account of any share or shares of said stock to so pay the amount so assessed against the same within the time specified in said order, to prosecute action against each and every such party so failing to pay the same, wherever such party may be found, whether in this state or elsewhere.

"Sec. 5. Said order and the assessment thereby levied shall be conclusive upon and against all parties liable upon or on account of any stock or shares of said corporation, whether appearing or represented at said hearing, or having notice thereof or not, as to all matters relating to the amount of and the propriety of and necessity for the said assessment. This provision shall also apply to any subsequent assessment levied by said court as hereinafter provided.

"Sec. 6. It shall be the duty of such assignee or receiver to, and he may, immediately after the expiration of the time specified in said order for the payment of the amount to be assessed by the parties liable therefor, institute and maintain an action or actions against any and every party liable upon or on account of any share or shares of such stock who has failed to pay the amount so assessed against the same, for the amount for which such party is liable. Said actions may be maintained against each stockholder, severally, in this state or in any other state or country where such stockholder, or any property subject to attachment, garnishment, or other process in an action against such stockholder, may be found. But if said assignee or receiver shall, in good faith, believe any stockholder so liable to be insolvent, or that the expense of prosecuting such action against such stockholder will be so great that it will be of disadvantage to the estate and interest of creditors to prosecute the same, said assignee or receiver shall so report to said court; and shall not be required to institute or prosecute any such action unless specifically directed so to do by said court. And in such case said court shall not require said receiver to institute or maintain such action unless said court shall have reasonable cause to believe that the result of such action will be of advantage to the estate and creditors of said corporation, except as hereinafter provided."

Mr. C. A. Severance argued the cause, and, with Messrs. Frank B. Kellogg, Robert E. Olds, and J. H. Chandler, filed a brief for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice White, after making the foregoing statement, delivered the opinion of the court:

The questions principally discussed at bar relate to the alleged repugnancy to the Constitution of the United States of the Minnesota law of 1899, by virtue of which the receiver *asserted his power and author-[434] ity to sue in a court of another jurisdiction than that of Minnesota to enforce the assessment made by the court of Minnesota on the stockholders of the thresher company. But antecedent to that question we must consider and dispose of the propositions arising from the tenth ground of the demurrer; that is, that under the averments of the bill there was no liability on the bank as the facts alleged from which it is asserted the liability arose showed that the act of the bank in subscribing to the stock was ultra vires and prohibited by the provisions of the national banking act. We say this is antecedent because, if from the averments of the declaration, aside from the validity or invalidity of the act of 1899, there could be no liability on the bank to pay the assessment, it will be unnecessary to consider whether the Minnesota statute added such conditions to the obligation resulting from the stock subscription at the time it was made as to cause the statute to be repugnant to the contract or any other clause of the Constitution of the United States.

At the time the bank took the stock in the thresher company it was provided in § 3 of article 10 of the Constitution of Minnesota as follows: "Each stockholder in any corporation (excepting those organized for the purpose of carrying on any kind of manufacturing or mechanical business) shall be liable to the amount of stock held or owned by him."

If the thresher company was organized solely for manufacturing purposes, it is of course apparent that under this provision of the Minnesota Constitution the stockholders of the company would not be liable for its debts. Senour Mfg. Co. v. Church Paint & Mfg. Co. 81 Minn. 294, 84 N. W. 109. It has, however, been decided by the supreme court of Minnesota that unless it unquestionably appears that a Minnesota corporation claiming to be a manufacturing corporation was organized for the exclusive purpose of engaging in manufacturing and such incidental business as might be reasonably necessary for effecting that purpose, the exception in the Minnesota Constitution to which reference has been made would not apply, *and the double liabil-[435] ity would result. State ex rel. Clapp v. Minnesota Thresher Mfg. Co. 40 Minn. 213, 3 L. R. A. 510, 41 N. W. 1020; Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Minnesota Thresher Mfg. Co. 90 Minn. 144, 95 N. W. 767. These cases, it is to be observed, referred to the very act of incorporation, upon which the liability of the bank, if at all, must rest. It clearly appears, from the comments of the supreme court of Minnesota upon the charter, that in the articles of association the thresher company was declared to be organized under the law of Minnesota relating to manufacturing corporations as a class exempt from double liability, and that the motives of the incorporators were to obtain immunity from the double liability. The court, however, held that the mere law under which the corporation was organized, and the motive therefor, would not suffice to bring the incorporators within the control of the exemption accorded by the constitutional provision if, from the articles of association, it did not clearly appear that the corporation was confined solely to a manufacturing business and its incidents. The doctrine of the court was thus clearly stated (90 Minn. p. 147, 95 N. W. p. 768):

"It is immaterial that the corporation was organized under the statute providing for organizing manufacturing corporations, or what the actual intention of the incorporators was, or that the corporation in fact carried on only a manufacturing business, but its articles of incorporation are the sole criterion as to such intention and the purposes for which the corporation was organized; and, unless it fairly appears therefrom that it was organized for the exclusive purpose of engaging in manufacturing and such incidental business as may be reasonably necessary for effectuating the purpose of its organization, its stockholders are not within the exception to the general rule of constitutional liability of stockholders for the debts of their corporation."

And further along in the opinion the declaration was reiterated (p. 148, N. W. p. 768) that the intention of the corporators could not be ascertained by reference to matters not appearing on the face of the articles of association, and that the articles [436] were the *sole criterion as to the purpose for which a corporation was formed; "that is, for ascertaining the intention of the associates." Applying this rule to the articles of association of the thresher company, the court found that the acquisition of the stock, etc., of the car company was a business independently to be engaged in, and was not incidental to that of manufacturing, and, hence, that the corporation was not within the exception embodied in the constitutional provision imposing a double liability upon stockholders.

Now, the exclusive and only ground upon which the supreme court of Minnesota, in construing the articles of association of the thresher company, held that the articles embodied a distinct business from that of manufacturing, is plainly made manifest by the opinions expressed by the court in the two cases to which we have referred. In the earlier case the court said (40 Minn. p. 223, 3 L. R. A. p. 517, 41 N. W. p. 1024):

"It is clear, therefore, to our minds that, under the act of 1873, a corporation can only be organized for carrying on an exclusively manufacturing or mechanical business, which, of course, includes anything that is properly incidental to or necessarily connected with such business. A corporation organized to carry on manufacturing and also some other lawful, but independent, business, belongs to the class authorized by title 2, chap. 34 (§§ 109–119.) With this construction of the law in mind, it is not difficult, on examination of respondent's articles of association, to determine to what class it belongs. One of the declared objects of its formation is to purchase the capital stock and evidences of indebtedness of the car company, a business in no way incident to or properly connected with that of manufacturing. The contention of counsel to the contrary cannot be seriously entertained for a moment. If a manufacturing corporation desires to buy the plant of another corporation formerly engaged in the same business, that is legitimate; and if, in order to get it, it becomes necessary to buy with it some other property, not needed for nor connected with the manufacturing *business, this also would be [437] permissible, if done as incidental to the main purpose of securing the plant; but no such reason or excuse existed for buying the stock and indebtedness of the car company. Indeed, it would be difficult to imagine anything more foreign to or inconsistent with a legitimate manufacturing business than for a corporation to invest all its capital in the stock and indebtedness of another and insolvent corporation. Under title 2, a corporation can be organized to carry on any lawful business, and, if parties desire to deal in such speculative property, they can do so under that title, but not under the act of 1873, even by connecting it with manufacturing. Our conclusion, therefore, is that respondent is a corporation of the class authorized by title 2. That is what the corporators themselves have characterized it by their statement of the objects of its formation."

In the latter case, after restating the rule that the face of the articles of association was the sole criterion as to the purpose for which the corporation was formed, the court said (90 Minn. p. 148, 95 N. W. p. 768):

"Now, taking the articles in question by the four corners, and reading them in the light of the rule we have stated, without resorting to technicalities, does it fairly appear therefrom that the corporation was organized for the exclusive purpose of engaging in manufacturing and business incidental thereto and reasonably necessary for carrying into effect such purpose? We answer the question in the negative. There are two general purposes for which the corporation was organized, as declared by the articles,—one, the purchase of the capital stock, evidence of indebtedness, and assets of an existing corporation; and the other, the manufacture and sale of all articles, implements, and machinery made of wood and iron, or either of them, and the manufacture of the materials therein used. The first purpose does not appear to be a necessary incident to the second one. On the contrary, the corporation was authorized to buy and sell the stock, choses in action, and assets of the Northwestern Manufac-[438] turing & Car Company mentioned in the *articles, without ever engaging in the business of manufacturing. The first purpose appears to be independent of the second one, for the power to buy necessarily includes the incidental power to use, collect, deal with, or sell the stock and assets of the then-existing corporation. Nor does it fairly appear, expressly or by necessary implication, from the language of these articles, that such stock and assets were to be purchased only as a necessary incident to the declared purpose of manufacturing all articles which are made of wood or iron, or either of them."

Accepting this construction given by the supreme court of Minnesota to the articles of association, by which alone the incorporators under those articles can be taken out of the exemption accorded by the Constitution of Minnesota, it follows that the thresher company was organized to embark in the purely speculative business of buying and selling the stock and assets of an existing and insolvent corporation, with power, but without the obligation, to engage, as an independent enterprise, in a manufacturing business.

Now, the limitations upon the powers of national banks were clearly pointed out in California Nat. Bank v. Kennedy, 167 U. S. 362, 42 L. ed. 198, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 831, where it was said (p. 366, L. ed. p. 200, Sup. Ct. Rep. p. 833):

"It is settled that the United States statutes relative to national banks constitute the measure of the authority of such corporations, and that they cannot rightfully exercise any powers except those expressly granted or which are incidental to carrying on the business for which they are established. Logan County Nat. Bank v. Townsend, 139 U. S. 67, 73, 35 L. ed. 107, 110, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 496. No express power to acquire the stock of another corporation is conferred upon a national bank, but it has been held that, as incidental to the power to loan money on personal security, a bank may, in the usual course of doing such business, accept stock of another corporation as collateral, and by the enforcement of its rights as pledgee it may become the owner of the collateral, and be subject to liability as other stockholders. Germania Nat. Bank v. Case, 99 U. S. 628, 25 L. ed. 448. So, also, a national bank may be conceded *to possess the incidental power of [439] accepting, in good faith, stock of another corporation as security for a previous indebtedness. It is clear, however, that a national bank does not possess the power to deal in stocks. The prohibition is implied from the failure to grant the power. First Nat. Bank v. National Exch. Bank, 92 U. S. 128, 23 L. ed. 681."

As no authority, express or implied, has ever been conferred by the statutes of the United States upon a national bank to engage in or promote a purely speculative business or adventure, accepting the view of the articles of association by which the bank was denied the benefit of the exemption accorded by the Constitution of Minnesota, it follows that the bank had no power to engage in such business by taking stock or otherwise. The power of a national bank to engage in the character of business which the articles of association of the thresher company manfested, as defined by the supreme court of Minnesota, cannot be inferred to have been possessed by the bank as an incident of securing a present loan of money, or as a means of protecting itself from loss upon a pre-existing indebtedness. To concede that a national bank has ordinarily the right to take stock in another corporation as collateral for a present loan or as a security for a pre-existing debt does not imply that, because a national bank has lent money to a corporation, it may become an organizer and take stock in a new and speculative venture; in other words, do the very thing which the previous decisions of this court have held cannot be done.

The speculative venture, therefore, which the bank undertook, as held by the Minnesota court, when it engaged in taking the stock in the thresher company, being ultra vires, it follows, under the settled rules hitherto applied by this court, that the bank, despite the subscription, was entitled to plead its want of authority as a defense to the claim of the receiver. The doctrine on the subject was stated in De la Vergne Refrigerating Mach. Co. v. German Sav. Inst. 175 U. S. 40, 44 L. ed. 65, 20 Sup. Ct.

Rep. 20, where it was said (p. 59, L. ed. p. 71, Sup. Ct. Rep. p. 25):

[440] *"The doctrine that no recovery can be had upon the contract is based upon the theory that it is for the interest of the public that corporations should not transcend the limits of their charters; that the property of stockholders should not be put to the risk of engagements which they did not undertake; that, if the contract be prohibited by statute, everyone dealing with the corporation is bound to take notice of the restrictions in its charter, whether such charter be a private act or a general law under which corporations of this class are organized."

And, moreover, the authorities cited in the case just referred to conclusively establish that the principle which the case announced as to the power of a corporation to avail of the defense of ultra vires had been previously conclusively settled in this court. Indeed, the case arising on the record presents an obvious dilemma, which is this: If the construction of the articles of association given by the supreme court of the state of Minnesota, by which alone the double liability can be enforced, is accepted, then there was no liability because of ultra vires. If, on the other hand, we were to disregard the construction given by the supreme court of Minnesota to the articles of association, we should be constrained to the conclusion that those articles but endowed the incorporators of the thresher company with the power to carry on a manufacturing business; and, as a mere incident, to acquire for the purposes of such business the property of the car company; and it would follow that there was no double liability, by force of the exception created in the Constitution of Minnesota.

The judgment must be reversed and the case remanded with directions to sustain the demurrer and enter judgment for the bank.

Mr. Justice Harlan concurs solely upon the authority of California Nat. Bank v. Kennedy and the previous cases announcing the doctrine which was adhered to and applied in that case.

[441] *Mr. Justice Brewer, dissenting:

I am unable to concur in the opinion and judgment in this case, and will briefly state the grounds of my dissent.

There is nothing in the organization of a national bank that puts it outside of the ordinary rules governing corporations, whether we consider the rights, obligations, or the remedies in actions by or against it. Section 5136, Rev. Stat. (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3455), prescribes the terms of its charter. It is authorized to do a banking business, and, like any other corporation, its powers are limited by the terms of the charter. A national bank may not engage in manufacturing, for its charter gives it no authority therefor. Neither can a manufacturing corporation engage in banking, and for a like reason. Neither one can engage in the business of buying and selling stocks, because authority therefor is not granted in the charter of either; but, nevertheless, each has authority to take stock in another corporation as security for or in payment of a debt. It was so long since decided by this court,—First Nat. Bank v. National Exch. Bank, 92 U. S. 122, 126–128, 23 L. ed. 679, 681, 682,—in which the question presented, as stated in the opinion of the court, announced by Mr. Chief Justice Waite, was:

"Whether a national bank, organized under the national banking act, may, in a fair and bona fide compromise of a contested claim against it growing out of a legitimate banking transaction, pay a larger sum than would have been exacted in satisfaction of the demand, so as to obtain by the arrangement a transfer of certain stocks in railroad and other corporations; it being honestly believed at the time, that, by turning the stocks into money under more favorable circumstances than existed, a loss which would otherwise accrue from the transaction might be averted or diminished."

And answering that question in the affirmative, it was said.

"Its own obligations must be met, and debts due to it collected or secured. The power to adopt reasonable and appropriate measures for these purposes is an incident to the *power to incur the liability or be-[442] come the creditor. Obligations may be assumed that result unfortunately. Loans or discounts may be made that cannot be met at maturity. Compromises to avoid or reduce losses are oftentimes the necessary results of this condition of things. These compromises come within the general scope of the powers committed to the board of directors and the officers and agents of the bank, and are submitted to their judgment and discretion, except to the extent that they are restrained by the charter or by-laws. Banks may do in this behalf whatever natural persons could do under like circumstances.

"Dealing in stocks is not expressly prohibited; but such a prohibition is implied from the failure to grant the power. In the honest exercise of the power to compromise a doubtful debt owing to a bank, it can hardly be doubted that stocks may be accepted in payment and satisfaction, with a view to their subsequent sale or conversion into money so as to make good or reduce an anticipated loss. Such a transaction would not amount to a dealing in stocks. It was, in effect, so decided in Fleckner v. Bank of United States, 8 Wheat. 351, 5 L. ed. 634, where it was held that a prohibition against trading and dealing was nothing more than a prohibition against engaging in the ordinary business of buying and selling for profit, and did not include purchases resulting from ordinary banking transactions."

In California Nat. Bank v. Kennedy, 167 U. S. 362, 42 L. ed. 198, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 831, the right to take stock of another corporation as collateral security was affirmed.

In the case before us the bank had a claim against the Northwestern Manufacturing & Car Company. This was in 1884. The car company was in financial trouble and had been placed in charge of a receiver appointed by a state court. The bank, in connection with other creditors of the car company, organized a new corporation—the Minnesota Thresher Manufacturing Company—to buy the entire plant of [443] the car *company. It was so purchased and the bank surrendered its claim, taking in payment thereof preferred stock in the thresher company. The latter company carried on business until it failed, and then proceedings were had by which the defendant in error was appointed receiver and an assessment made by order of the court, which assessment is the basis of this action. Now, in accordance with the decision of this court in 92 U. S., supra, the bank had a right to surrender its claim and take stock in payment thereof. It did so, and, so far as the record shows, everything was done in good faith and in the belief that the best interests of the bank would be promoted thereby. Having thus become a stockholder in the thresher company, it was entitled to all the benefits and subject to all the liabilities which attached to ownership of the stock. The fact that the arrangement antedated the organization of the thresher company is immaterial, for, until the arrangement was carried into effect, the claim of the bank against the car company was undisturbed. To hold that a national bank may take, in satisfaction of a claim, stock in a corporation already existing, and cannot agree to take in such satisfaction stock in a corporation to be created, and which is afterwards created, and whose stock is issued to it in payment of the claim, is to create a distinction without a difference, and to sacrifice substance to form. The transaction is precisely the same as though the thresher company had been fully organized, and thereafter the bank surrendered its claim against the car company for stock in the thresher company, and that, as held in 92 U. S., is perfectly legitimate. It held that stock for nearly a score of years, its right to so hold being, so far as the record shows, unchallenged by the government or any stockholder, and enjoying during that time all the benefits and profits resulting from such holding. Finally the thresher company became embarrassed. Its creditors proceeded against it, and then for the first time is it discovered that the holding by the bank of stock in the thresher company was unauthorized and illegal, and now it repudiates its liability as stockholder, and leaves the burden of the thresher *company's debts to be borne [444] by the other stockholders. Certainly there is little in this to appeal to the sense of justice.

The bank was not, as suggested, investing in any merely speculative business. It was not accepting stock in a corporation organized for the business of buying and selling. It was no more engaged in a speculative transaction than if it had taken a piece of real estate in satisfaction of a debt, hoping that the time would come when that real estate would be worth as much or more than the debt. The object of the organization of the thresher company, as stated in its charter, was to purchase the plant of the Northwestern Manufacturing & Car Company—that is, to buy a single property which was then in the hands of the court, and likely to be sacrificed in judicial proceedings. Clearly the creditors thought that, by acquiring title and possession of the entire plant, they could realize more than by a receiver's sale to outside parties; and at the same time, contemplating the possibilities of the future, they provided in the charter for the carrying on of a general manufacturing business. The scheme is clearly set forth in the following passage from the opinion of the supreme court of Minnesota, quoted in the opinion of this court:

"There are two general purposes for which the corporation was organized, as declared by the articles,—one, the purchase of the capital stock, evidence of indebtedness, and assets of an existing corporation; and the other, the manufacture and sale of all articles, implements, and machinery made of wood and iron, or either of them, and the manufacture of the materials therein used. The first purpose does not appear to be a necessary incident to the second one. On the contrary, the corporation was authorized to buy and sell the stock, choses in action, and assets of the Northwestern Manufacturing & Car Company mentioned in the articles, without ever engaging in the business of manufacturing. The first purpose appears to be independent of the second one, for the power to buy necessarily includes the incidental power to use, collect, deal with, or sell the stock and assets of the then-existing cor-

[445] poration. *Nor does it fairly appear, expressly or by necessary implication, from the language of these articles, that such stock and assets were to be purchased only as a necessary incident to the declared purpose of manufacturing all articles which are made of wood and iron, or either of them." [90 Minn. 148, 95 N. W. 767.]

Clearly the thresher company was no speculative corporation, but an ordinary and legitimate business venture. Suppose the bank had been the only creditor, is it possible that it could not have taken the whole car company's plant in satisfaction of its claim, and then held it in the hopes of being able to realize fully on the property? And if it could do so, acting alone and for its single interest, what is there in the organization of a national bank which prevents it doing the like thing in conjunction with other creditors?

Of course, as held by the supreme court of Minnesota, unless the thresher company was organized solely for the purpose of carrying on a manufacturing business, its stockholders would, under § 3 of article 10 of the Constitution of Minnesota, be subject to the double liability. For if a power to engage in manufacturing exempts stockholders from double liability, no matter what other business the corporation is chartered to carry on, every corporation organizing under the Minnesota statutes would include that among its charter powers. We ordinarily accept the construction by a state supreme court of its Constitution and laws as conclusive. In this case the construction placed by the supreme Court of Minnesota upon this clause in the Constitution is so obviously right as to preclude the necessity of defense.

For these reasons, thus briefly stated, I am constrained to dissent from the opinion and judgment of the court, and am authorized to say that Mr. Justice Brown concurs in this dissent.

*SECURITY MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE [446] COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,
v.
HENRY R. PREWITT, Insurance Commissioner of the State of Kentucky.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 446–450.)

Error to state court—moot case.—A writ of error to review a judgment of a state court refusing to cancel the revocation of a permit to do business in the state, granted, renewable annually, to a foreign insurance company, must be dismissed, where the permit itself has become of no effect by the lapse of one year since it was granted.

Argued January 16, 1906. Decided February 19, 1906.

IN ERROR to the Court of Appeals of the State of Kentucky to review a judgment which reversed a judgment of the Circuit Court of Jefferson County, in that state, canceling the revocation of a permit to do business in the state, granted to a foreign insurance company. Dismissed.†

See same case below, 26 Ky. L. Rep. 1239, 83 S. W. 611.

Statement by Mr. Justice Peckham:

The plaintiff in error seeks by this writ to review the judgment of the court of appeals of Kentucky, reversing the judgment of the court below and dismissing the petition of plaintiff in error. The trial court granted such petition, which was to cancel the revocation, by the state insurance commissioner, of the permit granted by him to the plaintiff in error to do business in the state.

The facts are as follows: The company is an insurance company, existing under the laws of the state of New York, and having its principal office in the city of Binghamton, in that state. In the year 1900 the company, pursuant to the laws of the state of Kentucky, applied to the insurance commissioner of that state for a permit to do business therein, and it was granted for one year from the date of such permit, which was annually renewed thereafter. On July 1, 1904, it was renewed for the last time, and the permit contained a statement that it was granted for one year, provided it was not sooner revoked. Section 635, Kentucky

NOTE.—On error to state courts in cases presenting merely abstract or moot questions—see note to Campbell v. California, ante, 382.

Statutes, provides that these licenses or permits must be renewed annually. At the time of the first application by the company [447] for admission (A. D. *1900), the following statute of Kentucky was, and it ever since has been, in existence. It is known as § 631, Kentucky Statutes. The section reads as follows:

"Before authority is granted to any foreign insurance company to do business in this state it must file with the commissioner a resolution adopted by its board of directors, consenting that service of process upon any agent of such company in this state or upon the commissioner of insurance in this state, in any action brought or pending in this state, shall be a valid service upon said company; and, if process is served upon the commissioner, it shall be his duty to at once send it by mail, addressed to the company at its principal office; and if any company shall, without the consent of the other party to any suit or proceeding brought by or against it in any court of this state, remove said suit or proceeding to any Federal court, or shall institute any suit or proceeding against any citizen of this state in any Federal court, it shall be the duty of the commissioner to forthwith revoke all authority to such company and its agents to do business in this state, and to publish such revocation in some newspaper of general circulation published in the state."

In September, 1904, certain parties, named Crain and Gayle sued the company in a state court of Kentucky, and the company, without their consent, removed the suit to the circuit court of the United States for the eastern district of Kentucky. Thereupon Crain and Gayle notified the state insurance commissioner of such removal, and demanded that the commissioner should revoke the authority of the company to do business in the state, as provided for by the above statute.

The company avers that the insurance commissioner did, on the sole ground of such removal, revoke the authority of the company to do business after September 29, 1904. The company thereupon demanded of the commissioner that he should set aside such revocation and cancel the same, which the commissioner refused to do.

[448] *The company then commenced these proceedings in the proper state court of Kentucky, asking that the insurance commissioner be required to cancel the revocation of the authority of the plaintiff and its agents to do business in the state, and that he should grant, or continue, the authority to the plaintiff and its agents, to transact the business of life insurance in the state; and that the commissioner should be required to publish in a newspaper the fact of such cancelation, and that he should be restrained and enjoined from notifying the general agents of the plaintiff of the suspension of its license. The company specially set up the claim that, under the Constitution and laws of the United States, it was entitled to remove the suit mentioned from the state court into the United States circuit court for the eastern district of Kentucky, and that any statute of the state of Kentucky in anywise restricting or affecting that right was void as a violation of the Federal Constitution.

The defendant demurred to the petition on the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The trial court overruled the demurrer, and the defendant commissioner declining to plead further, the prayer of the insurance company was granted, and judgment was entered (1) directing the defendant to cancel the revocation of the permit; (2) granting authority to the company to transact business in the state; (3) restraining the commissioner from notifying the general agents of the company of the suspension of its license and its right to do business in the state; (4) enjoining the commissioner from applying to any judge for an injunction restraining the company from further proceeding with its business. The defendant prayed an appeal to the court of appeals of the state, which was granted, and that court reversed the judgment of the trial court, and remanded the case, with instructions to dismiss the petition, and judgment to that effect was thereupon entered. 26 Ky. L. Rep. 1239, 83 S. W. 611.

Mr. William Marshall Bullitt argued the cause, and, with Messrs. F. W. Jenkins, Julien T. Davies, and Charles S. Grubbs, filed a brief for plaintiff in error:

Although it has been loosely stated (as in Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall. 168, 181, 19 L. ed. 357, 360, and Hooper v. California, 155 U. S. 652, 656, 39 L. ed. 298, 301, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 610, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 207) that a state may entirely exclude foreign corporations, or may prescribe such conditions of admittance as it thinks fit, the Supreme Court has repeatedly pointed out (as in Home Ins. Co. v. Morse, 20 Wall. 445, 456, 22 L. ed. 365, 369 and Horn Silver Min. Co. v. New York, 143 U. S. 305, 314, 36 L. ed. 164, 168, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 57, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 403), that such expressions were subject to the qualification that there were certain classes of corporations that could not be excluded at all, and with reference to all other corporations the conditions prescribed must not be repugnant to the Federal Constitution.

For example, a state cannot exclude from its limits a foreign corporation engaged in interstate commerce (Pensacola Teleg. Co. v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 96 U. S. 1, 24 L. ed. 708), nor one employed in doing work under authority of Congress (Stockton v. Baltimore & N. Y. R. Co. 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 411, 32 Fed. 9), or engaged in any Federal function (Horn Silver Min. Co. v. New York, 143 U. S. 305, 36 L. ed. 164, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 57, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 403). A state cannot provide, as a term of admission, that the corporation will not remove a case to the Federal courts (Home Ins. Co. v. Morse, 20 Wall. 445, 22 L. ed. 365). Neither can a state prevent a foreign corporation from doing business because it refused to obtain a license under a statute providing for a revocation of the business if it removed a case to the Federal court (Barron v. Burnside, 121 U. S. 186, 30 L. ed. 915, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 295, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 931).

A state may, by a valid affirmative expression, prohibit the entrance of or expel all foreign corporations which are not engaged in interstate commerce or in performing a Federal function.

Paul v. Virginia, and Horn Silver Min. Co. v. New York, supra.

Until a state has decided otherwise by some valid affirmative direct enactment to the contrary a foreign corporation has the right, by virtue of the common-law rule of comity, to enter any state and transact its business.

13 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 838, 839; Cowell v. Colorado Springs Co. 100 U. S. 55, 59, 25 L. ed. 547, 549; American & F. Christian Union v. Yount, 101 U. S. 352, 356, 25 L. ed. 888, 890.

The principle of comity does not mean "courtesy," but is as much a part of the law as any other legal principle; it exists at common law, and is operative until changed by statute.

Beale, Foreign Corp. § 104.

A state may, subject to the provisions of the Federal Constitution, prescribe the terms or conditions upon which foreign corporations (except those engaged in interstate commerce, etc.) will be admitted to carry on their business.

Cooper Mfg. Co. v. Ferguson, 113 U. S. 727, 732, 28 L. ed. 1137, 1138, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 739; Horn Silver Min. Co. v. New York, 143 U. S. 305, 315, 36 L. ed. 164, 168, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 57, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 403; Hooper v. California, 155 U. S. 648, 655, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 610, 39 L. ed. 297, 300, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 207; Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Texas, 177 U. S. 28, 46, 44 L. ed. 657, 664, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 518; New York L. Ins. Co. v. Cravens, 178 U. S. 389, 397, 44 L. ed. 1116, 1122, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 962.

But the terms or conditions of admission must not be inconsistent with the Federal Constitution, for there is a limit beyond which a state cannot go, to wit, it cannot prescribe terms, the effect of which will be to abridge or deprive the corporation of a right guaranteed to it by the Constitution and laws of the United States.

Lafayette Ins. Co. v. French, 18 How. 404, 407, 15 L. ed. 451, 452; Home Ins. Co. v. Morse, supra; Barron v. Burnside, 121 U. S. 186, 200, 30 L. ed. 915, 919, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 295, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 931; Blake v. McClung, 172 U. S. 239, 254, 255, 43 L. ed. 432, 437, 438, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 165; Dayton Coal & I. Co. v. Barton, 183 U. S. 23, 25, 46 L. ed. 61, 64, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 5.

The power of Congress over the removal of causes is quite as broad as its power to regulate commerce, and yet it has been repeatedly held that a state cannot discriminate against the citizens or products of other states (Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Husen, 95 U. S. 465, 24 L. ed. 527; Minnesota v. Barber, 136 U. S. 313, 34 L. ed. 455, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 185, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 862; Brimmer v. Rebman, 138 U. S. 78, 34 L. ed. 862, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 485, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 213; Voight v. Wright, 141 U. S. 62, 35 L. ed. 638, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 855; Tiernan v. Rinker, 102 U. Rep. 454), nor impose a tax on interstate commerce, either by a tax laid on the transportation of the subjects of that commerce (State Freight Tax Case, 15 Wall. 232, 279, 21 L. ed. 146, 162; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Texas, 105 U. S. 460, 465, 26 L. ed. 1067, 1068; New York v. Compagnie Generale Transatlantique, 107 U. S. 59, 27 L. ed. 383, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 87), or by a tax on the receipts derived from that transportation, or upon the capital stock of the carrier (Philadelphia & S. Mail S. S. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 122 U. Rep. 256); nor can a state in any way attempt to regulate interstate commerce by imposing burdensome conditions under which it may be conducted, whether by fixing rates (Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Illinois, 118 U. S. 557, 30 L. ed. 244, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 31, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 4; Covington & C. Bridge Co. v. Kentucky, 154 U. S. 204, 38 L. ed. 962, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 649, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1087), or by preventing the introduction of certain articles of commerce (Bowman v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 125 U. S. 465, 31 L. ed. 700, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 823, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 689, 1062; Leisy v. Hardin, 135 U. S. 100, 34 L. ed. 128, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 681, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 36), or by requiring telegraphic messages to be sent in the order received, and delivered by messengers within 1 mile of the office (Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Pendleton, 122 U. S. 347, 30 L. ed. 1187, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 306, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1126), or by requiring common carriers to give equal passenger accommodations without distinction on account of race or color (Hall v. De Cuir, 95 U. S. 485, 24 L. ed. 547).

So in Easton v. Iowa, 188 U. S. 220, 47 L. ed. 452, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 288, it was held that, as Congress had the sole power to regulate national banks, a statute of Iowa was void which provided a penalty for any banker receiving a deposit at a time when he knew the bank was insolvent.

In Lafayette Ins. Co. v. French, 18 How. 404, 15 L. ed. 451, the court said that the terms which a state could impose in admitting a foreign corporation must not be inconsistent with those rules of public law which secure the jurisdiction and authority of each state from encroachment by all others.

A state cannot tax or punish a person for, or prevent him from, exercising any right conferred by the Constitution and laws of the United States.

For example, a state could not imprison or fine one of its own citizens (individual or corporate) for bringing a suit in a Federal court, or impose a tax or fine on a person because he voted for a congressional candidate (Wiley v. Sinkler, 179 U. S. 58, 45 L. ed. 84, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 17), or because he gave information to the United States of a crime against its laws (Re Quarles, 158 U. S. 532, 39 L. ed. 1080, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 959), or because he protected a Federal judge (Re Neagle [Cunningham v. Neagle], 135 U. S. 1, 34 L. ed. 55, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 658), or desired to travel from one state to another (Crandall v. Nevada, 6 Wall. 35, 18 L. ed. 745),—the obvious reason being that a state cannot punish one for doing what one has a right do.

A punishing clause dependent upon a void prohibiting clause is itself void.

A review of the authorities will demonstrate the correctness of the foregoing argument; and, while in some of the earlier cases the subject was dealt with by this court from a somewhat narrower view, it will be observed that the decisions were finally placed on the broad ground that any statute designed to entail the surrender of a privilege secured by the Constitution and laws of the United States is void, and nice distinctions between the different statutes were disregarded, and they were all held subject to the same infirmity.

Doyle v. Continental Ins. Co. 94 U. S. 540, 24 L. ed. 151, so far as its doctrine interferes with our contentions, has already been overruled and destroyed by the case of Barron v. Burnside, supra.

Mr. J. H. Hazelrigg argued the cause, and, with Messrs. N. B. Hays, H. R. Prewitt, and Hazelrigg & Hazerligg, filed a brief for defendant in error:

Mr. Justice Peckham, after making the foregoing statement, delivered the opinion of the court:

It appears that the laws of Kentucky require the annual renewal of the permit to any foreign insurance company, in order that the company may continue to do business in the state, and without such license the company is prohibited from doing any business therein.

The writ of error in this case was filed January 27, 1905, and the license was granted July 1, 1904, and expired by its terms, if not sooner revoked, on the 1st day of July, 1905. The permit, even if illegally revoked prior to that time, became a dead letter on July 1, 1905, so far as constituting any authority to the company to remain in the state and do business therein. If the court should now assume to cancel the revocation it could not thereby reinstate the permit, which has already expired, and the company would still be without power to do business in the state until another permit should be granted. To adjudge that the old permit remained good until the expiration of the year is to adjudge an abstract question, as no relief can be now awarded concerning it. The refusal on the part of the insurance commissioner to grant authority to plaintiff to transact business after the old permit had expired does not raise a Federal question. Since the writ of error was filed the permit has ceased to have any effect, and, therefore, an event has occurred which renders it impossible for this court to grant any effecutal relief in favor of plaintiff in error. In such case the court will dismiss the writ of error. Mills v. Green*, 159 U. S. 651, 40 L. ed. 293, 16 Sup. [450] Ct. Rep. 132; Tennessee v. Condon, 189 U. S. 64, 47 L. ed. 709, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 579; Joncs v. Montague, 194 U. S. 147, 48 L. ed. 913, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 611.

It would seem to be plain that the cancelation of a revocation of a permit when the permit itself has become of no effect by virtue of the lapse of time would be useless business, and would give no practical relief to the company.

Writ dismissed.

Argued January 16, 1906. Decided February 19, 1906.

IN ERROR to the Court of Appeals of the State of Kentucky to review a judgment which affirmed a judgment of the Circuit Court of Jefferson County, in that state, dismissing, on demurrer, a petition to enjoin the threatened revocation of a permit to do business in the state, granted to a foreign insurance company. Dismissed.†

See same case below, 26 Ky. L. Rep. 1239, 83 S. W. 611.

Messrs. Edmund F. Trabue and John G. Johnson argued the cause, and, with Messrs. John D. Doolan, Attilla Cox, Jr., and William Bro Smith, filed a brief for plaintiff in error:

†Dismissal set aside on rehearing May 14, 1906, and judgment affirmed. See post, p. 1013.

The doctrine of the state court is unsound and is in conflict with all the decisions of this court saving that of Doyle v. Continental Ins. Co. 94 U. S. 535, 24 L. ed. 148, which we claim was overruled in Barron v. Burnside, 121 U. S. 186, 30 L. ed. 915, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 295, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 931.

If, as held in Home Ins. Co. v. Morse, 20 Wall. 455, 22 L. ed. 369, the state cannot deprive a foreign insurance company of its right of access to the Federal courts, upon what principle can it impose upon it the penalty of expulsion from the state if it exercise that right?

By the 14th Amendment the state is forbidden to deprive a foreign corporation of due process and equal protection of the laws.

Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 466, 42 L. ed. 819, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 418.

Due process includes access to all legal tribunals, state and Federal, and to an orderly and just administration of the laws. If the state could deny due process to a foreign corporation, it might decline to admit it except upon condition of its surrender of its right of access to either state or Federal courts, leaving it defenseless.

It has been repeatedly held by this court that a state cannot even limit to its own courts the enforcement of a controversy of a nature included within the grant of jurisdiction to the Federal courts by the Federal Constitution and laws.

1. Equitable jurisdiction—remedy at law—difficulty of proving case.—Redress for the wrongful cutting, carrying away, and conversion of timber from the public domain cannot be had in a court of equity on the theory that the remedy at law is inadequate because of various devices resorted to by the principal tort feasor by way of organizing different corporations to cover up his tracks and to render it more difficult for the United States to prove its case.

2. Equitable jurisdiction—constructive trusts.—The rule that proceeds of property obtained by theft or fraud may be reclaimed in a suit in equity against the voluntary assignee or one holding in bad faith cannot successfully be invoked to sustain a bill filed on behalf of the United States, charging the cutting, carrying away, and conversion of timber from the public domain, where the allegations wholly fail to identify any specific, definite property as the proceeds of the timber wrongfully or fraudulently taken.

3. Equitable jurisdiction—remedy at law—discovery.—The alleged inability of the United States to state just when or by whom the wrongful cutting of timber on the public domain had been performed, or when or by whom the logs manufactured into lumber had been sold and the proceeds obtained, and when such proceeds were divided, shows no necessity for a discovery in equity which would render the remedy more adequate than in an action at law, in view of the law providing for the examination of defendants, and of the provision of U. S. Rev. Stat. § 724, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 583, for the production of books and writings in actions at law under the same circumstances which would authorize their compulsory production under the ordinary rules of proceedings in chancery.

4. Equitable jurisdiction—suit against executors.—Relief cannot be had in equity for the wrongful cutting, carrying away, and conversion of timber from the public domain because one of the defendants is the executrix of the person alleged to have been the principal wrongdoer, whose estate is largely solvent.

5. Equitable jurisdiction—trusts ex maleficio.—The mere grant of licenses or permits to cut timber on certain described lands in the public domain did not make the cutting of timber on other lands by the licensees the act of trustees ex maleficio, so as to enable the United States to resort to a court of equity for redress.

6. Equitable jurisdiction—accounting.—Redress cannot be had in equity for the wrongful cutting, carrying away, and conversion of timber from the public domain on the theory that, because the wrongdoers had been granted permits to cut timber from other lands, a case was made for an accounting.

7. Equitable jurisdiction—multiplicity of suits.—The prevention of multiplicity of suits cannot successfully be relied upon to sustain a bill in equity, filed on behalf of the United States for redress for the acts of persons licensed to cut timber from certain described lands of the public domain, in wrongfully cutting, carrying away, and converting timber from other lands.

Argued January 8, 9, 1906. Decided February 19, 1906.

APPEAL from the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit to review a decree affirming a decree of the Circuit Court for the District of Montana, dismissing a bill filed on behalf of the United States for the wrongful cutting, carrying away, and conversion of timber from the public domain, on the ground that complainant had an adequate remedy at law. Affirmed.

See same case below, 66 C. C. A. 652, 133 Fed. 274.

Statement by Mr. Justice Peckham:

The appellant filed this bill of complaint in the circuit court of the United States for the district of Montana, on the equity side of the court, for the purpose of recovering from the defendants the value of certain timber, alleged to have been wrongfully cut and taken by the defendants and converted to their own use from the public lands belonging to the complainant in the state of Montana. The defendants, those of them who appeared, demurred to the bill on the ground, among others, that a court of equity had no jurisdiction over the *cause of ac- [452] tion set up in the bill, for the reason that complainant had a plain, full, and adequate remedy at law therefor. The circuit court sustained the demurrer and granted leave to the complainant to amend; but the complainant elected to stand by the bill, and the same was thereupon finally dismissed. The case was taken to the United States circuit court of appeals for the ninth circuit, where the judgment of the circuit court was affirmed (66 C. C. A. 652, 133 Fed. 274) and the complainant has appealed here.

(It appears from the return of the marshal that, after diligent search, no service of process could be made on the defendants Bitter Root Development Company, Anaconda Mining Company, and Anaconda Copper Company [corporations], as they could not be found.)

The bill alleged that on the 1st day of April, 1888, the complainant was, and at the time of the filing of the bill continued to be, the owner in fee and in the possession of certain lands in the state of Montana, described in the bill. Description of the lands from which the timber was cut and carried off was given at great length, and a large number of sections of land were included therein.

"2. Your orator further shows that on the day and year last aforesaid, on these vast tracts of land, there were then growing and standing great forests of pine, fir, and other kinds of trees of various dimensions, fit to manufacture into lumber for mining, commercial, and all other purposes for which lumber is used; that said forests were of great value; to wit, of the value of two million dollars ($2,000,000) and upwards, the exact value thereof being to your orator unknown; that these forests and the land upon which they were growing and standing were the absolute property of the complainant, the United States of America, and was a portion of its public domain.

"3. Your orator further shows that on this, the day of filing its bill of complaint in this court, the lands above described have, for the most part, been stripped of the pine and other trees and timber that were standing and growing upon them as aforesaid, and, except very small portions thereof, were so denuded without license, authority, [453] or permission of the United States *or anyone authorized to represent the complainant; and this was done in violation of its laws, both civil and criminal, and thereby and in consequence of said spoliation the complainant has lost millions of dollars' worth of its property under circumstances named in the succeeding paragraphs of this bill of complaint.

"4. Your orator further shows that one Marcus Daly, who is now dead, but who was, on the date and year aforesaid, a citizen of the state of Montana, and a resident thereof, well knowing of the location of these lands, their accessibility, and the great value of the timber then growing thereon, did, on or about the 1st day of January, 1890, determine that he would convert and appropriate to his own use all of the merchantable and marketable timber growing and standing thereon, without buying said timber or obtaining any right or authority, except as hereinafter stated, from your orator, the United States of America. That in order to more effectually carry out these designs and purposes, to conceal his identity, to enrich himself individually, to escape personal liability, and to better deceive the public and the lawful officers and agents of the complainant, he determined that he would organize a corporation under the laws of the state of Montana; and for that purpose the said Daly called to his aid and assistance certain other persons, namely, John R. Toole, William Toole, William W. Dixon, James W. Hamilton, Moses Kirkpatrick, William Scallon, Malcom B. Bromley, Michael Donohue, William L. Hoag, Daniel J. Hennessy, and Joseph V. Long, and by conspiracy and confederation with said parties, and in pursuance of such fraudulent purpose, as aforesaid, they organized, on or about the 12th day of August, 1890, the Bitter Root Development Company, the defendant. In its articles of incorporation, which were duly filed with the secretary of state of Montana, said John R. Toole, William Toole, and James W. Hamilton were named as incorporators, and James W. Hamilton, William Toole, Daniel J. Hennessy, John R. Toole, and William W. Dixon were named as trustees to manage the affairs of the company *for the first [454] three months of its existence, and the town of Hamilton, in said state, was named as the principal office of said corporation. The capital stock of said corporation was fixed at the sum of three hundred thousand dollars ($300,000.00), divided into one hundred thousand shares, of the par value of three dollars ($3.00) per share.

"5. Your orator further shows that said incorporators and trustees had but a nominal interest in said incorporation, but certain of them were agents, and others, attorneys of said Marcus Daly, and, as such, conspired with him as to the manner and means by which his said purpose to denude said lands of your orator could be best carried out. In pursuance of such conspiracy it was necessary that a certain number should subscribe for stock in said corporation, which was done, but all of said shares were in fact subscribed for the use of and controlled by said Marcus Daly. Your orator charges that not only in the formation of said corporation and other corporations, to be hereinafter named, said John R. Toole, William Toole, William W. Dixon, James W. Hamilton, Moses Kirkpatrick, William Scallon, Malcolm B. Bromley, Michael Donohue, William L. Hoag, Daniel J. Hennessy, and Joseph V. Long aided and assisted said Marcus Daly, but in many other ways up to the time of his death they engaged with him in the work of spoliation, which, in pursuance of such conspiracy, had been planned and was later carried out as hereinafter particularly described; and said parties other than Daly participated in the profits thereof, but just how and to what extent is to your orator unknown; and your orator shows that such of the above as are not made defendants herein are either dead, outside of the jurisdiction of this court, or have no estate.

"6. Your orator further shows that at once on the organization of this corporation, and under the corporate name thereof, said parties heretofore named commenced the work of cutting and carrying away from said lands the trees and timber then growing and standing thereon, using at first in their operations several portable sawmills, [455] but later, on or about the year 1892, *a large lumber and sawmill was erected at the town of Hamilton, on Bitter Root river, in close proximity to a portion of the lands above described and the timber growing thereon. The work of cutting, hauling, transporting to the river, and driving the timber to said mill, and manufacturing the same into lumber, was prosecuted with great and unremitting industry for several years thereafter, to the great profit and advantage of the said conspirators, and to the great loss of your orator.

"7. Your orator further shows that not only at the time of the organization of said corporation, but at all times while it was doing business, its officers, directors, trustees, and stockholders acted for and in behalf of said Marcus Daly, as his agents, and had knowledge of its principal operations, and well knew that the logs that were being brought to its mills and converted into lumber were taken, without right or authority, from the public domain of your orator, and that they had no legal right or title to the same, except as to a small fraction thereof, as hereinafter stated.

"8. Your orator further shows that in pursuance of such fraudulent conspiracy, for the purpose of carrying out the same, and in order to conceal such action, said Marcus Daly, aided by the other parties, and as aforesaid, under the name of the Bitter Root Development Company, did, at certain times during the several years of said depredations, apply to and obtain from the lawful agents of your orator licenses to cut upon certain small portions of the tracts above described, and, under cover of such permits, said conspirators not only cut, carried away, and manufactured the timber growing upon the lands included in such licenses, but, well knowing that such permits gave them no right or authority to enter upon other lands of your orator, they wilfully and fraudulently entered upon large tracts of lands adjacent thereto, and cut, carried away, drove, and manufactured the timber growing thereon, and afterwards sold the lumber and timber to persons and corporations to your orator unknown, and known only to Marcus Daly, his agents and the officers of said Bitter Root Development Company, and appropri- [456] ated *the proceeds of such sales to their own use: but just when such sales were made, just how much the proceeds, to whom beside said Marcus Daly such proceeds were paid, in what proportion, in what way, and at what particular time, it is impossible for your orator to say, as all books of account, of every kind and character, were then and are now in their possession, under their control, or with their assigns.

"9. Your orator further shows that in pursuance of said conspiracy, and in the execution thereof, in order to more effectually conceal the same from your orator, its officers and agents, the said Marcus Daly and the other parties before mentioned engaged the services of a large number of men, falsely representing that they had authority from your orator to cut the growing timber on tracts of land not included in any license, and made contracts with such men, by the terms of which the said conspirators were to pay a certain amount for logs delivered at the river bank by the parties so employed, by reason of which representations and contracts a large number of men were induced to cut down trees and haul them as logs to the river bank, and transport said logs to the company's mill at Hamilton, and thereby innocently aided the conspirators in their unlawful acts, and enable them to successfully prosecute the same.

"10. Your orator further shows that in pursuance of said conspiracy, and in the execution thereof, the said Daly and his associates, acting through and under the corporate name of the defendant Bitter Root Development Company, entered into other contracts or agreements with other parties, namely, Kendall Brothers, Harper Brothers, G. L. Shook, William Toole, Andrew Kennedy, D. V. Bean, John Ailport, and divers other persons, to your orator unknown, by the terms of which they were to be paid specified prices per thousand feet board measure for logs delivered at the sawmill at Hamilton, both parties to said agreements well knowing at the time that the timber belonged to your orator, and was to be unlawfully cut and removed. Said contractors, so called, acting for and in *be- [457] half of said Marcus Daly and his said confederates under the name of the Bitter Root Development Company, during the year 1891 and for several years next thereafter, wilfully trespassed upon the hereinbefore-described lands of the complainant, cutting millions of feet of logs, and hauling them to the Bitter Root river, and thence to the mill of the defendant Bitter Root Development Company, at Hamilton, where they were converted into lumber and sold to the general public, and the proceeds thereof appropriated in large part by said Marcus Daly, and the balance by his associates in said conspiracy, but just how much, and in what proportion, your orator, for the reasons above stated, is unable to say.

"11. Your orator further shows that the said Marcus Daly and his associates, in further execution of said conspiracy, organized other corporations for the purpose of concealing their illegal acts and complicating and confusing the situation, so as to make detection and proof of the same difficult, if not impossible. One of these schemes was as follows: On or about the 14th day of January, 1891, they organized a corporation known as the Anaconda Mining Company, with an organized capital stock of $12,500,000, divided into 500,000 shares of the par value of $25 per share; that within less than one year thereafter, namely, on the 5th day of December, 1891, a stockholders' meeting was held in the city of Butte, Montana, and at said meeting the capital stock of said corporation was increased to twenty-five million dollars ($25,000,000.00) and the shares thereof increased to one million (1,000,000) shares; that at said stockholders' meeting it appeared that no one of the incorporators or the trustees that were named at the time of its incorporation a few months before had any substantial interest therein; and later, namely, on the 31st day of December, another meeting of said stockholders was held, at which time it was voted to extend the term of existence of said corporation for forty years from the date of its original incorporation, and at that meeting it appeared that Marcus Daly, either in his own person or as trustee or as a proxy, controlled nearly seven *hundred thousand (700,000) shares [458] of the million shares of the capital stock of said company, and in less than six months thereafter the capital stock was reduced from twenty-five million dollars ($25,000,000.00) to one million dollars ($1,000,000.00), and the shares from one million to forty thousand (40,000).

"12. Your orator further shows that in furtherance of the conspiracy aforesaid the said Marcus Daly, on the 27th day of April, 1894, through his agents, procured to be conveyed unto himself all of the property of said Bitter Root Development Company, receiving a deed from said Bitter Root Development Company, executed by William Toole as its president and Joseph Kerrigan as its secretary, which said deed was duly recorded on page 302 of book 16 in the proper office for the recording of deeds in the county of Ravalli, state of Montana. In said deed appear these words: 'The Bitter Root Development Company, for and in consideration of one dollar, transfers all of its property of every kind and description, real and personal, timber lands, timber cutting privileges and rights, timber, logs, mills, water rights, and water ditches, flumes, pipe lines, and rights of way—in fact, everything belonging to the Bitter Root Development Company—to Marcus Daly.'

"Your orator further says that four days after so receiving this deed, namely, on the 1st day of May, 1894, said Marcus Daly deeded this same property to the other of his corporations, the above-named Anaconda Mining Company, for the express consideration of one million, four hundred and forty-two thousand, three hundred and seventy-nine dollars and forty-six cents ($1,442,379.46), which said deed was duly recorded in said book 16, on page 280. Your orator expressly charges that said Marcus Daly did in fact receive the consideration named in said deed, the whole thereof being directly the result of the spoliation of the lands of your orator, as aforesaid, and that the moneys so received by him belonged in fact to your orator; but your orator charges on information that said Marcus Daly did not receive all of the same in cash, but a portion of same *was taken in stock in said [459] Anaconda Mining Company, but just how much he received in cash and how much was carried over and appeared in stock of said company, your orator is unable to state.

"13. Your orator further shows that in furtherance of the conspiracy aforesaid, said defendants, Moses Kirkpatrick, William Scallon, and Malcolm B. Bromley, acting for and in behalf of said Marcus Daly, on the 6th day of June, 1895, pursuant to and in conformity with the statutes of Montana relating to corporations for industrial and productive purposes, organized the Anaconda Copper Company, with an authorized capital stock of thirty million dollars ($30,000,000.00), divided into three hundred thousand (300,000) shares of the par value of one hundred dollars ($100.00) each, with an authorized term of existence of forty years, and the following-named persons were named as trustees for the first three months of its existence; to wit, Moses Kirkpatrick, William Scallon, Malcolm B. Bromley, Michael Donohue, William L. Hoag, Daniel J. Hennessey, and Joseph V. Long, with its principal office at Butte, Silverbow county, Montana.

"14. Your orator further shows that nine days thereafter the same persons, named as incorporators of the corporation last named, organized under the same law the defendant corporation the Anaconda Copper Mining Company, with an authorized capital stock of thirty million dollars ($30,000,000.00), divided into one million two hundred thousand shares (1,200,000) of the par value of twenty-five dollars ($25.00) each, with the same seven trustees to manage the affairs of said corporation for the first three months of its existence, with its principal office at Anaconda, in said state.

"15. Your orator shows that in the execution of said conspiracy, and for the purpose of complicating the situation, said Marcus Daly, through his agents, did again, and within one year and twenty-nine days after having transferred his property to the Anaconda Mining Company, convey the identical property that was named in said [460] deeds to the above-named *Anaconda Copper Mining Company for and in consideration of the sum of one dollar, the Anaconda Mining Company executing a deed through and by its president, W. W. Dixon, and its secretary, F. E. Sergeant, and said deed is recorded in the same book of records, on page 441.

"16. Your orator further shows and charges that these several conveyances were made in the main in furtherance of said conspiracy, and in pursuance of a purpose to so complicate the situation as to make detection difficult, if not impossible. That the conveyance by the Bitter Root Development Company to said Marcus Daly, for one dollar, of all of its property, was fraudulent, and that said Marcus Daly did, under the name of the Anaconda Mining Company, carry on the same work of spoliation of your orator's trees, timber, and lands, and that later, and from the time of the conveyance of all its corporate property to the Anaconda Copper Mining Company, he carried on the work under that name until the date of his death. That he continued to use the same means, the same mill at Hamilton, and the officers, directors, and stockholders of each of said corporations knew of the illegal work that had been done, and, so knowing, continued the same. And your orator expressly charges that all of the corporate assets of every kind and character of the Bitter Root Development Company either appeared in the stock of the other corporations or was appropriated by Marcus Daly and his assistants to their own use and benefit; but just how much was carried over in the said corporations, and how much was divided previous to the last deed named herein, and how much of the property of your orator was converted by said last-named company between the date of its organization and the death of said Marcus Daly hereinafter described, and how much thereof was appropriated by said company, and how much by Daly and his associates, it is impossible for your orator, with the means at hand, to state.

"17. Your orator further shows that by reason of such spoliation, continued and [461] carried on during the period of about *ten years, it has lost property of great value, to wit, of the value of $2,000,000 and upwards; and that Marcus Daly and the other defendants named herein occasioned this loss by wilfully trespassing upon said lands of your orator, and without its consent, or the consent of any of its authorized officers, and in violation of its laws, both civil and criminal, appropriated and converted to their own use the trees and timber growing thereon. That said defendants, or some of them, have had at all times and now have possession of the sawmill at Hamilton, wherein the logs were converted into lumber, and they have received all the proceeds of said sales, and divided the same among them; but by reason of the frauds practised by said defendants, as aforesaid, and their acts performed for the express purpose of concealing from your orator the facts of the case by means of the formation and the dissolving and the reforming of corporations, and by reason of said defendants having possession of all books of account, it is impossible for your orator to set forth to a greater extent the details of this conspiracy, or to show just when or by whom the particular acts of spoliation were performed, or just when and to whom the logs, when manufactured into lumber, were sold, or just when and by whom the proceeds thereof were obtained, and when the same were divided.

"18. Your orator further shows that at the time that these trespasses were committed the territory on which the same took place was but sparsely settled, and was thousands of miles away from the seat of government, and it was impossible, with the means that your orator had at hand, to properly patrol and protect its domain from the wilful trespasses of the defendants, and that the government of the United States used such care in the protection thereof as it had the means to do. That the agents employed by your orator were misled by the defendants' assertion of ownership, as aforesaid; that the frauds and trespasses of the defendants, which have resulted in the denuding of these lands of your orator, and in depriving your orator of property of the value of several millions of dollars, [462] *were not discovered in their entirety until a comparatively short time ago.

"19. Your orator further shows that it has commenced several actions at law in this honorable court to recover the value of the timber heretofore taken by the defendants, or some of them, from the lands above particularly described, and that the same are now pending in this court; but that, by reason of the frauds and conspiracies above set forth and the complications which have resulted therefrom, no plain, adequate, and complete remedy can be given your orator by said actions at law, and your orator is only relievable in a court of equity, where matters of this kind are properly cognizable and relievable.

"20. Your orator further shows that Marcus Daly died in the city of New York on the 12th day of November, A. D. 1900; that at the time of his death he was a resident of the county of Deerlodge, state and district of Montana, and left an estate worth about $12,000,000, consisting of real and personal property located in said county and state and elsewhere, and your orator expressly charges that a large portion of said estate was the result of the proceeds of his illegal acts in his lifetime in trespassing upon the lands of your orator, as hereinbefore charged, and converting the proceeds of the sale of the timber growing thereon to his own use and benefit; that in his lifetime he made and published his last will and testament, whereby he appointed the defendant Margaret P. Daly executrix thereof; that on the 14th day of February, A. D. 1901, at the city of Anaconda, said last will and testament was duly proved and duly admitted to probate in the district court of the county of Deerlodge, district of Montana; that thereupon, on the 15th day of February, A. D. 1901, letters of administration were duly issued thereon to the said defendant Margaret P. Daly by the said court; that the said defendant Margaret P. Daly duly qualified and entered upon the discharge of her duties as executrix, and that the said letters testamentary have not been revoked, and are now in full force and effect.

[463] *"21. Your orator further shows that the said Margaret P. Daly, under and by virtue of the terms of said will, and as the wife of said Marcus Daly, is now the owner of a large portion of his estate.

"In consideration whereof, and forasmuch as your orator is, for the reasons stated, remediless in the premises at and by the strict rule of the common law, and is only relievable in a court of equity, where matters of this kind are properly cognizable and relievable, to the end that your orator may have that relief which it can only obtain in a court of equity; and that each one of the defendants above named may answer the premises, but not upon oath or affirmation, the benefit whereof is expressly waived by your orator, your orator prays the court as follows:

"First. That the defendant Margaret P. Daly, both in her own person and as executrix of the last will and testament of her husband, Marcus Daly, deceased, and each of the defendants above named, be decreed to hold in trust for the use and benefit of your orator so much of their estate, both real and personal, as shall have come to them, or either of them, directly from the proceeds of the conversion of the timber of your orator, as aforesaid.

"Second. That the complainant have and recover from Margaret P. Daly, both personally and as executrix, and from each of the other defendants above named, the profits, gains, and advantages which the said defendants or either of them have received or made, or which have arisen or accrued to them, or either of them, by reason of the wilful trespasses upon the public domain of your orator, hereinbefore particularly described, and by reason of the fraudulent conversion of the trees and timber growing thereon, the logs had therefrom, and the lumber manufactured from the same.

"Third. That each of the defendants may make a full and true discovery and disclosure of and concerning the transactions and matters aforesaid, and that an accounting may be taken by and under the direction and decree of this honorable court *of [464] all the dealings and transactions between your orator and the defendants. That on such accounting the defendants and each of them be required to produce all licenses, permits, and all other documents of every kind and character which they, or any of them, may have received from your orator, by which they, or any of them, claim or claimed the right to enter upon any of said lands of your orator, and cut and remove the trees and timber then growing thereon.

"Fourth. That the defendants and each of them account for the number of logs received by them and manufactured into lumber at the sawmill at Hamilton, in said district, or at any other mill or mills owned or used by them in the manufacture of said logs into lumber, and also the gains, profits, and advantages which the said defendants, or either of them, or the estate of said Marcus Daly, have received or made, or which have arisen or accrued to them, or either of them, from trespassing upon the lands of the complainant, above described and set forth, and in converting to their own use and benefit the trees and timber growing thereon.

"Fifth. That the said defendants and each of them discover and set forth full, true, and particular accounts of all and every sum or sums of money received by them, or either of them, or by any person or persons by their, or either of their, order, or for their, or either of their, use, for or in respect of the said sale or sales of logs cut from said lands of said complainant, or the lumber obtained from said logs, and when and from whom each and every of such sums were, respectively, received, and how the same, respectively, have been applied or disposed of, and to show when and where the proceeds of said sales were invested by each of said defendants, and in what form of real or personal estate they now exist.

"Sixth. That the defendants, and each of them, may set forth a list or schedule and description of all books of account of every kind and character, and of all deeds, documents, letters, papers, or writings of every kind whatsoever relating to the matters aforesaid, or any of them, wherein or where-[465] upon *there is any note, memorandum, or writing relating in any manner thereto, which are now or ever were in their or either of their possession or power, and more particularly described, which now are in their or either of their possession or power, and may deposit the same with the clerk of this court or with the standing master in chancery thereof for the purposes of inspection and examination by your orator, and for all other legitimate and usual purposes, in order that your orator may ascertain therefrom and thereby the particular facts and circumstances, which is absolutely necessary in order to enable your orator to obtain possession and knowledge of the details of this conspiracy; and that when such accounting shall be made, and it shall be ascertained that said defendants have received and taken into their possession money or other forms of property directly resulting from their participation in the conspiracy aforesaid, and in the spoliation of the lands of your orator, as aforesaid, that this court shall decree that they pay the amount thereof, with interest from the date they so received the same, to your orator, with costs of this suit, and that your orator may have such other and further relief in the premises as the nature and the circumstances of this case may require, and as may be agreeable to equity and good conscience.

"May it please the court to grant to your orator a writ of subpœna to be directed to the said Margaret P. Daly, Margaret P. Daly, as executrix of the last will and testament of Marcus Daly, deceased, Bitter Root Development Company, Anaconda Mining Company, Anaconda Copper Company, Anaconda Copper Mining Company, John R. Toole, William W. Dixon, William Scallon, Daniel J. Hennessy, thereby commanding them, and each of them, at a certain time, and under a certain penalty to be fixed, personally to appear before this honorable court, and then and there full, true, direct, and perfect answer to make to all and singular the premises, and to stand to, perform, and abide by such order, direction, and decree as may be made against them in the premises, as shall be meet and agreeable to equity, and your orator will ever pray."

Messrs. Marsden C. Burch and Fred A. Maynard argued the cause, and, with Solicitor General Hoyt, filed a brief for appellant:

The remedy at law, in order to exclude a concurrent remedy in equity, must be as complete, practicable, and efficient to the ends of justice and its prompt administration as the remedy in equity.

Boyce v. Grunty, 3 Pet. 215, 7 L. ed. 657; Kilbourn v. Sunderland, 130 U. S. 514, 32 L. ed. 1008, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 594; Walla Walla v. Walla Walla Water Co. 172 U. S. 12, 43 L. ed. 346, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 77.

The application of this principle must depend on the character of the case as disclosed by the pleadings and the circumstances of each case. If the remedy at law be doubtful, a court of equity will not decline cognizance of the suit. When equity can give relief, complainant ought not to be compelled to speculate upon the chances of his obtaining relief at law.

Watson v. Sutherland, 5 Wall. 74, 18 L. ed. 580; Payne v. Hook, 7 Wall. 425, 19 L. ed. 260; Davis v. Wakelee, 156 U. S. 680, 688, 39 L. ed. 578, 584, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 555; Bank of Kentucky v. Stone, 88 Fed. 391.

The mere fact of the existence of a legal remedy which may be made available is not a sufficient objection to the more convenient remedy in equity, and in many cases the latter court assumes jurisdiction on the grounds of the greater convenience and adaptability of its peculiar machinery.

1 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 421; Russell v. Clark, 7 Cranch, 69, 3 L. ed. 271; Wylie v. Coxe, 15 How. 415, 420, 14 L. ed. 753, 755; Jones v. Bolles, 9 Wall. 364, 369, 19 L. ed. 734, 736.

Grounds for equitable relief may arise, other than by way of injunction, where equitable interposition is necessary on account of the impediments which prevent a resort to remedies purely legal, and such an equity may arise out of and inhere in the nature of the account itself, springing from special and peculiar circumstances which disable the patentee from a recovery at law altogether, or render his remedy in the legal tribunal difficult, inadequate, and incomplete; and as such cases cannot be defined more exactly, each must rest upon its own particular circumstances as furnishing a clear and satisfactory ground for exception from the general rule.

Root v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 105 U. S. 189, 26 L. ed. 975.

The court erred in sustaining the de-murrer and dismissing the bill, for the reason that the defendants, having fraudulently converted the complainant's property, are, in equity, constructive trustees, and the complainant may follow the avails of such fraud through its various transmutations.

Permits were made expressly subject to the condition that the company should submit monthly to the register and receiver at Missoula, Montana, a statement under oath, showing amount of each kind or kinds of timber cut or removed during each month, a description of the particular tract or tracts from which said timber was cut or removed, and how much timber was disposed of, and to whom. This brings it within the rule governing fiduciary relations, as it embraces both technical fiduciary relations and those informal relations which exist wherever one man trusts in and relies on another.

3 Words & Phrases Judicially Defined, p. 2761, and cases there cited.

By reason of the duty of the Bitter Root Development Company to keep true and accurate accounts and monthly submit statements to the officers of the government, and by reason of its failure so to do, the proceeds of the lumber retained by it become in its hands trust funds belonging to complainant. There was a breach of this trust; its extent is peculiarly within defendants' knowledge. In such cases choice of remedy is with the party aggrieved, and he may proceed in equity for an accounting, and pursue the fund.

2 Pom. Eq. Jur. 3d ed. § 873; Jones v. Bolles, 9 Wall. 369, 19 L. ed. 734.

While every material fact to which plaintiff means to offer evidence ought to be distinctly stated, a general statement of the matter is sufficient. It is not necessary to charge minutely all the circumstances which may conduce to prove the general charge, for these circumstances are properly matters of evidence, which need not be charged in order to put them in as proofs.

Ins. Co. v. Stanchfield, 1 Dill. 424, Fed. Cas. No. 6,660.

Under the equity rules adopted by this court, particularly numbers 40, 41, 42, and 43, it is plainly required that, where a complainant desires to obtain a discovery of facts from the defendant, special interrogatories must be framed and directed to the defendants in the manner provided by those rules, and the rules plainly indicate that such interrogatories are not to be propounded to be answered otherwise than upon oath. Complainant, having failed to comply with those rules by propounding proper interrogatories, and having elected not to require any answer from any of the defendants which would be evidence in the case, has plainly shown its intention not to present this bill as a bill of discovery in this case, and has waived any right it might have had to a discovery.

Huntington v. Saunders, 120 U. S. 78, 30 L. ed. 580, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 356; Patterson v. Gaines, 6 How. 550, 12 L. ed. 553; Union Bank v. Geary, 5 Pet. 99, 8 L. ed. 60; United States v. McLaughlin, supra; Field v. Hastings & B. Co. supra; Excelsior Wooden Pipe Co. v. Seattle, 55 C. C. A. 156, 117 Fed. 140; Tillinghast v. Chace, 121 Fed. 435.

Under the general equity practice, and in the absence of any such specific and binding requirement as we find in the equity rules of this court, above referred to, the same rule is laid down,—that the waiving of an oath to the answer waives the discovery.

Harrington v. Harrington, 15 R. I. 341, 5 Atl. 502; McCulla v. Beadleston, supra; Starkweather v. Williams, 21 R. I. 55, 41 Atl. 1003; Ward v. Peck, 114 Mass. 121; Badger v. McNamara, supra; Sheppard v. Akers, 1 Tenn. Ch. 326; Goodwin v. Bishop, 145 Ill. 421, 34 N. E. 47.

And in addition, under equity rules 40 and 41, the mere failure to prepare and present special interrogatories directed to the defendants is fatal to any right to claim discovery in this action.

United States v. McLaughlin, supra; Bailey Washing Mach. Co. v. Young, 12 Blatchf. 199, Fed. Cas. No. 751.

There is a further ground for denying the complainant's right to maintain this bill for discovery, and that is, that the defendants cannot be compelled to answer upon any matters or to disclose any evidence which might subject them to, or might tend to subject them to, or in any way lay the basis for, criminal prosecutions or other proceeding which might result in the imposing of a penalty.

St. Rep. 554, 54 N. W. 712.

Complainant is not entitled to a discovery for the further reason that the bill is insufficient to show that the discovery is sought in aid of any action at law, conceding, for the purpose of this argument, that a discovery could be maintained in aid of such action.

Complainant cannot invoke the aid of equity by reason of any fraud, misrepresentation, or concealment alleged in its bill of complaint.

Buzard v. Houston, 119 U. S. 347, 30 L. ed. 451, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 249.

The bill is so general, uncertain, and indefinite that it presents no grounds for relief or discovery in equity.

Story, Eq. Pl. §§ 253, 257; Tillinghast v. Chace, supra.

Mr. Justice Peckham, after making the foregoing statement, delivered the opinion of the court:

Although there is a liberal use in the bill in this case of averments in regard to fraud, conspiracy, and violation of trust, of which the pleader avers the defendants have been guilty *in various ways, yet, upon a care- [472 ful examination of the pleading itself, and the actual facts therein stated, we concur in the view of the courts below, that the action is really nothing but an action of trespass or troyer to recover damages sustained by the complainant by reason of the wrongful cutting, carrying away, and conversion of the property of the complainant, consisting of the timber on the land mentioned in the bill; and for the wrong thus done we think it clear that the complainant has a plain, adequate, and complete remedy at law, and consequently the court has no jurisdiction of this bill in equity.

It is not necessary to cite many authorities for the proposition that where the main cause of action is of a legal nature, equity has no jurisdiction, provided the complainant has full and adequate remedy at law for the wrongs complained of. Buzard v. Houston, 119 U. S. 347, 30 L. ed. 451, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 249; Scott v. Neely, 140 U. S. 106, 110, 35 L. ed. 358, 360, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 712. A mere charge of fraud does not give equity jurisdiction. Buzard v. Houston, supra; Ambler v. Choteau, 107

U. S. 586, 27 L. ed. 322, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 556; Safford v. Ensign Mfg. Co. 56 C. C. A. 630, 120 Fed. 480, and cases cited in opinion. Tyler v. Savage, 143 U. S. 79, 36 L. ed. 82, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 340, bears no resemblance to the case at bar. As the court there said, there were in the case discovery, account, fraud, misrepresentation, and concealment. There was no demurrer for multifariousness, and no objection in the court below for want of equity, and the case was not one of a plain defect in equity jurisdiction. The suit was clearly one for equitable relief.

The principal ground upon which it is claimed that the remedy at law is inadequate is really nothing more than a difficulty in proving the case against the defendants. The bill shows that whatever was done in the way of cutting the timber and carrying it away was done by the defendants as tort feasors, and the various devices alleged to have been resorted to by the deceased, Daly, by way of organizing different corporations, in order to, as alleged, cover up his tracks, and to render it more difficult for the complainant to make proof of his action, does not in the least tend to give a court of equity jurisdiction on that account. It is simply a [473] question of evidence to show *who did the wrong and upon that point the fact could be ascertained as readily at law as in equity.

The complainant is entitled in an action at law to an inspection of the books and records of these various corporations, and it has the same power to obtain the facts therefrom in that action as it would have in this suit in equity.

The complainant contends that where property has been stolen or obtained by fraud, equity recognizes the law to be that the property always belongs to the true owner, and therefore its proceeds must also belong to him, and may be reclaimed in a suit in equity against the voluntary assignee or one holding in bad faith. The cases of Newton v. Porter, 69 N. Y. 133, 25 Am. Rep. 152, and American Sugar Ref. Co. v. Fancher, 145 N. Y. 552, 27 L. R. A. 757, 40 N. E. 206, are cited to sustain the contention. These cases it will be seen, upon examination, show that the plaintiff had no remedy at law, and he was able to fully identify the particular property into which the original property belonging to him had been converted, and which was in the hands of a voluntary assignee. It was a question of following the proceeds, and accurately and certainly identifying them, which the court held was necessary in order to permit of such following. The defendants were also insolvent. The case of Angle v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 151 U. S. 1, 38 L. ed. 55, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 240, did not involve any question like the one herein. In that case the land had been granted to the Portage company by the state for the purposes named, and it was conceded by the demurrer that the officials of the Portage company had been bribed by the Omaha company to betray their trust, and the legislature had been induced by false allegations to revoke the grant to the Portage company and to bestow it upon the Omaha company. The plaintiff had obtained a judgment against the Portage company in an action at law, and the execution had been returned nulla bona, and the bill in equity was filed in the circuit court of the United States by the administratrix of the judgment creditor against the Omaha company to reach the land formerly owned by the Portage company, and then in the hands of the Omaha *company by reason of its own wrong-[474] doing. Thus there was the illegal and wrongful act of the Omaha company, by which the land once vesting in the Portage company had been taken away and that same land regranted to the Omaha company, and it was to reach that particular land which the Omaha company had obtained by its wrongful act that the bill was filed. Mr. Justice Brewer, delivering the opinion of this court, said:

"And when the Omaha company, by its wrongdoings, secured the full legal title to those lands, equity will hold that the party who has been deprived of payment for his work from the Portage company, by reason of their having been taken away from it, shall be able to pursue those lands into the hands of the wrongdoer, and hold them for the payment of that claim which, but for the wrongdoings of the Omaha company, would have been paid by the Portage company, partially, at least, out of their proceeds. While no express trust is affirmed as to the lands, yet it is familiar doctrine that a party who acquires title to property wrongfully may be adjudged a trustee ex maleficio in respect to that property.

These lands were identified, and were found in the hands of the actual wrongdoer, who had acquired them by reason of such wrong.

Now, there is no pretense in this case that any specific piece of property was in fact either the same timber or the proceeds of the timber wrongfully cut and disposed of by the defendants, or any of them. Nor was it averred that any particular timber had been taken from the land described in the bill. On the contrary, it is alleged in the bill that the complainant was unable to show just when or by whom the cutting had been performed, or the logs manufactured into lumber had been sold, or just when and by whom the proceeds thereof were obtained, and when the same were divided. There is a general allegation in the bill of complaint that the deceased, Daly, left an estate worth $12,000,000, located in the state of Montana and elsewhere, and that a large [475] portion of that estate was the *result of the proceeds of Daly's illegal acts in his lifetime, in trespassing upon the lands of the complainant, and converting the proceeds of the sale of the timber growing thereon to his own use and benefit. It is also averred that he made his will, appointing Margaret P. Daly, defendant, executrix; and the will was duly admitted to probate, and letters of administration were duly issued to the defendant Margaret P. Daly, on the 15th day of February A. D. 1901, and she duly qualified and entered upon the discharge of her duties as such executrix; that Margaret P. Daly, under and by virtue of the terms of the will, and as the wife of Marcus Daly, is the owner of a large portion of his estate. It is plain that such allegations fall far short of even a pretense of identifying specific, definite property as the proceeds of certain other property wrongfully or fraudulently taken by defendants from the lands described in the bill. Such allegations are totally inadequate for that purpose.

Under the law providing for the examination of defendants, and under § 724 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 583), providing for the production of books and writings in actions at law, under the same circumstances that defendants might be compelled to produce them under the ordinary rules of proceeding in chancery, there is nothing in these allegations which shows any necessity for a discovery in equity, such as would render the remedy more adequate therein than in an action at law.

Nor was there anything in the cases cited by complainant as showing a right to proceed in equity because one of the defendants is the executrix of a deceased person, who, it is alleged, was one of the parties guilty of the wrongdoing set forth in the bill. Upon the question of liability she is entitled to a trial at law and by jury, as well as the other defendants. In Green v. Creighton (Kendall v. Creighton) 23 How. 90, 16 L. ed. 419, it was said that a single creditor has been allowed to sue an administratrix for his demand in equity, and obtain decree for payment out of the personal estate, without taking a general account of the testator's debts. In that case the facts were [476] complicated; *the original debtor and his surety were dead, and had died insolvent, and a portion of the assets of the estate of the latter could be traced to the possession of his administratrix, and the authority of a court of equity was required to call for a discovery of the nature and amount of the assets in hand. It was said that the debtor, Tunstall, had died insolvent, and Whiting, his surety, had also died insolvent. A portion of the assets belonging to the estate of the latter was in the hands of the surety of this administrator. A discovery of the nature and amount of the assets in hand was necessary if they were subject to the application, and it was held that the circuit court was authorized to entertain the suit, and the decree dismissing the bill was reversed. Certainly there is nothing in that case which in the least degree aids the proposition that because there is an administratrix named as a party, equity has jurisdiction, even though no discovery of assets is sought, and the bill shows that the estate represented by the administratrix is largely solvent, and the demand is for unliquidated damages against others besides the administratrix, and no debt is admitted, the alleged cause of action having arisen against the deceased, among others, for a tort.

In Kennedy v. Creswell, 101 U. S. 641, 25 L. ed. 1075, it was held that the creditor of a deceased person had a right to go into a court of equity for a discovery of assets and the payment of his debt, and that when there he would not be turned back to a court of law to establish the validity of his claim. The basis of getting into a court of equity being a discovery of assets, the object of the bill was obtained, as the court held, by the admission of the executor that he had sufficient assets, and that if so, the jurisdiction of the court remained to give a decree for the payment of the debt. Here is no such case. Daly is alleged to have been the principal wrongdoer, out of several defendants, in cutting and converting the timber on these lands owned by the government. He died, leaving an estate of over $12,000,000, as averred in the bill of complaint, and the claim of the complainant is only for $2,000,000. Thus, by complainant's *own averment, the estate is largely solvent. [477] There is no endeavor to discover assets and no ground for jurisdiction in equity simply because one of the defendants is an executrix. The proposition of the complainant would confer jurisdiction in equity in every case of a legal cause of action for unliquidated damages for a tort where one of the wrongdoers had died and an administratrix had been appointed, and the existence of assets was alleged by complainant, largely in excess of the complainant's demand, and the other defendants remained parties. This has never been so held in any case to which our attention has been called.

and we are unable to find any principle of equity jurisdiction upon which to permit the maintenance of this suit on the special ground here asserted.

But it is averred there was a fiduciary relationship existing on account of the permits or licenses to cut timber, which, it is alleged, were given the defendant Bitter Root Development Company, and that in such permits there was set forth an obligation on the part of that company and others acting for it, to make, under oath, monthly returns of the amounts and kinds of timber cut, with a description of the particular tract or tracts from which it was cut, how much was disposed of, and to whom, and that a failure to do so was a failure in a fiduciary capacity on the part of the defendant company, and therefore there is jurisdiction in equity. The government contends that by reason of the duty of the Bitter Root Development Company to keep true and accurate accounts and to monthly submit statements to the officers of the government, and by reason of its failure so to do, the proceeds of the lumber retained by it became in its hands a trust fund belonging to the complainant; that there was a breach of this trust; its extent is in the defendants' knowledge; and in such cases choice of remedy is with the party aggrieved, and he may proceed in equity for an accounting and pursue the fund. It is doubtful, to say the least, whether an obligation to report as to timber cut on the permitted lands constitutes any fiduciary relationship between the [478] licensees and the government, *with regard to an alleged wrongful cutting of timber on other and separate lands. It is not, in truth, alleged that the returns called for by the permit were not made. Safford v. Ensign Mfg. Co. 56 C. C. A. 630, 120 Fed. 480. However that may be, there is no such obligation (to render monthly accounts) set forth in the bill as being part of the permit or license referred to therein. The bill simply avers that Daly did, at certain times, during the several years of said depredations, apply to and obtain from the lawful agents of the government licenses to cut upon certain small portions of the tracts above described, and under cover of such permits the conspirators not only cut, carried away, and manufactured timber growing on the said lands included in such licenses, but, well knowing that such permits gave them no right or authority to enter upon other lands, they wilfully and fraudulently entered upon large tracts of land adjacent thereto and cut the timber therefrom. There is no mention of an obligation to render monthly accounts. The fact that the defendants had permission to cut timber on certain tracts of land described did not make their cutting of timber on other tracts the act of trustees ex maleficio. When they went outside of the tracts for which license was given, they committed a trespass for which they were liable at law. And, again, as the contents of the permits are not set forth, we cannot take judicial notice of such contents in any particular case. Different conditions may be contained in different permits, and they are the subject of the discretion of the department giving the permits.

It also argued that a court of equity has jurisdiction in such a case as this on the ground of an accounting. We do not think that this is any such case as gives a court of equity jurisdiction because of an accounting being necessary. There are no accounts between the parties. The cause of action is one arising in tort, and cannot be converted into one for an account. The case made is a plain trespass, for which the defendants are liable in damages. Or it might be termed an *action in trover, as stated. [479] Whatever books, if any, defendants may have kept, showing the amount and location of the timber cut and its value, can be perfectly well obtained by an inspection of these books in an action at law. No discovery is alleged to be necessary in aid of any action at law, although the bill shows that several such actions have in fact been commenced. The facts averred do not show jurisdiction for the general purpose of discovery.

Nor do we see that there is any jurisdiction on the ground of prevention of a multiplicity of suits. Those persons who were guilty of the wrong must be made parties in either court, in order to bind them. Such alleged multiplicity is not avoided in one court more than in the other. It is not a case where a few defendants may be made parties as representatives of a class holding under or claiming the same title or right, and so that a judgment against the representative defendants may bind all others of the class. There is no class and there can be no representatives.

We fail to see any fact alleged in this bill which constitutes a proper foundation for the jurisdiction of a court of equity. The government counsel, however, assert that since the filing of this bill new and material facts have been discovered by the government, which, in the judgment of counsel, would furnish foundation for a bill in equity, even though this bill is defective. In order to permit of the filing of such a bill, if counsel should be so advised, and so as not to run against a plea of res judicata, the judgment of dismissal is affirmed, without prejudice, etc.

Mr. Justice White and Mr. Justice McKenna took no part in the decision of this case.

[480]*MARIAN J. LOONEY, Administratrix of the Estate of James F. Looney, Deceased, Plff. in Err.,

v.

METROPOLITAN RAILROAD COMPANY and Washington Railway & Electric Company.

1. Master and servant—electric railways—negligence towards employee—contributory negligence.—A street railway pitman, by unnecessarily touching the uninsulated parts in adjusting the leads connecting the motive power of a street car with the overhead current, relieves the company from liability for his death from the resulting shock, although the conductor of the car may have been negligent in permitting the trolley pole to come in contact with the trolley wire.

2. Master and servant—electric railways—negligence towards employee—inference from lack of contributory negligence.—The existence of defects in the insulation which would render a street railway company liable for the death of an employee occasioned by a shock received in adjusting the leads connecting the motive power of a car with the overhead current cannot be inferred from the presumption of the exercise of due care on the part of the person killed, although, in the absence of a leak in the insulation, no shock could have been received unless he had unnecessarily touched the uninsulated ends of the leads.

NOTE.—What acts of an employee amount to contributory negligence precluding a recovery from his employer for injuries caused by electric shock?

LOONEY V. METROPOLITAN R. Co. in effect holds an employee to the same standard of care and caution in handling an electric wire which he has the right to assume is "dead" that he is bound to exercise in handling what is known to be a "live" wire. In cases presenting somewhat similar facts, other courts have held that the question of contributory negligence is for the jury.

Thus, the question of the contributory negligence of an inexperienced workman who received an electric shock while using his bare hands to connect the wires with the circuit after removing a street lamp is held to be for the jury to decide where there is evidence that the accident would not have happened had the current not been turned on earlier than usual. Colorado Electric Co. v. Lubbers, 11 Colo. 505, 7 Am. Rep. 255, 19 Pac. 479.

The question of the contributory negligence of an employee of an electric light company who was killed while splicing wires by a current sent through the wires in testing a dynamo after installing an armature which had been removed for repairs is for the jury, where the employee did not know that the armature had then been repaired and installed. Williams v. North Wisconsin Lumber Co. 124 Wis. 328, 102 N. W. 589.

The jury could properly find that the failure of a lamp trimmer to use rubber gloves in trimming an arc lamp in the daytime on a supposed dead wire was not negligence which contributed to his death from a shock due to a crossed wire, where it is only customary to wear such gloves when trimming a lamp at night, on live wires, and it would have been impossible for him to do the amount of work required if he had used such gloves. Harroun v. Brush Electric Light Co. 12 App. Div. 126, 42 N. Y. Supp. 716, Appeal dismissed in 152 N. Y. 212, 38 L.R.A. 615, 46 N. E. 291.

The finding of a jury that an experienced electric lineman, injured by coming in contact with two high-voltage wires improperly placed within a few inches of each other, on the same side of the pole, was not guilty of contributory negligence, was sustained by evidence that he had no knowledge that they were live wires, although he knew that the current would be turned on as soon as repairs then in progress should be completed, and testified that he might have escaped injury had he known the current was on, and that it was good practice to handle all wires as though they were live wires, unless they were positively known not to be charged, and that such was the general custom among linemen. General Electric Co. v. Murray, 32 Tex. Civ. App. 226, 74 S. W. 50.

Where the evidence tended to show that a lineman of an electric lighting company was injured by inadvertently passing between a pair of exposed splices situated within 2 feet of a post, on wires carrying a strong current of electricity, it was held that whether or not due care on the lineman's part required him to see and avoid contact with the exposed splices was properly left to the jury. New Omaha v. Thomson-Houston Electric Light Co. v. Rombold (Neb.) 93 N. W. 966, Reversed on other grounds in (Neb.) 97 N. W. 1030.

A lineman experienced in handling telephone and telegraph wires, but without previous experience with electric light wires, is not, as a matter of law, when employed by an electric lighting company, charged with the knowledge that the insulation on the live wires which he was attaching to glass insulators was, because of its age and wear, likely to crack open and expose the wire, where, before the wires were handed to him, the insulation was examined by other workmen, and taped wherever the wire was exposed. New Omaha Thomson-Houston Electric Light Co. v. Dent (Neb.) 94 N. W. 819, 103 N. W. 1091.

A break occurring in the insulation of an electric light wire which was being handled and fastened around a glass insulator by a lineman is not an open and obvious defect, notice of which will be imputed to him, where, under the evidence, there exists reasonable grounds for difference of opinion as to his being able to observe such break in the ordinary prosecution of the work in which he was engaged, and without making an extra effort specially for the purpose of ascertaining the condition of Argued December 14, 15, 1905. Decided February 19, 1906.

IN ERROR to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia to review a judgment which affirmed a judgment of the Supreme Court of the District, entered on a directed verdict in favor of the defendants in an action to recover damages for the alleged negligent killing of the plaintiff's intestate. Affirmed.

See same case below, 24 App. D. C. 510.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Maurice D. Rosenberg and Alexander Wolf argued the cause, and, with Mr. Simon Lyon, filed a brief for plaintiff in error.

Mr. J. J. Darlington argued the cause and filed a brief for defendants in error.

Mr. Justice McKenna delivered the opinion of the court:

Action brought by plaintiff as administratrix of the estate of James F. Looney, deceased, against the defendants, for damages for the death of her intestate, alleged to have been caused by defendants. Judgment went against plaintiff in the supreme court of the District of Columbia, which was affirmed by the court of appeals.

After the plaintiff had rested her case the court directed the jury to return a verdict for the defendants. The correctness of this ruling is the question in the case.

The declaration consists of four counts. The first three allege the employment of the deceased by each of defendant *companies [481] respectively. In the fourth the allegation is that he was rightfully and lawfully in the discharge of his duties.

the insulation, the break occurring after the wire was fastened. Ibid.

Where the plaintiff was employed by a telegraph company in setting up its poles, affixing the crossarms, and stringing the wires, and, in the course of this occupation, he received a severe shock, which was probably caused by a current escaping from some electric light wires which had been strung on the telegraph company's poles in neighboring localities by the permission of the telegraph company, it was held that the question whether the plaintiff should have been warned of the nearness of these electric light wires, he never having worked in the same town before, and having only worked for the company one month, might be left to the jury. Western U. Teleg. Co. v. McMullen, 58 N. J. L. 155, 32 L.R.A. 351, 33 Atl. 384.

Of course, where the danger was obvious, neglect to take the ordinary precautions against a shock will defeat a recovery.

Neglect to use rubber gloves provided for the very work of handling electric wires when a lineman is making connection of wires on a high pole, and is killed by touching their exposed ends, constitutes contributory negligence which prevents liability of the employer. Junior v. Missouri Electric Light & P. Co. 127 Mo. 79, 29 S. W. 988.

A lineman cannot recover of an electric light company for injuries received from electric wires, occurring by reason of defect in his gloves, which it was his own business to inspect and keep in good condition, and to exchange, when necessary, for new ones, although the gloves were thrown to him from a wagon with directions to put them on, by a foreman, if the latter had no special charge of the gloves, and his direction was merely advisory. Smart v. Louisiana Electric Light Co. 47 La. Ann. 869, 17 So. 346.

Where an employee was sent to look for a break in the circuit while the current was on, and took with him a defective shunt cord which he himself selected from among others which were good, and after he found the break, grasped the shunt cord at its defective end, and, at the same time, with his other hand, grasped the naked end of the line wire, which was perfectly insulated a few inches from the end, and thereby received a deadly current which he would not have received by taking hold of the shunt cord if he had not taken hold of the line wire at the extreme end where it was not insulated, it was held that recovery could not be had against his employer. Piedmont Electric Illuminating Co. v. Patteson, 84 Va. 747, 6 S. E. 4.

The claim that the wires should have been made dead before a lineman began to take them down from their position on one arm of a pole to place them on another, in doing which he was killed, is answered by the court, where the testimony is uncontradicted that the lineman could order the opening of the circuit in case of necessity, by saying that the principle announced on this point is that an employee who has the opportunity to avoid the danger will have no recourse for the injury. Smart v. Louisiana Electric Light Co. supra.

Where the night inspector of an electric light and power company undertook to repair a lamp which was out of order because a cut-off screw was burnt out, and was killed, it was held, on a trial by the court without a jury, that his contributory negligence would prevent any liability on the part of the company. In this case his dead body was found lying on the ground near the lamp, which had been lowered to within about 3 feet from the ground and the hood taken off, while the insulating board was on the opposite side of the lamp, showing that when he received the electric shock he must have been standing on the ground, and not on the insulating board. Dixon v. Louisiana Electric Light & P. Co. 47 La. Ann. 1147, 17 So. 696.

A workman who undertakes to fix an arc light contrary to the express orders of his employer is not in the exercise of ordinary care. Illinois Steel Co. v. Kinnare, 100 Ill. App. 208.

A lineman employed by a telephone company, who receives a shock from a charged guy or span wire belonging to a street railway company, is chargeable with negligence which will preclude his recovery of damages from the telephone company, where he failed to test the insulation, although he had apparatus for the purpose, and knew that defects in the insulation of such guy or span

Looney was employed as a "pitman" by the Washington & Great Falls Railroad Company (now the Washington Railway & Electric Company), and was, on the day of his death—July 28, 1901—in one of the "plow pits" located on the lines of the company, near its terminus at Thirty-sixth street and Prospect avenue northwest.

The Metropolitan Company's line connects at this point with that of the Great Falls line. The latter company uses the overhead system. By this system the power is conveyed to the car by means of a "trolley pole" attached to the top of the car and made to touch the trolley wire when used to propel the car. The Metropolitan Company uses the underground system by means of a "plow," so called, projecting through a slot in the tracks to an underground current. The two companies have a trackage arrangement, whereby the cars of the Metropolitan Company run over the line of the other company. The cars of the Metropolitan Company, therefore, are equipped not only with a "plow" and mechanism for the underground system, but with a trolley pole and mechanism for an overhead system. To attach these mechanisms to their respective systems it is necessary to run a car over an excavation on the line of the Great Falls Company known as the "pit." The "pitman" is thus enabled to remove the "plow" from a car to be transferred from the Metropolitan line to the Great Falls line, and adjust or attach the wires or "leads" necessary for the operation of the car over the Great Falls line. While doing this Looney was killed, the plaintiff contends, through the negligence of the conductor of the car in permitting the trolley pole to come in contact with the trolley wire, whereby a current of electricity was transmitted to the motive machinery. And this is the ground of negligence charged in the declaration. In every count it is alleged "before said intestate entered said plow pit it became the duty of the defendants, and each of them, to keep, or cause to be kept, the electric current so cut *off from said pit as not to [482] injure the said intestate; and the plaintiff says that said intestate, having entered said pit in obedience to said direction to him as aforesaid, said defendants negligently failed to keep, or cause to be kept, cut off, as aforesaid, said electric current from said pit while said intestate was therein for the purpose aforesaid, whereby and by reason of said negligence the said intestate was so severely shocked and injured by said electric current that he almost immediately died."

At the trial there was evidence given by the plaintiff of the arrangement between the defendant companies as to the exchange of cars, and to the relation of their respective employees. On this evidence the parties base opposing contentions, the defendants contending that the conductor and Looney were fellow servants, the plaintiff contending that they were not. Both of the lower courts sustained the contention of the de-wires were common, and that there were no persons but the linemen to make such tests. Anderson v. Inland Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 19 Wash. 574, 41 L.R.A. 410, 53 Pac. 657; Bergin v. Southern New England Teleph. Co. 70 Conn. 54, 39 L.R.A. 192, 38 Atl. 888.

A cable splicer for a telephone company, who, on climbing a telephone pole to repair the sheathing of a cable, took hold of a guy wire without noticing that it was in contact with an electric light wire at a point not a foot away from his eyes, is chargeable, as a matter of law, with such contributory negligence as defeats his recovery of any damages from the telephone company for injuries occasioned by the resulting shock, although his vision may have been hampered because the sun was in his eyes. Law v. Central Dist. Printing & Teleg. Co. 140 Fed. 558.

In Hart v. Allegheny County Light Co. 201 Pa. 234, 50 Atl. 772, where a line inspector for an electric light company was injured by a shock received from placing one hand on a telephone wire and the other on an electric light wire, both on the same pole, the court said that whether it be put upon the ground of the knowledge which he had or should have had of the relative position of the two wires, or be based upon his carelessness in failing to protect himself at the time of the accident by the use of the rubber gloves provided for that purpose, in either case the inference was unavoidable that, without his contributory negligence, the accident would not have occurred.

A charge in an action founded on the death of a telephone lineman and inspector, who was killed by coming in contact with a live span wire of a street car company, attached to a pole which he had ascended for the purpose of making repairs for the telephone company, that if he had no knowledge, either actual or by information, that the span wires were not properly insulated and reasonably safe, then he had a right to presume that they were properly and safely insulated unless the want of insulation, or the defective insulation, was so open and obvious that he ought, in the exercise of ordinary and reasonable care and caution, to have known it, is erroneous in that it relieves the employee of the duty to exercise active diligence for his own safety in an occupation peculiarly hazardous, and where the employee has the better opportunity of discovering and avoiding the danger. Jackson & Suburban Street R. Co. v. Simmons, 107 Tenn. 392, 64 S. W. 705.

fendants. The court of appeals beside intimated a belief that the testimony on behalf of plaintiff rather tended to show accident than negligence. If this be so, or if the evidence fails to establish whether the death was caused by accident or negligence, the judgment should be affirmed, and it will be unnecessary to decide whether Looney and the conductor were fellow servants. We will assume, for the purposes of the case, that they were not fellow servants.

The accident was seen by two persons, Margaret Mawson and Helen Gertrude Coon. The former testified that she was sitting in her room on the second floor of her house, which is on Prospect avenue, 75 feet or more from the "pit." She saw the car turn the curve from Thirty-sixth street into Prospect avenue, and "that the trolley pole was up and the trolley wheel against the overhead wire, all the time after the car got into Prospect avenue until it stopped over the pit; that while the car was coming from Thirty-sixth street down to the pit she saw Looney, the deceased, enter the pit through the south trapdoor. That after the car stopped over the pit she saw him go up under the car and take the plow off. That [483]*after he took the plow off she saw him go up under the car again and put the wires up in the car to connect with the overhead trolley, and that while he was in that position she heard him holler and drop down, and the motorman turned and said 'For God's sake, fix that trolley!' and the conductor then pulled the trolley down, but did not before that time. . . . That the accident did not happen until after the car stopped and the deceased had removed the plow and had gone up under the car again and was putting up the wires. That she saw the movements of the deceased under the car through the trapdoor. That she could see his hands taking off the plow; could see nothing but his hands then; that after he took off the plow and went up under the car, she could see a part of his body above the surfate of the street. That the pit was deep enough for a man to stand up in; that she heard no bell ring, nor signal of any sort; her hearing was good enough to hear a bell if one had been rung. That he had to use his hands to remove the plow and also put the overhead current on, and she saw him twist his hands when he got the shock."

Helen Gertrude Coon testified that she was a daughter of the preceding witness and lived with her; that she saw the accident from the front porch of the house, which was about on the level with the sidewalk of Prospect avenue. She saw the car run around the curve from Thirty-sixth street, come down the avenue, and stop over the pit. She was not certain whether the pole was touching the wire before the car stopped over the pit, but the pole was touching the wire or came in contact with it while deceased was taking off the plow. "That her attention was directed to the fact of the trolley being in contact with the wire from the fact that the deceased gave a groan, and the motorman said 'For God sake, pull that trolley down!' That some one said 'Pull the car off the pit!' That she saw deceased take the plow off and then go up under the car to throw the overhead current on. That after he took the plow off and was putting the overhead current on, she heard him groan. That she heard no bells or signals given. *That he had to [484] use his hands to remove the plow and also to put the overhead current on, and she saw him twist his hands when he got the shock. That she saw all this while looking under the car from where she was sitting on the porch. That they took the body up out of the pit over which the car had been standing."

A passenger on the car testified that he heard one bell ring, and immediately the conductor took the rope that holds the trolley rod in his hands, but he did not notice him do anything else. In about a minute and a half there "was a groan down in the hole and he jumped down and saw the man lying on his face. He heard some one say "For God's sake, hold the rod down; pull the pole down!"

Another witness testified that he lived on Prospect avenue, and was in front of his house, lighting the fire in his automobile. He did not notice the car before it stopped. While it was standing over the pit he heard an exclamation and a groan, and some one said "Pull that trolley down!" After the exclamation he looked up and saw the trolley against the wire. He was about 75 feet from the car.

Another witness testified as to the manner of adjusting the plow and "leads," and the way a shock could be received by the pitman. It was to the effect that the wires used to connect the motive power with the overhead trolley are called "leads." Where the pitman takes hold of them to adjust them they are insulated by a covering of india rubber; but at the ends where they connect with other wires they are uninsulated, and have to be so in order to take the current. If the pitman takes hold of them at the right place and there is no leak, he would not be shocked, even though they were connected with the trolley. "Wear and tear," a witness said who was experienced in removing and adjusting plows and wires, "will cause a leak in the insulation. A leak is when the electricity comes through a hole in the insulation, caused by the wear and tear or from the insulation being old or imperfect."

The same witness also testified "that the [485] company furnishes *gloves in the pit with which to handle live plows and wires. But it is not customary or required to use the gloves except upon rainy days. On bright days, the car, when over the pit, is supposed to be 'dead,' and you don't take off the plows with gloves; you can't half do your work with them. That danger from electricity is increased from perspiration, rain, or other moisture. That the day of the accident was a bright, sunshiny day. The accident occurred between two and four o'clock P. M."

If the trolley was on before the plow was disconnected and removed, the plow would be charged with the full voltage on the line.

A witness who had experience with the construction of electric railway systems, and was familiar with the action of electricity generally, and had experience in superintending the work of disconnecting a plow from an electric car and adjusting the wires to move an overhead system, testified that, in his opinion as an expert, it would be the duty of a conductor to keep the trolley off the wire until he received some signal from the man beneath the car.

(1) It will be observed that the deceased did not meet his death while removing the plow. Of this the testimony leaves no doubt. (2) He received the electric shock while adjusting the leads. It follows from the first proposition that the trolley pole was not in contact with the trolley wire when the plow was removed. The argument of plaintiff assumes the contrary, and, indeed, is based entirely on the assumption that the deceased received his death stroke when removing the plow.

Two questions arise on the second proposition. The leads are insulated except at the ends that go into the connection; they are necessarily uninsulated there in order to take the current. But it was not necessary for the deceased to touch the uninsulated parts in making the connection, and, unless touched, no shock would have been received, even though they had been connected with the current by reason of the trolley being in contact with the wire, un- [486] *less there was a leak in the insulation arising from defective construction or wear and tear in use. Granting, therefore, that the conductor was negligent, one of two things was necessary to cause the accident,—a leak in the insulation, or the act of the deceased in touching the uninsulated ends of the leads. Either one or the other was a necessary condition. If the first existed, the defendants may be charged with liability. If the second, they are exonerated. The burden of proof becomes a factor. The plaintiff in the first instance is not required to prove that the deceased was free from contributory negligence; in other words, the burden of proof of contributory negligence is on the defendant. But, on the other hand, plaintiff must establish grounds of liability against the defendant. To hold a master responsible, a servant must show that the appliances and instrumentalities furnished were defective. A defect cannot be inferred from the mere fact of an injury. There must be some substantive proof of the negligence. Knowledge of the defect or some omission of duty in regard to it must be shown.

In Texas P. R. Co. v. Barrett, 166 U. S. 617, 41 L. ed. 1136, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 707, the plaintiff (defendant in error in this court) was a foreman in charge of a switch engine, and was injured by the explosion of a boiler of another engine. There was evidence tending to prove that the boiler was and had been in a weak and unsafe state by reason of the condition of the stay bolts, and that if a well-known test had been applied the condition of the bolts would have been discovered. The circuit court instructed the jury that the mere fact of the injury received from the explosion would not entitle plaintiff to recover: that, besides the fact of explosion, he must show that the explosion resulted from the failure of the railroad company to exercise ordinary care either in selecting the engine or in keeping it in reasonably safe repair. The court also instructed the jury that the burden of proof was on the plaintiff throughout the case to show that the boilers and engines that exploded were improper appliances to be used on its railroad by the defendant; that by reason of the particular defects pointed out and insisted *on by the plaintiff the boiler explod- [487] ed and injured him, and the plaintiff was ignorant of the defects, and did not, by his negligence, contribute to his injury. Passing on these instructions, this court said that they laid down the applicable rule with sufficient accuracy, and in substantial conformity with the views of this court expressed in prior cases which were cited.

Plaintiff in the case at bar introduced no evidence whatever of a defect in the leads or that leaks were likely to occur, or the amount or degree of inspection necessary to discover them, or that there was an omission of inspection. The case was probably brought and tried on a different theory. It was argued in this court on a different theory. It was argued on the assumption that the deceased was killed when removing the plow. The assumption is directly in the teeth of the testimony. "The accident did not happen until after the car stopped and the deceased had removed the plow and had gone up under the car again and was putting up the wires." (Testimony of Margaret Mawson.) And to like effect is the testimony of Miss Coon. "She saw deceased take the plow off and then go up under the car to throw the overhead current on. That after he took the plow off and was putting the overhead current on, she heard him groan." And she saw him "twist his hands when he got the shock."

The declaration does not charge a defect in the leads. It charges the negligence to have been in the failure "to keep, or cause to be kept, cut off" the electric current while the deceased was in the pit, "whereby and by reason of said negligence the said intestate was so severely shocked and injured by said electric current that he almost immediately died." In other words, the cause of death was the negligent act of permitting the trolley pole to come in contact with the trolley wire.

But granting plaintiff is not limited by her declaration, nevertheless she has not satisfied the requirements of law in her proof. A plaintiff in the first instance must [488] show negligence *on the part of the defendant. Having done this, he need not go farther in those jurisdictions where the burden of proof is on the defendant to show contributory negligence. In other words, if there is no evidence which speaks one way or the other with reference to contributory negligence of the person killed, then it is presumed that there was no such negligence. Thomp. Neg. § 401; Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Landrigan, 191 U. S. 461, 48 L. ed. 262, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 137; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Gentry, 163 U. S. 353, 41 L. ed. 186, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1104. But the negligence of a defendant cannot be inferred from a presumption of care on the part of the person killed. A presumption in the performance of duty attends the defendant as well as the person killed. It must be overcome by direct evidence. One presumption cannot be built upon another. Douglass v. Mitchell, 35 Pa. 440; Philadelphia City Pass. R. Co. v. Henrice, 92 Pa. 431, 37 Am. Rep. 699; Yarnell v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. 113 Mo. 570, 18 L. R. A. 599, 21 S. W. 1.

Judgment affirmed.

UNITED STATES, Plff. in. Err.,
v.
NEW YORK & CUBA MAIL STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

1. Internal revenue—recovery of stamp tax illegally imposed—voluntary payment.— The purchase of documentary stamps at various times without protest, and the affixing of such stamps to manifests of cargoes on vessels bound to foreign ports, cannot be deemed to have been under duress, so as to sustain a recovery from the United States of the amount of the illegal tax so collected, because clearance papers for vessels so bound could not be procured without delivery to the collector of the district of the stamped manifests, without which clearance papers the vessels would be prevented from sailing, or would be liable, under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4197, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 2840, for the penalty therein prescribed.

2. Internal revenue—recovery of stamp tax illegally imposed—voluntary payment.—The necessity of protest or notice to sustain the recovery of a stamp tax illegally collected on manifests of cargoes on vessels bound to foreign ports is not removed by the provision of the act of May 12, 1900 (31 Stat. at L. 177, chap. 393, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 2276), authorizing the commissioner of internal revenue to redeem or make allowance for internal revenue stamps in any manner "wrongfully collected."

Argued January 22, 23, 1906. Decided February 19, 1906.

IN ERROR to the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York to review a judgment overruling the demurrer to a petition for the recovery of the amount paid for documentary stamps used on manifests of cargoes on vessels bound for foreign ports, and granting the relief sought. Reversed and remanded with directions to sustain the demurrer.

See same case below, 125 Fed. 320.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Assistant Attorney General Robb argued the cause and filed a brief for plaintiff in error.

Mr. John G. Carlisle argued the cause, and, with Mr. William Edmond Curtis, filed a brief for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice McKenna delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant in error filed a petition in the district court to recover the amount paid by it for documentary stamps used on manifests of cargoes on certain vessels bound to foreign ports, as required by an act of Congress approved June 13, 1898 [30 Stat. at L. 448, chap. 448, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 2286], entitled "An Act to Provide Ways and Means to Meet War Expenditures, and for Other Purposes."

NOTE.—As to when taxes illegally assessed may be recovered back—see notes to Phelps v. New York, 2 L.R.A. 626; State ex rel. McCarty v. Nelson, 4 L.R.A. 300; and Erskine v. Van Arsdale, 21 L. ed. U. S. 63.

The United States demurred to the petition on the ground [491] *that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a claim against it. The demurrer was overruled and judgment entered for the sum of $240, the amount of claim. 125 Fed. 320.

It appears from the opinion of the district court that the constitutionality of the tax was alone submitted for decision, and the court, upon the authority of Fairbank v. United States, 181 U. S. 283, 45 L. ed. 862, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 648, held that the tax was unconstitutional.

In the Fairbank Case it was held that a stamp tax on bills of lading imposed by the act of June 13 was a tax on exports, and therefore void. In the case at bar the district court observed "that the essential character of the stamp tax on manifests was that of a tax on exports, in the same sense in which a stamp tax on a bill of lading was a tax on exports." The United States now concedes the correctness of this ruling, but urges, nevertheless, that the judgment for defendant in error was erroneous because, as is contended, the stamps were purchased and affixed voluntarily and without protest. For this, Chesebrough v. United States, 192 U. S. 253, 48 L. ed. 432, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 262, is adduced as controlling. In that case recovery was sought for the price of stamps affixed to a deed in compliance with Schedule A of the act of June 13, 1898. The unconstitutionality of the act was asserted by Chesebrough, but was not discussed by the court. The decision was based on the ground that the payment of the taxes was voluntary. Chesebrough contended that § 7 of the act, which made it a misdemeanor to omit to fix stamps to the instruments enumerated, constituted such coercion as made the payment involuntary; and, besides, that his vendee was unwilling to accept the deed without the stamps required by the act, and that he "under compulsion of said law," in order to receive the consideration for his conveyance, to enable his deed to be recorded and received in evidence, and to give a title free from doubt, purchased stamps from the United States collector of internal revenue, and placed them upon the deed.

What is the duress alleged in the case at bar? The averment of the petition is—"That said act being in force, under com- [492] pulsion and through *fear of criminal prosecution, and in order to obtain clearance papers, which could not have been procured without the delivery to the collector of the port of New York, of outward foreign manifests of cargo, stamped as aforesaid, and without which clearance papers the vessels hereinafter named would have been prevented from sailing, or would have become liable for the penalty imposed by § 4197 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 2840), said James E. Ward & Company, for and on behalf of your petitioner and as such general agents, as aforesaid, purchased and affixed to the said outward foreign manifests of cargo and canceled internal revenue documentary stamps of the United States of the face value of two hundred and forty dollars ($240), as appears more fully by the exhibit hereto annexed and made a part of this petition, and marked 'Exhibit A,' which contains the name of the vessel, the date of delivery to said collector of the outward foreign manifests of cargo, the alleged tax on which is sought to be recovered, and the face value of the documentary internal revenue stamp affixed thereto."

It is alleged that the stamps were purchased from Walter H. Stiner, a dealer in internal revenue stamps on various days subsequent to January 1, 1900, and that Stiner purchased them from the collector of internal revenue, and the proceeds thereof were duly paid over to the United States.

In this case, as in the Chesebrough Case, the collector was not informed at the time of the purchase of the particular purpose for which the stamps were to be used, and no intimation was given him, written or oral, that defendant in error claimed that the law regarding such stamps was unconstitutional, and that it was making the purchase under duress. And, expressing the principle to be applied, the court said, in the Chesebrough Case, "even a protest or notice will not avail if the payment be made voluntarily, with full knowledge of all the circumstances, and without any coercion by the actual or threatened exercise of power possessed, or supposed to be possessed, by the party exacting or receiving the payment, over the person or property *of the party making the payment, from [493] which the latter has no other means of immediate relief than such payment."

Applying that principle to the allegation that Chesebrough's vendee was unwilling to accept an unstamped conveyance, it was said "if that constituted duress as between Chesebrough and his building company, it was a matter with which the collector had nothing to do. On the face of the petition the purchase was purely voluntary and made under mutual mistake of law, if the law were unconstitutional."

It is, however, insisted that these observations are not apposite to the case at bar. The coercion, it is contended, that Chesebough alleged, was between him and some third party. In the case at bar the coercion was exerted "between the petitioner [defendant in error] and the very authorities who demanded and compelled the payment of the tax," through § 4197 of the Revised Statutes of the United States. This section requires the master or person in charge of any vessel bound for a foreign port to deliver to the collector of the district a manifest, and upon its delivery the collector shall grant a clearance for such vessel and her cargo. It is provided:

"If any vessel bound to a foreign port departs on her voyage to such foreign port without delivering such manifest and obtaining a clearance, as hereby required, the master or other person having the charge or command of such vessel shall be liable to a penalty of five hundred dollars for every such offense." U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4197.

We do not think this section makes a difference in the cases. The destination of the stamps cannot affect the payment of the tax which they represent. It may be more or less of an inducement to submit to the tax, but who can determine the degree? The loss of a purchaser, as in the Chesebrough Case, may be of much more concern than the payment of the penalty for violating the provisions of § 4197. Besides, whatever element of coercion there was came from the United States, and it was not as immediate in the case of the manifests as in the case of the deed. The [494] applicable principle is expressed in *the extract from the Chesebrough Case, which we have given above. It is stated in Union P. R. Co. v. Dodge County, 98 U. S. 541, 25 L. ed. 196, and quoted from that case in Little v. Bowers, 134 U. S. at page 554, 33 L. ed. at page 1019, and 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. at page 621, as follows: "Where a party pays an illegal demand, with a full knowledge of all the facts which render such demand illegal, without an immediate and urgent necessity therefor, or unless to release his person or property from detention, or to prevent an immediate seizure of his person or property, such payment must be deemed voluntary, and cannot be recovered back."

There was no such imminence in the duress charged by defendant in error. It purchased the stamps of a dealer at various times. No information was given to the collector of internal revenue of the particular purpose, nor claim that the law was unconstitutional. There was no claim of the collector of the port from whom the clearances were asked that defendant in error was acting under the restraint of the law, and yielding only to enable his ships to depart to their destinations. All determining conditions, therefore, are the same as in the Chesebrough Case.

2. It is, however, contended that even though the stamps were purchased without any duress or coercion, that under the act of Congress of May 12, 1900 [31 Stat. at L. 177, chap. 393, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 2276], entitled "An Act Authorizing the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to Redeem or Make Allowance for Internal Revenue Stamps," the Commissioner must make allowance for the stamps used by the petitioner, and the Commissioner having declined to do so, the defendant in error has a right of action under the Tucker act. The provision of the act of May 12, relied on, is as follows:

"That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, subject to regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, may, upon receipt of satisfactory evidence of the facts, make allowance for or redeem such of the stamps, issued under authority of law, to denote the payment of any internal revenue tax, as may have been spoiled, destroyed, or rendered useless or unfit for the purpose intended, or for which the owner may have no *use, or which, through mistake, may [495] have been improperly or unnecessarily used, or where the rates or duties represented thereby have been excessive in amount, paid in error, or in any manner wrongfully collected."

The argument is that by this provision "the question of duress or compulsion is taken entirely out of the case," because in most of the instances enumerated "it is inconceivable that there should be any protest or duress." And it is further alleged that the act of 1900 was not considered in the Chesebrough Case. It certainly does not follow that, because in some instances, protest or duress cannot exist, that they cannot exist in other cases, nor that the statute intended to destroy the difference between voluntary and involuntary payment of taxes. In the Chesebrough Case, § 3220 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 2086) was considered. It authorized the Commissioner of Internal Revenue "to remit, refund, and pay back all taxes . . . that appear to be unjustly assessed or excessive in amount, or in any manner wrongfully collected." The words in italics are identical with those in the act of May 12, which are relied on by defendant in error. Commenting on § 3220, the court said, in the Chesebrough Case: It is argued that the provision of § 3220, for the repayment of judgments against the collector, rendered protest or notice unnecessary for his protection; but it was clearly demanded for the protection of the government in conducting the extensive business of dealing in stamps, which were sold and delivered in quantities, and without it there would not be the slightest vestige of involuntary payment in transactions like that under consideration. And we find no right of recovery, expressly or by necessary implication, conferred by statute, in such circumstances."

We, therefore, think that this case is governed by the Chesebrough Case, and on its authority judgment is reversed and case remanded with directions to sustain the demurrer.

[496] *STATE OF MISSOURI, Complainant,
v.
STATE OF ILLINOIS and The Sanitary District of Chicago, Defts.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 496–526.)

Controversy between states—injunctive relief against drainage of sewage into water course.—The discharge into the Mississippi river, through an artificial drainage canal, of the sewage of Chicago, mixed with a large volume of pure water from Lake Michigan, will not be enjoined by the Federal Supreme Court on complaint by the state of Missouri that the result of such action is to poison the water supply of its inhabitants, where the evidence, though disclosing an increase in the deaths from typhoid fever in St. Louis, leaves it doubtful whether the typhoid bacillus can and does survive the journey and reach the intake of St. Louis in the Mississippi, and shows other possible sources of infection in the discharge of sewage above the St. Louis intake from other towns and cities, some of which are situated in Missouri.

[No. 4, Original.]

Argued January 2, 3, 4, 1906. Decided February 19, 1906.

ORIGINAL suit by the state of Missouri to restrain the discharge of the sewage of Chicago through an artificial drainage canal into the Mississippi river. Bill dismissed without prejudice.

See same case on demurrer, 180 U. S. 208, 45 L. ed. 497, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 331.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Sam B. Jeffries, Charles W. Bates, and Herbert S. Hadley argued the cause and filed a brief for complainant:

The inhabitants of a large and populous city have the right to use the water of the stream upon which the city is situated in its natural condition, free from infectious material deposited into it at points above. If the discharge of infectious sewage and filth in the stream renders the waters dangerous and harmful to the people living below, such municipality or person creating the nuisance and causing the danger or damage may be enjoined from continuing the infectious discharges.

30 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 378; Indianapolis Water Co. v. American Strawboard Co. 57 Fed. 1000; Trevett v. Prison Asso. 98 Va. 332, 50 L.R.A. 564, 81 Am. St. Rep. 727, 36 S. E. 373; Atty. Gen. v. Birmingham, 4 Kay & J. 528; Platt Bros. v. Waterbury, 72 Conn. 531, 48 L.R.A. 691, 77 Am. St. Rep. 335, 45 Atl. 154; Wood, Nuisances, 3d ed. §§ 427–579.

Where there are several contributing causes of the pollution and infection of a water course, one cannot escape liability for those living below and using the waters for domestic purposes, because of such pollution by themselves. Eliminating from the case the fact that Chicago is situated upon the natural watershed of Lake Michigan, while complainant is situated upon the natural watershed of the Mississippi, and even though it be assumed that the same rights with reference to the disposal of its sewage belong to Chicago as to any other city upon the natural watershed of the Illinois river, it cannot be claimed by the defendants that they have the right to pollute the waters of the Mississippi because there are other cities situated upon its watershed which contribute to the pollution after or before the water reaches the Mississippi at Grafton.

The fact that Peoria, Pekin, Havana, La-Salle, Beardstown, and Joliet sewer into the Illinois river does not constitute the right of defendants likewise to discharge the sewage from the city of Chicago into the Illinois river.

Eq. 548; Dygert v. Schenck, 23 Wend. 446, 35 Am. Dec. 575; Weld v. Hornby, 7 East, 195.

An upper riparian owner has no right, by emptying into a stream an artificial supply of water, or the water of another water course, so as to increase the amount of water in the stream, so to injure a lower riparian owner; and where the water is ponded by a dam, the owner has no right, by discharging the contents of the pond, to increase the flow of the water course beyond its natural capacity, to the injury of the lower proprietors.

30 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 377.

Every riparian owner is entitled to have the water course flow by his land in an unpolluted condition, and one riparian owner has no right unreasonably to corrupt or pollute its waters to such an extent as essentially to impair its purity.

Indianapolis Water Co. v. American Strawboard Co. 53 Fed. 970; Lewis v. Stein, 16 Ala. 214, 50 Am. Dec. 179.

The above rule is applicable to riparian owners, and much stronger must be its application when applied to those persons who do not reside upon the watershed of the stream in question.

Atty. Gen. v. Hackney, L. R. 20 Eq. 626.

A city may be enjoined from discharging its sewage into a running stream by a riparian owner below the point of discharge.

Dwight v. Hayes, 150 Ill. 273, 41 Am. St. Rep. 367, 37 N. E. 218; Gould, Waters, § 546.

If this doctrine can be enforced against a municipality located upon a watershed of a stream involved, much greater is the reason and necessity of enforcing it as against the objectionable conduct of a municipality located upon an adjacent watershed, wherein an attempt is made to divert the sewage and filth from the basin prepared by nature for it into the adjoining drainage basin, thereby compelling the inhabitants residing upon a neighboring watershed to be subjected to the inconvenience and annoyance of the waste, filth, and objectionable refuse of their unnatural neighbors.

See Spence v. McDonough, 77 Iowa, 460, 42 N. W. 371; Ferguson v. Firmenich Mfg. Co. 77 Iowa, 576, 14 Am. St. Rep. 319, 42 N. W. 448.

In Harris v. Mackintosh, 133 Mass. 228, the court held that the owner of land on a natural stream may maintain a bill in equity to restrain another landowner on such stream from carrying on business in such a way as to pollute the water of the stream, to the injury of plaintiff.

In Grey ex rel. Simmons v. Paterson, 58 N. J. Eq. 1, 42 Atl. 749, the following propositions were determined:

1st. Owners of land on the banks of a stream are entitled to have the water flow to them unpolluted.

2d. Pollution of a river by the dicharge of city sewage gathered from a large area, and caused to flow into the stream by artificially constructed grades, cannot be justified as a natural and reasonable use of the river.

3d. The public act authorizing a city to discharge its sewage according to maps exhibiting sewer outlets, etc., does not license a city in discharging such quantities of sewage as will pollute the river.

4th. Riparian owners who sue to restrain a city from discharging sewage into a river as soon as the sewage begins to contaminate the waters are not guilty of laches.

Every man must so use his own property as not to injure that of his neighbor, and the fact that he has invested much money and employs many men in carrying on a lawful and useful business upon his land does not change the rule, or permit him permanently to prevent a material portion of the water of a natural stream from flowing over the land of a lower riparian owner, or to so pollute the rest of the stream as to render it unfit for ordinary use.

When one riparian proprietor, by his use, causes deterioration of the water of a natural stream, the fact that others are using it in the same manner, instead of preventing relief, may require it; and even if the damages are slight, where the act complained of is such that by its repetition or continuance it may become the foundation or evidence of an adverse right, a court of equity will interpose by injunction.

Strobel v. Kerr Salt Co. 164 N. Y. 304, 51 L.R.A. 687, 79 Am. St. Rep. 643, 58 N. E. 142.

A person owning land has no right to rid it of surface water by collecting it in artificial channels and discharging it through or upon the land of an adjoining proprietor. This rule is alike under the common and civil law.

Gould, Waters, § 271.

Defendants were without authority to construct the canal in question for the purpose of discharging the sewage of the great city of Chicago into the Illinois and Mississippi rivers, and thereby burdening the people of the Mississippi valley with the elements of danger to life, health, and society, contrary to the plan which nature has devised.

The defendants occupy the position of absolute strangers, — trespassers, — having no rights in common to use the waters of the Mississippi for any purpose whatever, applicable to the law relating to riparian ownership, it having been held that the law with reference to riparian ownership and the use of a stream by persons residing upon its banks, or upon its watershed, applies alike to persons, individuals, and public municipal corporations.

A party may, by laches, deprive himself of an equitable remedy against a nuisance.

2 Wood, Nuisances, §§ 804–806; Gould, Waters, §§ 530, 533.

It is the well-established doctrine of the Supreme Court of the United States that laches on the part of the complainant is a bar to the granting of equitable relief. This is especially so where the lack of diligence on the part of the complainant has led the defendant to place nimself in a position from which he cannot escape or recede without great loss and inconvenience.

The question of laches does not depend, as does the statute of limitations, upon the fact that a certain definite time has elapsed since the cause of action accrued, but whether, under all the circumstances of the particular case, plaintiff is chargeable with a want of due diligence in failing to institute proceedings before he did so.

Municipal authorities have the power to construct and maintain sewerage systems for the health and comfort of the inhabitants thereof, and may discharge the same into navigable streams and waters. It was and is a lawful act of the city of Chicago to discharge its sewers into the Chicago river and the branches thereof.

In an action of this kind, where each party produces the evidence of a reasonable number of reputable experts, equally schooled in the questions of science at issue, and such evidence shows an irreconcilable conflict, the evidence of numerous nonexpert witnesses (especially if uncontradicted), who, from personal experience by the actual use of the water, testify that, before and after the alleged contamination complained of, they continuously used the water for drinking and other domestic uses, and for the making of steam and other manufacturing purposes, and that since the doing of the acts complained of the water has been improved for such and all other purposes, the evidence of such nonexpert witnesses is of more weight than that of such experts, and should control the decision of the case.

If the evidence is conflicting, and the injury doubtful, such conflict and doubt will be ground for withholding an injunction. Where interposition by injunction is sought to restrain that which it is apprehended will create a nuisance of which its complainant may complain, the proofs must show such a state of facts as will manifest the danger to be real and immediate.

Mr. Justice Holmes delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a suit brought by the state of Missouri to restrain the discharge of the sewage of Chicago through an artificial channel into the Desplaines river, in the state of Illinois. That river empties into the Illinois river, and the latter empties into the Mississippi at a point about 43 miles above the city of St. Louis. It was alleged in the bill that the result of the threatened discharge would be to send 1,500 tons of poisonous filth daily into the Mississippi, to deposit great quantities of the same upon the part of the bed of the last-named river belonging to the plaintiff, and so to poison the water of that river, upon which various of the plaintiff's cities, towns, and inhabitants depended, as to make it unfit for drinking, agricultural, or manufacturing purposes. It was alleged that the defendant sanitary district was acting in pursuance of a statute of the state of Illinois, and as an agency of that state. The case is stated at length in 180 U. S. 208, 45 L. ed. 497, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 331, where a demurrer to the bill was overruled. A supplemental bill alleges that since the filing of the original bill the drainage canal has been opened and put into operation, and has produced and is producing all the evils which were apprehended when the injunction first was asked. The answers deny the plaintiff's case, allege that the new plan sends the water of the Illinois river into the Mississippi much purer than it was before, that many towns and cities of the plaintiff along the Missouri and Mississippi discharge their sewage into those rivers, and that if there is any trouble the plaintiff must look nearer home for the cause.

The decision upon the demurrer discussed mainly the jurisdiction of the court, and, as leave to answer was given when the demurrer was overruled, naturally there was no very precise consideration of the principles of law to be applied if the plaintiff should prove its case. That was left to the future, *with the general intima- [518] tion that the nuisance must be made out upon determinate and satisfactory evidence, that it must not be doubtful, and that the danger must be shown to be real and immediate. The nuisance set forth in the bill was one which would be of international importance,—a visible change of a great river from a pure stream into a polluted and poisoned ditch. The only question presented was whether, as between the states of of the Union, this court was competent to deal with a situation which, if it arose between independent sovereignties, might lead to war. Whatever differences of opinion there might be upon matters of detail, the jurisdiction and authority of this court to deal with such a case as that is not open to doubt. But the evidence now is in, the actual facts have required for their establishment the most ingenious experiments, and for their interpretation the most subtle speculations, of modern science, and therefore it becomes necessary at the present stage to consider somewhat more nicely than heretofore how the evidence in it is to be approached.

The first question to be answered was put in the well known case of the Wheeling bridge. Pennsylvania v. Wheeling & B. Bridge Co. 13 How. 518, 14 L. ed. 249. In that case, also, there was a bill brought by a state to restrain a public nuisance,—the erection of a bridge alleged to obstruct navigation,—and a supplemental bill to abate it after it was erected. The question was put most explicitly by the dissenting judges, but it was accepted by all as fundamental. The Chief Justice observed that if the bridge was a nuisance, it was an offense against the sovereignty whose laws had been violated, and he asked what sovereignty that was. 13 How. 561, 14 L. ed. 267; Daniel, J., 13 How. 599, 14 L. ed. 283. See also Kansas v. Colorado, 185 U. S. 125, 46 L. ed. 838, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 552. It could not be Virginia, because that state had purported to authorize it by statute. The Chief Justice found no prohibition by the United States. 13 How. 580, 14 L. ed. 275. No third source of law was suggested by anyone. The majority accepted the Chief Justice's postulate, and found an answer in what Congress had done.

It hardly was disputed that Congress [519] could deal with the *matter under its power to regulate commerce. The majority observed that although Congress had not declared in terms that a state should not obstruct the navigation of the Ohio by bridges, yet it had regulated navigation upon that river in various ways, and had sanctioned the compact between Virginia and Kentucky when Kentucky was let into the Union. By that compact the use and navigation of the Ohio, so far as the territory of either state lay thereon, was to be free and common to the citizens of the United States. The compact, by the sanction of Congress, had become a law of the Union. A state law which violated it was unconstitutional. Obstructing the navigation of the river was said to violate it, and it was added that more was not necessary to give a civil remedy for an injury done by the obstruction. 13 How. 565, 566, 14 L. ed. 268, 269. At a later stage of the case, after Congress had authorized the bridge, it was stated again in so many words that the ground of the former decision was that "the act of the legislature of Virginia afforded no authority or justification. It was in conflict with the acts of Congress, which were the paramount law." 18 How. 421, 429, 15 L. ed. 435, 436.

In the case at bar, whether Congress could act or not, there is no suggestion that it has forbidden the action of Illinois. The only ground on which that state's conduct can be called in question is one which must be implied from the words of the Constitution. The Constitution extends the judicial power of the United States to controversies between two or more states, and between a state and citizens of another state, and gives this court original jurisdiction in cases in which a state shall be a party. Therefore, if one state raises a controversy with another, this court must determine whether there is any principle of law, and, if any, what, on which the plaintiff can recover. But the fact that this court must decide does not mean, of course, that it takes the place of a legislature. Some principles it must have power to declare. For instance, when a dispute arises about boundaries, this court must determine the line; and, in doing so, must be governed by rules explicitly *or implicitly recognized. Rhode [520] Island v. Massachusetts, 12 Pet. 657, 737, 9 L. ed. 1233, 1265. It must follow and apply those rules, even if legislation of one or both of the states seems to stand in the way. But the words of the Constitution would be a narrow ground upon which to construct and apply to the relations between states the same system of municipal law in all its details which would be applied between individuals. If we suppose a case which did not fall within the power of Congress to regulate, the result of a declaration of rights by this court would be the establishment of a rule which would be irrevocable by any power except that of this court to reverse its own decision, an amendment of the Constitution, or possibly an agreement between the States, sanctioned by the legislature of the United States.

The difficulties in the way of establishing such a system of law might not be insuperable, but they would be great and new. Take the question of prescription in a case like the present. The reasons on which prescription for a public nuisance is denied or may be granted to an individual as against the sovereign power to which he is subject have no application to an independent state. See 1 Oppenheim, International Law, 293, §§ 242, 243. It would be contradicting a fundamental principle of human nature to allow no effect to the lapse of time, however long (Davis v. Mills, 194 U. S. 451, 457, 48 L. ed. 1067, 1071, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 692), yet the fixing of a definite time usually belongs to the legislature rather than the courts. The courts did fix a time in the rule against perpetuities, but the usual course, as in the instances of statutes of limitation, the duration of patents, the age of majority, etc., is to depend upon the lawmaking power.

It is decided that a case such as is made by the bill may be a ground for relief. The purpose of the foregoing observations is not to lay a foundation for departing from that decision, but simply to illustrate the great and serious caution with which it is necessary to approach the question whether a case is proved. It may be imagined that a nuisance might be created by a state upon a navigable river like the Danube, which [521] would *amount to a casus belli for a state lower down, unless removed. If such a nuisance were created by a state upon the Mississippi, the controversy would be resolved by the more peaceful means of a suit in this court. But it does not follow that every matter which would warrant a resort to equity by one citizen against another in the same jurisdiction equally would warrant an interference by this court with the action of a state. It hardly can be that we should be justified in declaring statutes ordaining such action void in every instance where the circuit court might intervene in a private suit, upon no other ground than analogy to some selected system of municipal law, and the fact that we have jurisdiction over controversies between states.

The nearest analogy would be found in those cases in which an easement has been declared in favor of land in one state over land in another. But there the right is recognized on the assumption of a concurrence between the two states, the one, so to speak, offering the right, the other permitting it to be accepted. Mannville Co. v. Worcester, 138 Mass. 89, 52 Am. Rep. 261. But when the state itself is concerned, and by its legislation expressly repudiates the right set up, an entirely different question is presented.

Before this court ought to intervene, the case should be of serious magnitude, clearly and fully proved, and the principle to be applied should be one which the court is prepared deliberately to maintain against all considerations on the other side. See Kansas v. Colorado, 185 U. S. 125, 46 L. ed. 838, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 552.

As to the principle to be laid down, the caution necessary is manifest. It is a question of the first magnitude whether the destiny of the great rivers is to be the sewers of the cities along their banks or to be protected against everything which threatens their purity. To decide the whole matter at one blow by an irrevocable fiat would be at least premature. If we are to judge by what the plaintiff itself permits, the discharge of sewage into the Mississippi by cities and towns is to be expected. We believe that the practice of discharging into [522] the river is *general along its banks, except where the levees of Louisiana have led to a different course. The argument for the plaintiff asserts it to be proper within certain limits. These are facts to be considered. Even in cases between individuals, some consideration is given to the practical course of events. In the black country of England parties would not be expected to stand upon extreme rights. St. Helen's Smelting Co. v. Tipping, 11 H. L. Cas. 642. See Boston Ferrule Co. v. Hills, 159 Mass. 147, 150, 20 L. R. A. 844, 34 N. E. 85. Where, as here, the plaintiff has sovereign powers, and deliberately permits discharges similar to those of which it complains, it not only offers a standard to which the defendant has the right to appeal, but, as some of those discharges are above the intake of St. Louis, it warrants the defendant in demanding the strictest proof that the plaintiff's own conduct does not produce the result, or at least so conduce to it, that courts should not be curious to apportion the blame.

We have studied the plaintiff's statement of the facts in detail, and have perused the evidence, but it is unnecessary for the purposes of decision to do more than give the general result in a very simple way. At the outset we cannot but be struck by the consideration that if this suit had been brought fifty years ago it almost necessarily would have failed. There is no pretense that there is a nuisance of the simple kind that was known to the older common law. There is nothing which can be detected by the unassisted senses,—no visible increase of filth, no new smell. On the contrary, it is proved that the great volume of pure water from Lake Michigan, which is mixed with the sewage at the start, has improved the Illinois river in these respects to a noticeable extent. Formerly it was sluggish and ill smelling. Now it is a comparatively clear stream to which edible fish have returned. Its water is drunk by the fishermen, it is said, without evil results. The plaintiff's case depends upon an inference of the unseen. It draws the inference from two propositions. First, that typhoid fever has increased considerably since the change, and that other explanations *have been dis- [523] proved; and second, that the bacillus of typhoid can and does survive the journey and reach the intake of St. Louis in the Mississippi.

We assume the now-prevailing scientific explanation of typhoid fever to be correct. But when we go beyond that assumption, everything is involved in doubt. The data upon which an increase in the deaths from typhoid fever in St. Louis is alleged are disputed. The elimination of other causes is denied. The experts differ as to the time and distance within which a stream would purify itself. No case of an epidemic caused by infection at so remote a source is brought forward and the cases which are produced are controverted. The plaintiff obviously must be cautious upon this point, for, if this suit should succeed, many others would follow, and it not improbably would find itself a defendant to a bill by one or more of the states lower down upon the Mississippi. The distance which the sewage has to travel (357 miles) is not open to debate, but the time of transit, to be inferred from experiments with floats, is estimated as varying from eight to eighteen and a half days, with forty-eight hours more from intake to distribution, and when corrected by observations of bacteria is greatly prolonged by the defendants. The experiments of the defendants' experts lead them to the opinion that a typhoid bacillus could not survive the journey, while those on the other side maintain that it might live and keep its power for twenty-five days or more, and arrive at St. Louis. Upon the question at issue, whether the new discharge from Chicago hurts St. Louis, there is a categorical contradiction between the experts on the two sides.

The Chicago drainage canal was opened on January 17, 1900. The deaths from typhoid fever in St. Louis, before and after that date, are stated somewhat differently in different places. We give them mainly from the plaintiff's brief: 1890, 140; 1891, 165; 1892, 441; 1893, 215; 1894, 171; 1895, 106; 1896, 106; 1897, 125; 1898, 95; 1899, 131; 1900, 154; 1901, 181; 1902, 216; 1903, 281. It is argued for the defendant that [524] the numbers *for the later years have been enlarged by carrying over cases which in earlier years would have been put into a miscellaneous column (intermittent, remittent, typho-malaria, etc., etc.), but we assume that the increase is real. Nevertheless, comparing the last four years with the earlier ones, it is obvious that the ground for a specific inference is very narrow, if we stopped at this point. The plaintiff argues that the increase must be due to Chicago, since there is nothing corresponding to it in the watersheds of the Missouri or Mississippi. On the other hand, the defendant points out that there has been no such enhanced rate of typhoid on the banks of the Illinois as would have been found if the opening of the drainage canal were the true cause.

Both sides agree that the detection of the typhoid bacillus in the water is not to be expected. But the plaintiff relies upon proof that such bacilli are discharged into the Chicago sewage in considerable quantities; that the number of bacilli in the water of the Illinois is much increased, including the bacillus coli communis, which is admitted to be an index of contamination, and that the chemical analyses lead to the same inference. To prove that the typhoid bacillus could make the journey an experiment was tried with the bacillus prodigiosus, which seems to have been unknown, or nearly unknown, in these waters. After preliminary trials, in which these bacilli emptied into the Mississippi near the mouth of the Illinois were found near the St. Louis intake and in St. Louis in times varying from three days to a month, one hundred and seven barrels of the same, said to contain one thousand million bacilli to the cubic centimeter, were put into the drainage canal near the starting point on November 6, and on December 4 an example was found at the St. Louis intake tower. Four others were found on the three following days, two at the tower and two at the mouth of the Illinois. As this bacillus is asserted to have about the same length of life in sunlight in living waters as the bacillus typhosus, although it is a little more hardy, the experiment is thought to prove one element of the plaintiff's case, although *the very [525] small number found in many samples of water is thought by the other side to indicate that practically no typhoid germs would get through. It seems to be conceded that the purification of the Illinois by the large dilution from Lake Michigan (nine parts or more in ten) would increase the danger, as it now generally is believed that the bacteria of decay, the saprophytes, which flourish in stagnant pools, destroy the pathogenic germs. Of course, the addition of so much water to the Illinois also increases its speed.

On the other hand, the defendant's evidence shows a reduction in the chemical and bacterial accompaniments of pollution in a given quantity of water, which would be natural in view of the mixture of nine parts to one from Lake Michigan. It affirms that the Illinois is better or no worse at its mouth than it was before, and makes it at least uncertain how much of the present pollution is due to Chicago and how much to sources further down, not complained of in the bill. It contends that if any bacilli should get through, they would be scattered and enfeebled and would do no harm. The defendant also sets against the experiment with the bacillus prodigiosus a no less striking experiment with typhoid germs suspended in the Illinois river in permeable sacs. According to this the duration of the life of these germs has been much exaggerated, and in that water would not be more than three or four days. It is suggested, by way of criticism that the germs may not have been of normal strength, that the conditions were less favorable than if they had floated down in a comparatively unchanging body of water, and that the germs may have escaped; but the experiment raises at least a serious doubt. Further, it hardly is denied that there is no parallelism in detail between the increase and decrease of typhoid fever in Chicago and St. Louis. The defendant's experts maintain that the water of the Missouri is worse than that of the Illinois, while it contributes a much larger portion to the intake. The evidence is very strong that it is necessary for St. Louis to take preventive measures, by filtration or other-[526] wise, against the dangers of the *plaintiff's own creation or from other sources than Illinois. What will protect against one will protect against another." The presence of causes of infection from the plaintiff's action makes the case weaker in principle as well as harder to prove than one in which all came from a single source.

Some stress was laid on the proposition that Chicago is not on the natural watershed of the Mississippi, because of a rise of a few feet between the Desplaines and the Chicago rivers. We perceive no reason for distinction on this ground. The natural features relied upon are of the smallest. And if, under any circumstances, they could affect the case, it is enough to say that Illinois brought Chicago into the Mississippi watershed in pursuance, not only of its own statutes, but also of the acts of Congress of March 30, 1822 (chap. 14, 3 Stat. at L. 659), and March 2, 1827 (chap. 51, 4 Stat. at L. 234), the validity of which is not disputed. Wisconsin v. Duluth, 96 U. S. 379, 24 L. ed. 668. Of course these acts do not grant the right to discharge sewage, but the case stands no differently in point of law from a suit because of the discharge from Peoria into the Illinois, or from any other or all the other cities on the banks of that stream.

We might go more into detail, but we believe that we have said enough to explain our point of view and our opinion of the evidence as it stands. What the future may develop, of course we cannot tell. But our conclusion upon the present evidence is that the case proved falls so far below the allegations of the bill that it is not brought within the principles heretofore established in the cause.

Bill dismissed without prejudice.

HIGHLAND BOY GOLD MINING COMPANY.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 527-532.)

Eminent domain—public use.—The condemnation of a right of way across a placer mining claim for the aërial bucket line of a mining corporation cannot be said to be a taking of private property for private use, in defiance of U. S. Const., 14th Amend., if authorized by the construction given by the state courts to the provisions of state legislation for the exercise of the right of eminent domain in behalf of certain uses declared to be public.

Argued and submitted January 25, 1906. Decided February 19, 1906.

The legislature of Utah adopted the Nevada statute after it had been held constitutional by the supreme court of Nevada.

Overman Silver Min. Co. v. Corcoran, supra.

It has been held in Georgia that the construction of an irrigation ditch for the development of mines for the purpose of furnishing more gold for circulation is a public use, and that, too, in a state where little gold is found.

Hand Gold Min. Co. v. Parker, 59 Ga. 419.

The Nevada statute has also been held constitutional by the Federal court for the district of Nevada.

Douglass v. Byrnes, 59 Fed. 29.

The doctrine of the Nevada and Georgia cases has been approved in Montana.

Butte A. & P. R. Co. v. Montana Union R. Co. 16 Mont. 526, 31 L.R.A. 298, 50 Am. St. Rep. 508, 41 Pac. 232; Ellinghouse v. Taylor, 19 Mont. 462, 48 Pac. 757.

So in Arizona, it has been held that a right of way for an irrigation ditch is a public use.

Oury v. Goodwin, 3 Ariz. 255, 26 Pac. 376.

A great number of authorities as to the development of mines being a public use are collated in 10 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 1086, 1087.

There are many states in the Union which would undoubtedly hold that an irrigation ditch is not a public use, and they would be entirely correct in so holding; but our own court, as well as other courts in the arid region, would be just as correct in holding, on principle, to the direct contrary, on account of the difference in the public good. The same has been held in Maryland in regard to a railway for the carrying of supplies and coal from a mine.

New Central Coal Co. v. George's Creek Coal & I. Co. 37 Md. 538.

In Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Morehouse, 112 Wis. 1, 56 L.R.A. 240, 88 Am. St. Rep. 918, 87 N. W. 849, it was held that a railway company is exercising a public use in condemning land for a spur track to one establishment.

To the same effect are Stockdale v. Rio Grande Western R. Co. 28 Utah, 201, 77 Pac. 849, and Morrison v. Thistle Coal Co. 119 Iowa, 705, 94 N. W. 507.

In Ahern v. Dubuque Lead & Level Min. Co. 48 Iowa, 140, it was held to be a public use to construct drains and levels for the purpose of draining mineral lands so that they would be available for mining purposes. On principle, there is no difference between this case and the one at bar.

A public use is not determined simply by the question whether a physical use is made by the public; but the question is deeper, and depends upon whether the use subserves the public good or tends to that end.

Olcott v. Fond du Lac County, 16 Wall. 688, 694, 695, 21 L. ed. 386, 388; Gibson v. Mason, 5 Nev. 308; Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. ed. 77; Chesapeake & P. Teleph. Co. v. Manning, 186 U. S. 245, 46 L. ed. 1147, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 881; Ulmer v. Lime Rock R. Co. 98 Me. 579, 66 L.R.A. 387, 57 Atl. 1001.

The state courts are in irreconcilable conflict as to what are public uses. For instance, this is well illustrated in the "mills acts." See 1 Lewis, Em. Dom. §§ 180 et seq., and instances there given. The United States Supreme Court has never passed upon the constitutionality of these mills acts.

See Head v. Amoskeag Mfg. Co. 113 U. S. 20, 28 L. ed. 893, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 441.

The court will not hold unconstitutional the Utah statute declaring tramways for certain purposes a public use, unless it is clearly, plainly, and palpably in conflict with the Federal Constitution. Even if there is a doubt, the law will be declared valid.

Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cranch, 128, 3 L. ed. 175; Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 123, 24 L. ed. 83; Fairbank v. United States, 181 U. S. 285, 45 L. ed. 863, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 648.

Mr. Justice Holmes delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a proceeding begun by the defendant in error, a mining corporation, to condemn a right of way for an aërial bucket line across a placer mining claim of the plaintiffs in error. The mining corporation owns mines high up in Bingham canyon, in West mountain mining district, Salt Lake county, Utah, and is using the line or way to carry ores, etc., for itself and others from the mines, in suspended buckets, down to the railway station, 2 miles distant, and 1,200 feet below. Before building the way it made diligent inquiry, but could not dis-

[530] cover the owner of the placer claim *in question, Strickley standing by without objecting or making known his rights while the company put up its structure. The trial court found the facts and made an order of condemnation. This order recites that the mining company has paid into court the value of the right of way, as found, and costs, describes the right of way by metes and bounds, and specifies that the same is to be used for the erection of certain towers to support the cables of the line, with a right to drive along the way when necessary for repairs, the mining company to move the towers as often as reasonably required by the owners of the claim for using and working the said claim. The foregoing final order was affirmed by the supreme court of the state. 28 Utah, 215, 78 Pac. 296. The case then was brought here.

The plaintiffs in error set up in their answer to the condemnation proceedings that the right of way demanded is solely for private use, and that the taking of their land for that purpose is contrary to the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States. The mining company, on the other hand, relies upon the statutes of Utah, which provide that "the right of eminent domain may be exercised in behalf of the following public uses: . . . (6) Roads, railroads, tramways, tunnels, ditches, flumes, pipes, and dumping places to facilitate the milling, smelting, or other reduction of ores, or the working of mines." [Utah, Rev. Stat. 1898, § 3588.] In view of the decision of the state court we assume that the condemnation was authorized by the state laws, subject only to the question whether those laws, as construed, are consistent with the 14th Amendment. Some objections to this view were mentioned, but they are not open. If the statutes are constitutional as construed, we follow the construction of the state court. On the other hand, there is no ground for the suggestion that the claim by the plaintiffs in error of their rights under the 14th Amendment does not appear sufficiently on the record. The suggestion was not pressed.

The single question, then, is the constitutionality of the *Utah statute, and the [531] particular facts of the case are material only as showing the length to which the statute is held to go. There is nothing to add with regard to them, unless it be the finding that the taking of the strip across the placer claim is necessary for the aërial line, and is consistent with the use of all of the claim by the plaintiffs in error for mining, except to the extent of the temporary interference over a limited space by four towers, each about 7½ feet square and removable, as stated above.

The question, thus narrowed, is pretty nearly answered by the recent decision in Clark v. Nash, 198 U. S. 361, 49 L. ed. 1085, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 676. That case established the constitutionality of the Utah statute, so far as it permitted the condemnation of land for the irrigation of other land belonging to a private person, in pursuance of the declared policy of the state. In discussing what constitutes a public use, it recognized the inadequacy of use by the general public as a universal test. While emphasizing the great caution necessary to be shown, it proved that there might be exceptional times and places in which the very foundations of public welfare could not be laid without requiring concessions from individuals to each other upon due compensation, which, under other circumstances, would be left wholly to voluntary consent. In such unusual cases there is nothing in the 14th Amendment which prevents a state from requiring such concessions. If the state Constitution restricts the legislature within narrower bounds, that is a local affair, and must be left where the state court leaves it in a case like the one at bar.

In the opinion of the legislature and the supreme court of Utah the public welfare of that state demands that aërial lines between the mines upon its mountain sides and the railways in the valleys below should not be made impossible by the refusal of a private owner to sell the right to cross his land. The Constitution of the United States does not require us to say that they are wrong. If, as seems to be assumed in the brief for the defendant in error, the finding that the plaintiff *is a carrier for it- [532] self and others means that the line is dedicated to carrying for whatever portion of the public may desire to use it, the foundation of the argument on the other side disappears.

Judgment affirmed.

EDWARD B. WHITNEY, as Trustee in Bankruptcy of Dresser & Co., Appt.,
v.
EMMA B. DRESSER.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 532–536.)

Evidence—in bankruptcy cases—sworn proof of claim.—The sworn proof of a claim against a bankrupt's estate is prima facie evidence of its allegations, although objection is made under the bankrupt act of July 1, 1898 (30 Stat. at L. 560, chap. 541, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3418), § 57, to its allowance.

Argued January 26, 1906. Decided February 19, 1906.

APPEAL from the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit to review a decree which affirmed an order of the District Court for the Southern District of New York, allowing a claim against the bankrupt's estate. Affirmed.

See same case below, 68 C. C. A. 207, 135 Fed. 495.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. George H. Gilman argued the cause and filed a brief for appellant.

Mr. Adrian H. Joline argued the cause, and, with Messrs. Adrian H. Larkin and George E. Hargrave, filed a brief for appellee.

Mr. Justice Holmes delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from the allowance of a claim of Emma B. Dresser against the firm of Dresser & Company, bankrupts, the members of the firm being Daniel Le Roy Dresser and Charles E. Reiss. The allegations of the amended proof, so far as necessary to be stated, are that the bankrupts are justly and truly indebted to the deponent in the sum of $88,145, upon the following consideration: Before May, 1896, the deponent lent certain specified shares of stock to the firm of Dresser & Goodrich for the purpose of the firm's borrowing money upon the same, etc., and the firm did so. In May, 1896, the firm was dissolved, Daniel Le Roy Dresser took over its assets and assumed its liabilities, including that to the deponent with her consent, "and the proceeds of the loans for which said securities had been deposited by said firm as collateral were turned over to said Daniel Le Roy Dresser, and used by him in his business." In May, 1897, the present bankrupts formed their partnership, taking over the assets and assuming the liabilities of said Dresser. At the request of said Dresser and Reiss, with deponent's knowledge and consent, the liability of Dresser *to the deponent was as- [534] sumed by the firm, "and used by said firm in its business." Evidently some words were omitted at this point, by mistake, and we agree with the court below that the most reasonable view is that it was intended to repeat the phrase quoted above in speaking of the transfer from Dresser & Goodrich to Dresser.

The trustee objected to the allowance of the claim against the assets of the partnership, and put in evidence before the referee, the main fact proved being that Dresser personally signed the notes on which were made the advances for which the stocks were pledged. This was relied on, in connection with the form of the proof of claim before it was amended, to show that the stocks really were lent to Daniel Le Roy Dresser alone. On the other hand, it appeared that some, at least, of the checks for the money lent went to the firm, and all the evidence was reconcilable with the averments of the amended claim. The referee ruled that the verified amended proof of claim was prima facie proof of the indebtedness of Dresser & Company to the claimant, held the evidence introduced insufficient to rebut it, and dismissed the objection. The district judge sustained the action of the referee, and his order was affirmed by the circuit court of appeals. 68 C. C. A. 207, 135 Fed. 495.

It is urged that the claim is bad on its face because it showed at most a promise to answer for the debt of another, required to be in writing by the New York statute of frauds, and no such writing was filed with the proof in accordance with the requirement of the bankruptcy law, § 57*b*. [30 Stat. at L. 560, chap. 541, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3418.] It is unnecessary to consider whether the objection is open or otherwise sound, because, if it is, which we are far from intimating, the claim clearly imports a novation; that is to say, the giving and accepting of the responsibility of the present firm in place of that of Daniel Le Roy Dresser alone. The only question warranting the appeal is whether the sworn proof of claim is prima facie evidence of its allegations in case it is objected to. It is not a question of the burden of proof in a technical sense,—a *burden [535] which does not change, whatever the state of the evidence,—but simply whether the sworn proof is evidence at all.

The circuit court of appeals observed that the proof of claim warrants the payment of a dividend in the absence of objection, and, therefore, must have some probative force.

In reply it is argued that what is done in default of opposition is no test of what is evidence when opposition is made; that a judgment may be entered on a declaration for want of an answer, yet a declaration is not evidence; that it is contrary to analogy to give effect to an ex parte affidavit, and that, on general principles, it is the right of any party against whom a claim is made to have it proved, not only upon oath, but subject to cross-examination.

Notwithstanding these forcible considerations, we agree with the circuit court of appeals. The prevailing opinion, not only in the second circuit, but elsewhere, seems to have been that way, Re Sumner, 101 Fed. 224; Re Shaw, 109 Fed. 780; Re Cannon, 133 Fed. 837; Re Carter, 138 Fed. 846; Re Doty, 5 Am. Bankr. Rep. 58. See also Re Saunders, 2 Low. Dec. 444, 446, Fed. Cas. No. 12,371; Re Felter, 7 Fed. 904, 906. The alternative would be that the mere interposition of an objection by any party in interest (§ 57*d*) would require the claimant to produce evidence. For if the formal proof is no evidence, a denial of the claim must have that effect. If it does not, then the formal proof is some evidence, even when there is testimony on the other side. The words of the statute suggest, if they do not distinctly import, that the objector is to go forward, and thus that the formal proof is evidence even when put in issue. The words are: "Objections to claims shall be heard and determined as soon," etc. § 57*f*. It is the objection, not the claim, which is pointed out for hearing and determination. This indicates that the claim is regarded as having a certain standing already established by the oath. Some force also may be allowed to the word "proof" as used in the act. Convenience undoubtedly is on the side of this view. Bankruptcy proceedings are more summary than ordinary [536]*suits. Judges of practical experience have pointed out the expense, embarrassments, and delay which would be caused if a formal objection necessarily should put a creditor to the production of evidence or require a continuance. Justice is secured by the power to continue the consideration of a claim whenever it appears there is good reason for it. We believe that the understanding of the profession, the words of the act, and convenient and just administration, all are on the side of treating a sworn proof of claim as some evidence, even when it is denied.

Order affirmed.

1. Carriers—Federal regulation—routing by initial carrier.—Nothing in the provisions of the act of February 4, 1887 (24 Stat. at L. 379, chap. 104, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, pp. 3154–3165), § 6, requiring joint traffic rates, when agreed upon, to be filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission, and made public when required, and empowering the Commission to prescribe forms of schedules of such rates, forbids the adoption by common carriers, as part of an agreement for a through rate from California to the East, for oranges and other citrus fruits, of a rule under which the right of routing beyond its own terminal is reserved to the initial carrier as the condition of guaranteeing the through rates to the shipper, where such rule has served, as was intended, to break up rebating by the connecting lines, and, in its practical operation, the actual routing is generally conceded to the shipper, and his requests to divert shipments en route are usually allowed.

2. Carriers — Federal regulation — discrimination—routing by initial carriers.—A discrimination forbidden by the act of February 4, 1887 (24 Stat. at L. 379, chap. 104, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, pp. 3154–3165), § 3, is not made by the adoption by common carriers, as part of an agreement for a through rate from California to the East, for oranges and other citrus fruits, of a rule under which the right of routing beyond its own terminal is reserved to the initial carrier as the condition of guaranteeing the through rates to the shipper, where such rule has served, as was intended, to break up rebating by the connecting lines, and, in its practical operation, the actual routing is generally conceded to the shipper, and his requests to divert shipments en route, are usually allowed.

3. Commerce—enforcement by courts of orders of Interstate Commerce Commission.—The enforcement of an order of the Interstate Commerce Commission directing common carriers to desist from maintaining or enforcing a rule adopted by them may be decreed by a Federal circuit court if it finds such rule is, for any reason, in violation of the act of February 4, 1887 (24 Stat. at L. 379, chap. 104, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, pp. 3154-3165), although such reason may not have been the one relied upon by the Commission itself to invalidate the rule.

4. Carriers—Federal regulation—pooling—routing by initial carrier.— The pooling of freights of competing railroads, forbidden by the act of February 4, 1887 (24 Stat. at L. 379, chap. 104, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, pp. 3154-3165), § 5, is not accomplished by the adoption by common carriers, as part of an agreement for a through rate from California to the East, for oranges and other citrus fruits, of a rule under which the right of routing beyond its own terminal is reserved to the initial carrier as the condition of guaranteeing the through rates to the shipper, even though the initial carrier promises fair treatment to the connecting lines, and carries out such promise, where such rule has served, as was intended, to break up rebating by the connecting lines, and, in its practical operation, the actual routing is generally conceded to the shipper, and his requests to divert shipments en route are usually allowed.

APPEALS from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of California to review a decree for the enforcement of an order of the Interstate Commerce Commission requiring carriers to desist from maintaining or enforcing a rule under which initial carriers, as a condition of guaranteeing a through rate, were given the right to designate the route beyond their own terminals. Reversed and remanded with instructions to dismiss the bill.

Statement by Mr. Justice Peckham:

These are appeals from orders or decrees of the circuit court of the United States for the southern district of California, in proceedings wherein that court affirmed, and ordered to be enforced, the determination of the Interstate Commerce Commission, relating to the above-named railroad companies, directing them to desist from maintaining or enforcing a rule adopted by them and pertaining to shippers of oranges and other citrus fruits in southern California, whereby those shippers were denied their alleged right of designating the routes for the transportation of their property from California to the Eastern markets, under a tariff of through rates, as mentioned in the orders or decrees.

The proceeding in each case was commenced before the Commission under §§ 13, 14, and 15 of the interstate commerce [538] act (24 Stat. at L. 379, chap. 104, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, pp. 3154-3165,) by the filing of a petition with the Commission, on the part of certain corporations of the state of California, called the Consolidated Forwarding Company, and the Southern California Fruit Exchange, engaged in the business of shipping oranges and other citrus fruit from southern California to the Eastern markets. The proceeding was continued in the circuit court under § 16 of the act. The petition charged the railroads with various violations of the interstate commerce act, including specially the agreement for "routing," hereinafter set forth, and asked the Commission to enjoin such companies from any further violation of the act. The companies put in answers to the petition, denying its material averments.

Testimony was then taken before the Commission, and the following, among other facts, were shown:

The through tariff of rates from California to the East, with the right of routing, which had been agreed upon between the companies complained of (hereinafter called the initial carriers) and their Eastern connections regarding the orange and other citrus fruit transportation, was in force January 1, 1900, and these proceedings were commenced February 26, 1900. Before the adoption of the rule for routing, there had been among the Eastern connections of the initial carriers under the through joint tariff rates then existing, the greatest rivalry to obtain the California fruit freight business; and this rivalry led, on the part of the connecting carriers, to a system of rebates from the through tariff rates, which was a clear violation of the commerce act, and was demoralizing in every way to honest business. Indeed, the president of one of complainants before the Commission admitted that his company (the Southern California Fruit Exchange) had in four years received rebates to an amount of over $174,000. The practice had become so general that the shippers came to regard a rebate as part of the legitimate returns from the orange business. Among those who participated in this system of rebates were what is termed the car line companies, which were incorporated [539] companies *owning cars in which the fruit was packed, described as ventilator or refrigerator cars, which were peculiarly adapted to the carriage of the fruit, and were hired by the initial carriers because they did not want to own equipment cars which they could keep in service only part of the year, while the car companies could use the cars for other purposes in other parts of the United States when the orange transportation was over. These car companies made arrangements with the connections of the initial carrier east of Chicago and New Orleans, by which a certain bonus, varying from $10 to $40 per car, was given the car line companies, in consideration of the car being routed over the line paying the bonus, a part of the bonus, varying from a quarter to a half, being usually turned over to the shipper by the car company, for the privilege allowed the latter of routing the shipment.

The initial carriers form two systems,—one called the Southern Pacific System, and the other the Santa Fé System. There are numerous points of junction on these lines of the defendants, where connection is made with other carriers, and at their termini in Chicago, Ogden, and New Orleans such connection is made, and through lines are formed over which the citrus fruit is transported to practically all the markets of the United States. The two systems are the only ones which reach the section of country where the orange industry in Southern California exists, and they about equally divide the transportation of the oranges therefrom. The Commission said the evidence was unsatisfactory as a basis for a conclusion whether the initial carriers pooled their citrus fruit traffic or divided the earnings therefrom; and it therefore retained such question for further hearing and investigation.

Prior to January, 1900, the rebates by the Eastern companies, already referred to, had become so great and demoralizing that the initial carriers at length determined to try and crush the whole thing. The connecting carriers were themselves dissatisfied with this state of things, but each felt it necessary in order to compete with the [540] others. It had been *assumed that the car line companies were not common carriers, and were not within the commerce act, and therefore they were more ready to indulge in the practice of getting rebates whenever they could, and paying part of the amount to the shippers for giving them the right to route the shipment. Prior to the adoption of the through rate tariff with this rule under discussion, the shippers had been permitted by the initial carriers to control the routing of the freight, and also to divert it, en route, from the destination point named in the bill. In order to stop the rebating on these joint through rates it was proposed to agree upon a through rate tariff, to be assented to and accepted by the railroads interested in the fruit transportation, or by as many of them as possible, with the rule in question to form part of the agreement. Such a tariff agreement was made between some of the roads (and subsequently assented to and joined in by most of the roads) and filed with the Commission, for the transportation of oranges and other citrus fruit from Southern California at $1.25 per hundred pounds, to practically all points east of the Missouri river. The tariff agreed upon by the companies contains the rule complained of, which is part of such agreement, and by it the initial carriers agreed to guarantee the through rates to the shipper, but only on the following conditions:

"In guaranteeing the through rate named herein, the absolute and unqualified right of routing beyond its own terminal is reserved to initial carrier giving the guaranty. In accordance with this rule, agents will not accept shipping orders or other documents, if routing instructions are shown thereon. Neither will agents accept verbal routing instructions."

Another rule reads:

"Initial carrier will route each car from point of origin to point of destination, and diversions in transit will not be permitted except by consent of initial carrier, who will thereupon designate new routing when diversion necessitates change therein."

Notwithstanding the rule thus published in regard to routing, *the initial carriers [541] generally thereafter permitted the shippers to route the cars containing their fruit as they desired. The right to divert freight from the destination point or route named in the bill of lading, and before the freight reached the billed destination, had been exercised generally by shippers, and had been allowed by the carriers throughout the country, and the practice was regarded of value to the shippers, as it enabled them sometimes to realize higher prices than they otherwise might if the freight were continued to the original destination. This diversion by the shippers also continued to be generally allowed.

The reason for the rule, reserving to the initial carrier this right to route the traffic, is stated to have been because it enabled the initial carriers to secure the discontinuance of the practice of paying rebates. Since the adoption of that rule the rebates which had been paid to shippers and to owners of car lines were discontinued, and the Commission says there is no evidence that the practice has been resumed. They were discontinued for the obvious reason that the shippers could not control the route, and hence it would be useless for the Eastern railroad company to pay the shippers or the car line companies rebates on freight the Eastern company might not receive, and which the initial carrier alone had the routing of. As soon as the routing was agreed upon and the through tariff rates fixed, the Eastern connections had to do business with the initial carriers instead of the car company or the shipper. The shippers prepay or guarantee freight charges to destination. The initial carrier does not assume liability from damage resulting from negligence of any connecting line.

The Commission (the chairman, Mr. Commissioner Knapp, dissenting) ordered the defendants to cease from exacting from the shippers the right to themselves make the route which the freight should take. The ground taken by the Commission was that such routing by the initial carriers subjected the shippers to undue, unjust, and unreasonable prejudice and disadvantage, and gave to the carrier an undue and un-[542] reasonable *preference and advantage, and was a violation of the 3d section of the act.

The initial carriers, believing the Commission had erred in its decision, refused to obey the order which it made, and thereupon the Commission, pursuant to the 16th section of the act, filed its bill in the circuit court for the purpose of enforcing its order.

The bill thus filed by the Commission was demurred to by the defendants, and the demurrer was overruled. 123 Fed. 598.

The railroad companies then answered, and the case, after the taking of further evidence, came up for final hearing, when the order of the Commission was affirmed and directed to be enforced (132 Fed. 829), although the circuit court put the affirmance on the ground that the agreement as to routing showed that there was a violation of § 5 of the interstate commerce act, in that such agreement amounted to a contract or combination for the pooling of freights. The court passed upon no other question raised in the case. A very full statement of facts is contained in the report in 132 Fed. supra.

A motion was made for a supersedeas pending the hearing of this appeal, which, for the reasons stated in the opinion of the circuit court, was denied. 137 Fed. 606.

Mr. Maxwell Evarts argued the cause, and, with Mr. R. S. Lovett, filed a brief for appellant, the Southern Pacific Company:

The court is not to decide whether the appellants have violated an order which the Commission might have lawfully made, but whether they have violated one which was lawfully made.

Interstate Commerce Commisson v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 144, 64 Fed. 723; Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 21 C. C. A. 103, 43 U. S. App. 308, 74 Fed. 803; Interstate Commerce Commission v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 73 Fed. 409; Farmers' Loan & T. Co. v. Northern P. R. Co. 83 Fed. 249.

At common law the appellants could route through freight beyond their own terminals, and they have not been deprived of such right by the interstate commerce act.

The joint tariff is a matter entirely of private arrangement between the carriers, not governed in any way by the act.

Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Osborne, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 257, 3 C. C. A. 347, 10 U. S. App. 430, 52 Fed. 912; Little Rock & M. R. Co. v. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. 26 L.R.A. 192, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 854, 11 C. C. A. 417, 27 U. S. App. 380, 63 Fed. 775; Kentucky & I. Bridge Co. v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 2 L.R.A. 289, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 351, 37 Fed. 567.

Before the carrier can be deprived of its right to route freight beyond its own terminal, which it has at common law, it must so appear by the clear and specific terms of the act.

Little Rock & M. R. Co. v. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. supra.

There is nothing in the act which gives the Commission the power to change the tariff as filed, and say what sort of a joint tariff should be made.

When two carriers unite in a joint tariff, the requirement is only that such joint tariff shall be filed with the Commission, and nothing but the kind and extent of publication thereof is left to the discretion of the Commission.

Interstate Commerce Commission v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. 167 U. S. 479, 504, 42 L. ed. 243, 254, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 896.

Mr. Robert Dunlap also argued the cause, and, with Messrs. Thomas J. Norton and Gardiner Lathrop, filed a brief for appellants, the Atchison, Topeka, & Santa Fe Railway Company, Santa Fe Pacific Railroad Company, and Southern California Railway Company:

If the Commission have misconstrued or misapplied the provisions of this law, their order is invalid.

Interstate Commerce Commission v. Lehigh Valley R. Co. 74 Fed. 784; Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 21 C. C. A. 103, 43 U. S. App. 308, 74 Fed. 803; Interstate Commerce Commission v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 146, 64 Fed. 723; East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 181 U. S. 1, 45 L. ed. 719, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 516.

The facts found by the Commission were insufficient to warrant its conclusions and orders, and it is therefore evident that the Commission erred in applying the law to the case before them.

Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Behlmer, 175 U. S. 674–676, 44 L. ed. 319–320, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 209.

The Commission erred in holding that the routing provision in question, made on condition or in consideration of the making the joint tariff rate, subjected the shippers to undue prejudice, and gave initial carriers an undue advantage.

Ilwaco R. & Nav. Co. v. Oregon Short Line & U. N. R. Co. 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 627, 6 C. C. A. 495, 15 U. S. App. 173, 57 Fed. 673; Little Rock & M. R. Co. v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 261, 47 Fed. 771; Mannheim Ins. Co. v. Erie & W. Transp. Co. 72 Minn. 357, 75 N. W. 602.

The supposed right of the shipper to route is neither recognized nor protected by any provision of the interstate commerce act. It is purely a matter of agreement.

Hastings v. Pepper. 11 Pick. 43; Snow v. Indiana, B. & W. R. Co. 109 Ind. 422, 9 N. E. 702; Chicago, I. & L. R. Co. v. Woodward (Ind.) 72 N. E. 558; White v. Ashton, 51 N. Y. 280; Hinckley v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 56 N. Y. 429; Indianapolis & C. R. Co. v. Remmy, 13 Ind. 518; Patten v. Union P. R. Co. 29 Fed. 591; Post v. *Southern R. As the assertion of the right to route by the initial carrier contrary to the wishes of the shipper is not "something done or omitted to be done in violation of the provisions" of the interstate commerce act, or any law cognizable by the Commission, the Commission had no authority to make the order in question, since its power and jurisdiction is confined to investigations concerning something done or omitted to be done in violation of the provisions of that law.

Wannan v. Scottish C. R. Co. 1 Nev. & MacN. (Railway & Canal Traffic Cases), 237; Bennett v. Manchester, S. & L. R. Co. 1 Railway & Canal Traffic Cases, 288, 6 C. B. N. S. 707.

Agreements between connecting carriers concerning the making of joint rates and conditions applicable thereto are purely matters of voluntary agreement between such carriers.

Co.* 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 763, 41 Fed. 559.

Beyond the requirement that such agreements or tariffs shall be filed with the Commission, and the tariffs may be required to be published, as the Commission may determine, they are not subject to any regulation or control by the Commission; nor are they otherwise affected by any provision of the interstate commerce act. No provision in that law forbids or makes unlawful the routing provision which was imposed by the initial carriers as a condition of their making or entering into the joint rate in question.

Neither the Commission nor the court could make a different agreement or contract for these carriers than the one made by such carriers, and the attempt of the Commission to keep in force the joint rate, and strike out the condition or consideration therefor, would be equivalent to making a new agreement for the parties which they did not desire to make.

Any restriction upon the supposed right of the shipper to divert his shipment while in transit would not be in violation of the interstate commerce law. The privilege of diverting this traffic, as practised by the shippers thereof, was merely a concession granted by the carriers, to which the shippers were not entitled as a matter of right.

The initial carriers should have the right to route under the joint tariffs or joint through rates. The condition in question was lawful and valid and facilitated transportation.

As the initial carrier, by making a joint rate which, under the law, it could not be compelled to make, affords the shipper a concession, it has the right to stipulate for the consideration or condition upon which such joint rate shall be offered; and in imposing this condition it does not give itself an unjust advantage or subject the shippers of this traffic to an undue disadvantage. It is identical with a case in which the carrier affords to the shipper rates for carriage at "owner's risk" much less than rates applicable to carriage at "carrier's risk."

Mr. Joseph H. Call also argued the cause and filed a brief for appellee:

The rule and practice of defendants reserving absolute control of routing, as found by the Commission, is, as matter of law, in violation of § 6 of the commerce act, providing for joint tariffs over connecting railroads showing "continuous lines of routes," and prohibiting a greater charge than tariff rates for shipments over such lines.

The provisions of § 5 of the interstate commerce act and of § 7 of the Sherman antitrust act both relate to the regulation of interstate commerce,—a subject within the plenary power of Congress under the Constitution.

They both prohibit combinations and agreements between individuals or corporations which have for their object the stifling of competition and obstruction of interstate commerce by simultaneous action between competing lines.

Section 5 of the interstate commerce act is expressly leveled against railroad corporations engaged in interstate commerce, while § 7 of the Sherman antitrust act includes all persons, and it has been held to include railways engaged in interstate commerce.

Missouri P. R. Co. v. United States, 189 U. S. 274, 284, 47 L. ed. 811, 814, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 507.

Mr. Justice Peckham, after making the foregoing statement, delivered the opinion of the court:

Although there are separate proceedings in these various cases, the question arising in all is identical, and the cases will hereafter be spoken of as if there were but one proceeding before the court. The single question presented is, Has the carrier that takes the fruit from the shipper in California the right, under the facts herein, to insist upon the rule permitting such carrier to route the freight at the time it is received from the shipper?

The Commission has decided that the carrier has not the right, and that the rule denies to shippers the use of their transportation facilities, which such shippers are entitled to, and that, in its application by the initial carriers to the fruit traffic, the shippers are subjected to undue, unjust, and unreasonable prejudice and disadvantage, and the carriers are given an undue and unreasonable preference and advantage.

[551] *If this be the necessary effect of the rule, it may be assumed to be a violation of § 3 of the interstate commerce act, and the Commission, therefore, rightly ordered the carriers to desist from observing it.

By § 16 of the act, the circuit court is given authority to enforce "any lawful order or requirement of the Commission." If the order be not a lawful one, the court is without power to enforce it. Whether or not such order was lawful is the matter to be determined.

The Commission does not find that any contract existed between the initial carrier and its Eastern connections to bill the fruit according to certain proportions among the connecting railroads. The Commission said:

"The situation warrants the inference, however, that these two initial carriers or systems, connecting with other carriers at various points, and they, in turn, connecting with numerous other carriers, as shown by the tariff, are able, by acting in concert, and routing as they see fit, to only send traffic over the roads of such carriers as fulfilled an agreement to refrain from making any rate concession to the shippers, and some influence of like character could doubtless be exerted by them upon the car lines which are also hereinafter referred to."

Such statement simply shows that if any Eastern railroad with which an agreement for joint through rates existed should give rebates on the joint through rate tariff, thus carrying freight below the rates agreed upon as the through rate tariff, that road would not get the freight.

We see nothing in the initial carrier endeavoring to maintain the rates agreed upon as a through rate tariff, and thereby preventing the paying of rebates, which in itself is a violation of the act. The act especially prohibits, in the 6th section, any alteration of the rates agreed upon, in favor of any person or persons. There is no finding that there has in fact, as a result of the rule, been any discrimination or unjust action as between the initial carriers and the shippers themselves, and there is no evidence that any was ever practised.

[552] *In the examination of the rule it is well to bear in mind the situation of the companies and the business at the time of its adoption. It is fully set forth in the foregoing statement of facts. The payment of the rebates was a shame, and was in truth unsatisfactory to all the railroads, besides being plainly a violation of the commerce act.

We think there is nothing in the act which clearly prohibits the roads from adopting the rule in question. The decision turns upon the construction of a statute which at least does not in terms prohibit.

In cases such as this a court is bound to consider the bearing of the result of either construction upon the general purposes of the act. In enacting the commerce act this court has stated that the object of Congress was to facilitate and promote commerce by the adoption of regulations to make charges for transportation just and reasonable, and to forbid undue and unreasonable preferences or discriminations. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 162 U. S. 197, 40 L. ed. 940, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 405, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 666.

The importance of the rule in this case, so far as the shipper is concerned, is not so great as is its importance to the railroads in preventing rebates. If the right of routing be looked at alone, without any connection with the claimed right of diverting the freight, the rule itself would be generally of little importance to the shipper. In all probability the freight gets to its destination when routed by the carrier as early as if routed by the shipper, and in that event the particular route taken is not very important to the latter. The evidence before the circuit court shows that the routing, when done by the carrier, was fairly apportioned among the Eastern connections, having an eye to good service and expedition, and the roads that the routing was done over were the best roads in the country; the roads that have been eliminated were the roundabout roads; there were no roads that were insolvent, so far as known by the witnesses. Now, as the fact appears that the actual routing is generally conceded the shipper, and also his request for a diversion allowed, there is nothing in [553] the mere *right of routing by the companies, separate from other facts, of which the shipper can properly complain. The Commission says it does not distinctly appear in testimony that a delivery by a particular terminal road has been denied in any particular case, yet the manifest evil results of an arbitrary application of the rule must be considered in determining its legality. If there is no such arbitrary application, we do not agree that the rule itself is to be held illegal because a violation of the act may be committed, while the evidence is that none in fact was committed. It does appear that the mere existence of the right to route on the part of the company has ended the practice of rebating. But the opportunity to obtain rebates on the part of the shipper is surely not a ground for action by the Commission or by the court. Of course, if, in attempting to cut off rebates, there is a violation of the act, the act must be followed, and that means of prohibiting them must he abandoned. Courts may well look with some degree of care before so construing a statute which confessedly does not in terms so provide, as to prohibit such a rule on the ground that it would be a violation of the statute. We are of opinion that the rule is not a violation thereof.

It is conceded that the different railroads forming a continuous line of road are free to adopt or refuse to adopt joint through tariff rates. The commerce act recognizes such right, and provides for the filing, with the Commission, of the through tariff rates, as agreed upon between the companies. The whole question of joint through tariff rates, under the provisions of the act, is one of agreement between the companies and they may, or may not, enter into it, as they may think their interests demand. And it is equally plain that an initial carrier may agree upon joint through rates with one or several connecting carriers, who, between each other, might be regarded as competing roads.

It is also undoubted that the common carrier need not contract to carry beyond its own line, hut may there deliver to the next succeeding carrier, and thus end its responsibility, *and charge its local rate for the [554] transportation. If it agree to transport beyond its own line, it may do so by such lines as it chooses. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Denver & N. O. R. Co. 110 U. S. 667, 28 L. ed. 291, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 185; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. West Coast Naval Stores Co. 198 U. S. 483, 49 L. ed. 1135, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 745. This right has not been held to depend upon whether the original carrier agreed to he liable for the default of the connecting carrier after the goods are delivered to such connecting carrier. As the carrier is not bound to make a through contract, it can do so upon such terms as it may agree upon; at least, so long as they are reasonable and do not otherwise violate the law. In this case, the initial carrier guarantees the through rate, but only on condition that it has the routing. It was stated by the late Mr. Justice Jackson of this court, when circuit judge, in the case of Interstate Commerce Commission v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 192, 43 Fed. 37, as follows:

"Subject to the two leading prohibitions that their charges shall not be unjust and unreasonable, and that they shall not unjustly discriminate, so as to give undue preference or advantage, or subject to undue prejudice or disadvantage persons or traffic similarly circumstanced, the act to regulate commerce leaves common carriers as they were at common law, free to make special contracts looking to the increase of their business, to classify their traffic, to adjust and apportion their rates so as to meet the necessities of commerce, and generally to manage their important interests upon the same principles which are recognized as sound, and adopted in other trades and pursuits."

This statement was approved hy this court in Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 162 U. S. 184–197, 40 L. ed. 935, 939, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 391, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 700.

Having this right to agree on a joint through tariff on terms mutually satisfactory, we cannot find anything in the commerce act which forbids the agreement with such a condition therein as to routing. It is said that the 6th section, properly construed, prohibits such condition. We confess our inability to find anything in that section which does so.

*The fact that the rate, when agreed up- [555]

on, must be filed with the Commission, and made public by the common carriers when directed by the Commission, does not prevent the adoption of an agreement for a through rate tariff with the condition as stated. Nor does the provision granting power to the Commission to prescribe forms of schedules of rates, as provided for in the 6th section, have any such effect. Where there is an agreed through rate tariff, and as part of such agreement, which is joined in by several railroads, the right to route cars is reserved to the initial carrier, we do not think that the shipper, by virtue of the 6th section, has the right to ignore the condition which is part of the agreement under which the through rate is made and is guaranteed.

We cannot see that the rule violates the 3d section of the act. All the facts referred to by the Commission are nothing but statements as to how, under such a rule, there might occur a violation of that section, but we find nothing in the facts stated by the Commission, showing that such violation had occurred. In truth, the companies did not always even enforce the rule; still less did they discriminate against shippers or in favor of carriers. On the contrary, the Commission stated that "while the initial carriers do not always route as requested by the shippers, they generally comply with their request." The mere failure to do so does not, however, prove a violation of the section.

The right to route is also complained of because the rule confined it to the fruit business, and therefore it was, as contended, a discrimination against those engaged in it or against the traffic itself. The transportation of this fruit is a special business; large interests are involved in it, and particular pains are taken to transport it as speedily as possible. With regard to all other freight it has substantially nothing in common. The cases are wholly unlike, and there has been no proof or complaint as to rebates being given in connection with other freight, and the witnesses for the railroad state if there were any evidence or complaint of such rebates, the [556] same rule as to *routing would be immediately adopted. As has been said, there is no pretense of discrimination under this rule between the shippers of freight themselves. There seems to be unanimous agreement that all shippers are treated alike and are granted the same privileges, and the routing is generally accorded them. It is the power to route, which rests with the initial carrier, that really takes away the motive for a rebate in the manner indicated, and, therefore, the granting of the request of the shipper as to a particular route may be, and is, generally conceded without danger that the rebate business may be again practised.

The important facts that control the situation are that the carrier need not agree to carry beyond its own road, and may agree upon joint through tariff rates or not, as seems best for its own interests. Having these rights of contract, the carrier may make such terms as it pleases; at least, so long as they are reasonable and do not otherwise violate the law. We think the routing rule is not unreasonable under the facts herein, and that it does not violate the 3d section of the act.

Because opportunities for the violation of the act may occur by reason of the rule is no ground for holding, as a matter of law, that violations must occur, and that the rule itself is therefore illegal. We are, consequently, unable to concur in the view taken by the Commission that the rule violates the 3d section of the act.

Upon the proceeding before the circuit court, that court did not pass upon the question decided by the Commission, but held that the routing rule agreed to between the initial carrier and the various Eastern companies, and forming a part of the subsequent joint through tariffs which were filed with the Commission, was in itself a contract or combination for the pooling of freights.

The defendants objected that the circuit court had no authority to decree the enforcement of the order upon any other ground than that taken by the Commission itself. We think that the court was not confined to those grounds, and if it *found [557] the rule was, in itself, for any reason illegal as a violation of the act, the order might be valid and be a lawful order, although the Commission gave a wrong reason for making it. If it held the rule to be a violation of one section, the order to desist might be valid if, instead of the section named by the Commission, the court should find that the rule was a violation of another section of the act. All the facts being brought out before the Commission or the court, the court could decide whether the order was a lawful one, without being confined to the reasons stated by the Commission. We therefore look to see the ground taken by the circuit court.

That court found that the rule was adopted to uphold their published rates; or, in other words, to maintain the rates on the joint through tariff. Although, under the previous through rate tariff, these rates had been secretly cut by the Eastern connections of the initial carriers, yet, when the routing rule was agreed to as part of the through rate tariff, these rebates ceased. Hence, as the court said, the purpose of the rule was undoubtedly to maintain the through rate tariff, and that it was effectual. But the court held, as a result, that this routing provision, being part of the through rate tariff agreed to by the various Eastern roads, made a contract among those roads for the pooling of freights on competing railroads within the meaning of § 5 of the commerce act. It held that it was not necessary, in order to form a pool, in violation of that section, that the contract or agreement should fix the percentages of freight the several railroads were to receive, or that the railroads should know in advance what the percentages should be; that it was sufficient to constitute a pool if the contract or agreement provided for special means or agencies for apportioning freights, which would destroy the rivalry which would otherwise exist between the competing railroads; and an agreement by which the apportionment was left to the will of the initial carrier accomplished that purpose as effectually as though definite percentages were fixed in the contract; that defendant's plan to [558]maintain through rates *through the operation of the routing rule necessarily destroyed competition, and the adoption of the routing rule put the shippers in a position where their patronage could not possibly be competed for by the defendant's Eastern connections.

Thus the mere fact that the initial carrier was granted by this through tariff agreement the right to route the freight was held to result in the formation of a pool, in violation of the 5th section of the act. There was no other agreement proved in the case. It is stated by the Commission that the shipments are forwarded by the initial carrier so as to give certain percentages of the traffic to connecting lines. At the same time the Commission finds that initial carriers generally comply with the requests of the shippers to route the freight as desired. The substance of the report of the Commission is, therefore, that there is a certain percentage of the traffic given the connecting carriers when there is no request for routing given by the shippers. It amounts to the giving of fair treatment to the connecting carriers. It is true the Commission calls this a tonnage pool between the connecting carriers, to which the initial carriers give effect by their routing arrangement, and that its object was not so much to prevent rebates, which was but an incident, as to affect the tonnage division. We are of opinion, however, that the evidence is substantially one way, and that is, that the arrangement for routing was to break up rebating, and that it has been accomplished. The evidence before the circuit court was to the effect that there was no agreement whatever with the eastern connections that any of them should have any particular proportion of the freight, but the Eastern roads entered into the routing agreement because they were satisfied that it would be better that the then present practice of rebating, and they thought that they would get a fair share of the business; or, in other words, would be fairly treated by the initial carriers, who gave them to understand that they would be so treated. The tonnage pool was, as the witnesses said, a myth; and it was testified to that there was not one of the Eastern *companies that [559]knew what percentage of the whole business that company secured. They simply knew that the through rates were maintained under the operation of the routing agreement and that rebating ceased; and they were satisfied with the manner of their treatment by the initial carrier.

The circuit court, in order to arrive at its result, necessarily treated the connecting carriers as rival and competing transportation lines for this freight, and assumed that between these lines there would exist, but for the routing agreement, a competition for the fruit transportation which could not be extinguished by any agreement as to routing, as a condition for making through tariff rates; that as competition was destroyed by this rule, it was idle to say that such result was not intended by the defendant, and so it was held that the carrying out of the routing agreement violated the act.

We think these various roads were really not competing roads within the meaning of the 5th section of the commerce act, when the facts are carefully examined. That act recognizes the right of the carriers to agree upon, and provides for the publication of, joint through tariff rates between continuous roads, on such terms as the roads may choose to make, provided, of course, the rates are reasonable, and no discrimination or other violation of the act is practised. The initial carrier did not, on its line, reach the Eastern markets, but it reached various connecting railroads which did reach those markets. The initial carrier had the right to enter into an agreement for joint through rates with all or any one of these connecting companies, though such companies were competing ones among themselves. And the agreements could be made upon such terms as the various companies might think expedient, provided they were not in violation of any other provision of the act.

Prior to the adoption of the routing rule these connecting railroads were already acting under a through rate tariff which continued up to the time when the agreement for the routing was adopted. When [560]so acting it was no longer possible to *compete with each other as to rates (and it is upon the rebates as to rates that this whole controversy is founded) provided the companies fulfilled their joint rate tariff agreements. The only way the rate competition could exist under the through rate tariff was by violating the law. This, unfortunately, was habitually done, and during that time the competition consisted in a rivalry between these roads as to which would be the greatest violator of the law by giving the greatest rebates.

In truth, the only way in which these connecting lines could legally become competing railroads for this California fruit trade would be in the absence of all joint tariff rate agreements. The moment they made such agreements, and carried them out, rate competition would cease.

All that would be needed for the total suppression of rate competition among the connecting railroads would be the honest fulfilment of their agreement as to joint through rates. And just here is where they failed and where they violated their agreement and the law by granting rebates; or, in other words, by competing, as to rates, for the freight, in violation of the joint rates. In such case we do not see any violation of the pooling section of the act, by putting in the agreement for joint through rates the provision for routing by the initial carrier. It achieved its purpose and stopped rebating, although it thereby also stopped rate competition which, in the presence of the through rate tariff, was already illegal. The railroads are no longer rate-competing roads after the adoption of a through rate tariff by them, and they have no right to privately reduce their rates.

Now, while the most important, if not the only, effect of the routing agreement is to take away this rebating practice, and to hold all parties to that agreement as part of the joint through rate tariff, we think no case is made out of a violation of the pooling provision in the 5th section of the act, even where the initial carrier promises fair treatment to the connecting roads, and carries out such promises.

We must remember the general purpose [561]of the act, which is, *as has been said, to obtain fair treatment for the public from the roads, and reasonable charges for the transportation of freight, and the honest performance of duty, with no improper or unjust preference or discrimination. Under such circumstances, the court ought not to adopt such a strict and unnecessary construction of the act as thereby to prevent an honest and otherwise perfectly legal attempt to maintain joint through rates, by destroying one of the worst abuses known in the transportation business. The effort to maintain the published through joint tariff rates is entirely commendable.

We think that the agreement in question, upon its face, does not violate any provision of the commerce act, and there is no evidence in the case which shows that in fact there has been any such violation.

The decree of the Circuit Court is reversed and the case remanded with instructions to dismiss the bill.

Reversed, etc.

Argued December 14, 1905. Decided March 5, 1906.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Illinois to review a judgment affirming a judgment of the Circuit Court of Kendall County, in that state, awarding mandamus in proceedings presenting the question as to the right to impose upon a railway company the expense attendant upon the removal and rebuilding of a bridge and culvert, made necessary by the widening and deepening of the channel of a creek to subserve the drainage of low lands. Affirmed, subject to the qualification that the expense attendant merely upon the removal of the soil cannot be cast upon the company.

See same case below, 212 Ill. 103, 72 N. E. 219.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. A. J. Hopkins argued the cause, and, with Messrs. Robert Bruce Scott and Chester M. Dawes, filed a brief for plaintiff in error:

A writ of error lies from the United States Supreme Court where the state court orders a writ of mandamus and a Federal question is involved.

Hartman v. Greenhow, 102 U. S. 672, 26 L. ed. 271; McPherson v. Blacker, 146 U. S. 1, 36 L. ed. 869, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 3; Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Minnesota, 193 U. S. 53, 48 L. ed. 614, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 396.

Even though the state court did not, in its opinion, expressly refer to the Federal Constitution, if the judgment of affirmance necessarily denied Federal rights specially set up by defendant, a writ of error will lie from the United States Supreme Court.

Roby v. Colehour, 146 U. S. 153, 36 L. ed. 922, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 47; Green Bay & M. Canal Co. v. Patten Paper Co. 172 U. S. 58, 43 L. ed. 364, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 97.

The Supreme Court of the United States has jurisdiction in error over a judgment of the supreme court of a state when it necessarily involves the decision of the question—raised in that appellate court for the first time, and not noticed in its opinion—whether a statute of the state conflicts with the Constitution of the United States.

Even where this court is left in doubt by the briefs whether the statute, as construed by the state supreme court, was objected to, or only its application under the facts of the case, still, if the statute was directly attacked in the answer, a motion to dismiss the writ of error for want of jurisdiction will be denied, and the court will consider whether the grounds of objection to the statute are substantial and sufficient.

A Federal question is involved if the effect of the state decision is to construe an act alleged to violate the Federal Constitution, although the state court does not mention the statute.

Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Texas, 177 U. S. 66, 44 L. ed. 673, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 545.

There can be no doubt that the record fairly presented a Federal question for review.

Detroit, Ft. W. & B. I. R. Co. v. Osborn, 189 U. S. 383, 47 L. ed. 860, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 540; Erie R. Co. v. Purdy, 185 U. S. 148, 46 L. ed. 847, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 605.

A railroad corporation is a person within the meaning of the 14th Amendment, declaring that no state shall deprive any person of property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 466, 526, 42 L. ed. 819, 842, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 418; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Smith, 173 U. S. 684, 690, 43 L. ed. 858, 861, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 565.

Recognizing the difficulty in defining with exactness the phrase "due process of law," it is certain that these words imply a conformity with natural and inherent principles of justice, and forbid that one man's property or right of property shall be taken for the benefit of another or for the benefit of the state without compensation.

Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 366, 390, 42 L. ed. 780, 790, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 383.

Since the adoption of the 14th Amendment, compensation for private property taken for public uses constitutes an essential element in "due process of law," and without such compensation the appropriation of private property to public uses, no matter under what form of procedure it is taken, violates the provisions of the Federal Constitution.

Scott v. Toledo, 1 L.R.A. 688, 36 Fed. 385.

Corporations existing for drainage purposes are public corporations, and, where property is sought to be taken for the purpose of a ditch, it is for a public use, and compensation must be made before property of an individual can be taken for public use.

Payson v. People, 175 Ill. 276, 51 N. E. 588.

The farm drainage act contemplates payment of full damage done, and, if it did not it would be unconstitutional, as a taking of private property for the public use without compensation.

Chronic v. Pugh, 136 Ill. 539, 27 N. E. 415.

The same rules for ascertaining damages which govern proceedings for the condemning of private property for public use apply to cases arising under the drainage statute.

Ginn v. Moultrie Drainage District, 188 Ill. 305, 58 N. E. 988.

Quasi public corporations are entitled to claim the protection of the Constitution for their property rights.

Monongahela Nav. Co. v. United States, 148 U. S. 313, 37 L. ed. 463, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 622; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 195 U. S. 540, 49 L. ed. 312, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 133.

Where, long after the construction of a railroad, a street was extended so as to cross the same, and the city passed an ordinance requiring the railway company to make a safe and proper crossing by grading the approaches of the street at the crossing, it was held that the company was not liable for this new burden any further than might have been required of an individual; and that, as the whole burden was sought to be placed upon the company, without regard to benefits, the ordinance was in violation of the Constitution, and could not create any liability upon the company, and that the legislature itself could not impose such burden without making compensation.

In Chicago & G. T. R. Co. v. Chappell, 124 Mich. 72, 82 N. W. 800, it was held that a statute of the state of Michigan similar to the one before the court in the case at bar, requiring a railroad company to make and maintain a suitable culvert through its right of way for a drainage ditch, was unconstitutional.

A statute cannot deprive a railroad of compensation for outlays in building approaches and for fences and cattle guards made necessary by the laying out of highways across its tracks (Chicago & G. T. R. Co. v. Hough, 61 Mich. 507, 28 N. W. 532), nor compel the railroad company to build that part of a highway which would cross its right of way (People v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 52 Mich. 277, 17 N. W. 841).

And the damage done to a railroad by having a boulevard cross it must necessarily include all the additional expense entailed by such crossing, which, in a city, may involve the expense of erecting gates.

Parks & Boulevards v. Michigan C. R. Co. 90 Mich. 385, 51 N. W. 447; Grand Rapids v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. 58 Mich. 648, 26 N. W. 159; Massachusetts C. R. Co. v. Boston, C. & F. R. Co. 121 Mass. 124; Perley v. Chandler, 6 Mass. 453, 4 Am. Dec. 159.

The location and construction of a drainage ditch across the right of way of a railroad company is an appropriation of the company's property which entitles it to compensation for the value of the interest so taken; and when, in the construction of such a ditch, it becomes necessary to make an excavation under the tracks of the railroad, and for the company to incur expense in supporting the tracks or otherwise while the ditch is being constructed, such expense should be taken into account in estimating the damages of the company.

Mandamus will not lie to compel the owner of a bridge across a water course to remove the same, so that the stream may be enlarged for drainage purposes.

State ex rel. Fadley v. Henry County, 157 Ind. 96, 60 N. E. 939.

The statute in question was passed after the railroad was constructed and its rights had become vested, and to enforce such statute would be to impair the obligation of a contract, and thereby to violate the Federal Constitution.

The doctrine of dominant and servient estates does not apply in this case. Petitioners do not seek to use the water course in its natural state, but seek to compel the railway company, at its own expense, to widen, deepen, and enlarge the channel, and by so doing to take and damage the bridge lawfully erected over said water course, and also the land adjacent thereto.

If drainage work could be done under the police power, no assessment of benefits would be necessary. Proceedings by eminent domain and proceedings under the police power are entirely distinct and separate in character,—the one always implying compensation, the other never involving it.

22 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 916.

To require plaintiff in error so to remove its bridge, and to enlarge, widen, and deepen the natural channel of the creek, at its own expense, is to require it to bear the cost of drainage work, which should be paid for by special assessments upon the property benefited thereby.

Brown v. Atwell, 92 U. S. 327, 23 L. ed. 511.

The right of drainage through a natural water course or a natural water way is the natural easement appurtenant to the land of every individual through whose lands such natural water course runs, and every owner of land along such water course is obliged to take notice of the natural easement possessed by other owners along the same water course. For the drainage of large areas of land, drainage districts were authorized by the Illinois Constitution, to be provided for by proper legislative action. But the constitutional amendment was not solely to authorize drainage along the line of natural water courses; the constitutional provision was an express declaration of the people of the right of one man to drain his land over and across the lands of the other. It was the declaration of the people of the state, that, in a country such as the state of Illinois, the rights of drainage of the lands where such large portions were swamp and overflowed lands, were paramount to the right of the individual who sought to deny such drainage.

Ribordy v. Murray, 177 Ill. 134, 52 N. E. 325.

Mr. Justice Harlan delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a contest between certain drainage commissioners in Illinois and the Chicago, Burlington, & Quincy Railway Company, as to the validity of a demand made by the former that the latter should remove the bridge and culvert now maintained by it over Rob Roy creek, in Kendall county, Illinois, and, if it continues to maintain a bridge and culvert at the same point, that one be substituted that will meet the requirements of a certain plan of drainage adopted by *those[563] commissioners. Let us see in what way the dispute arises.

This suit or proceeding is based in part on what is known as the farm drainage act of Illinois, in force July 1st, 1885, entitled, "An Act Provided for Drainage for Agricultural and Sanitary Purposes, etc." Hurd's Rev. Stat. (Ill.) 1901, p. 712. By that act the commissioners of highways in each town, in the several counties under township organization, are constituted drainage commissioners for all drainage districts in their respective towns, with power as a body politic to sue and be sued, contract and be contracted with. § 1. Owners of lands are authorized to "drain the same in the general course of natural drainage, by constructing open or covered drains, discharging the same into any natural water course, or into any natural depression, whereby the water will be carried into some natural water course, or into some drain on the public highway, with the consent of the commissioners thereto; and when such drainage is wholly upon the owner's land, he shall not be liable in damages therefor to any person or persons or corporation." § 4.

The act also provided: "When the case involves a system of combined drainage in one town, and it is proposed that the cost shall be borne proportionately by the several parties benefited, a petition addressed to the drainage commissioners shall be presented to the town clerk, signed by a majority in number of the adult owners of land lying in a proposed district, and they shall be the owners in the aggregate of more than one third of the lands lying in the proposed district, or by the owners of the major part of the land and who constitute one third or more of the owners of the land in the proposed district, setting forth the boundaries, or a description of the several tracts of land thereof or fractions as usually designated: . . . Said petition shall state that the lands lying within the boundaries of said proposed district require a combined system of drainage or protection from wash or overflow; that the petitioners desire that a drainage district [564] may be *organized, embracing the lands therein mentioned, for the purpose of constructing, repairing, or maintaining a drain or drains, ditch or ditches, embankment or embankments, grade or grades, or all or either, within said district, for agricultural and sanitary purposes, by special assessments upon the property benefited thereby." § 11. Again: "Upon the organization of a drainage district, the commissioners shall go upon the land and determine upon a system of drainage, which shall provide main outlets of ample capacity for the waters of the district, having in view the future contingencies, as well as the present. . . . The maps and papers showing the final determination as to the system of drainage shall be filed in the clerk's office and be recorded in the drainage record." § 17. Hurd's Rev. Stat. (Ill.) 1901, pp. 713, 714, 717.

Section 40½ has, however, a more special application to the present case. It is in these words: "The commissioners shall have the power and are required to make all necessary bridges and culverts along or across any public highway or railroad which may be deemed necessary for the use or protection of the work, and the cost of the same shall be paid out of the road and bridge tax, or by the railroad company, as the case may be: Provided, however, notice shall first be given to the road or railroad authorities to build or construct such bridge or culvert, and they shall have thirty days in which to build or construct the same, such bridges or culverts shall, in all cases, be constructed so as not to interfere with the free flow of water through the drains of the district. Should any railroad company refuse or neglect to build or construct any bridge or culvert as herein required, the commissioners constructing the same may recover the cost and expenses therefor in a suit against said company before any justice of the peace or any court having jurisdiction, and reasonable attorney's fees may be recovered as part of the cost. The proper authorities of any public road or railroad shall have the right of appeal the same as provided for individual landowners." § 40½. Ibid., 723.

*It is contended by the defendants in error [565] that § 56 of what is known as the levee act has a bearing on the case. That section need not, however, be set out, as the supreme court of the state adjudged in this case that a district organized under the farm drainage act was subject only to the provisions of that act, and that the drainage commissioners could not claim any authority under the other act. 212 Ill. 103, 72 N. E. 219. See also Gauen v. Moredock & I. L. Drainage Dist. No. 1, 131 Ill. 446, 23 N. E. 633; Drainage Comrs. v. Volke, 163 Ill. 243, 45 N. E. 415; McCaleb v. Coon Run Drainage & Levee District, 190 Ill. 549, 60 N. E. 898.

The present proceeding was instituted in the circuit court of Kendall county, Illinois, by the defendants in error as drainage commissioners for the Bristol drainage district in that county, against the Chicago, Burlington, & Quincy Railway Company. It is a petition for mandamus.

Besides a general demurrer, the railway company demurred specially upon the ground that a judgment in favor of the commissioners would take its property for public use without compensation, and therefore without due process of law, as well as deny to it the equal protection of the laws, in violation of the Constitution of the United States. The demurrer was overruled. The defendant having elected to stand by its demurrer, judgment was rendered ordering a writ of mandamus as prayed for in the petition. That judgment was affirmed by the supreme court of Illinois, 212 Ill. 103, 72 N. E. 219, and hence the present writ of error.

As the case was determined upon the demurrer, the facts are to be taken as alleged in the petition. The case, thus presented, is as follows:

The drainage district in question was organized under the farm drainage act above referred to and contains about 2,000 acres of land on both sides of Rob Roy creek, across which are the road and right of way of the railway company. For more than fifty years before the district was established, that creek had been, as it now is, [566] a natural water course. Prior *to June 24th, 1903, the commissioners located a ditch or drain on the line of the creek for the purpose of enlarging its channel or water course, and thereby enabling the lands in the drainage district to be better drained and made more tillable.

The railway company operated and maintained its road across Rob Roy creek, not under any specific grant of authority, but under its general corporate power to construct, operate, and maintain a railroad. It placed a bridge or culvert 12 by 30 feet at the point where the road crosses the creek. In constructing a foundation for the bridge or culvert the company sank or placed in the creek at the point of crossing huge wooden timbers and stones, thereby preventing the deepening and enlarging of the creek by the commissioners, unless they removed such timber and stones; and if that be done the result will be the destruction of the bridge or culvert. The present channel or water way of the creek, under the bridge or culvert; is 3 feet in depth and 12 feet in width. It is insufficient to allow the natural flow of water in the ditch or drain proposed to be constructed by the commissioners. The estimated cost of this ditch or open drain is $20,000. The present bridge across the creek does not exceed $8,000 in value, and a new bridge, conforming to the plan of the Commissioners, will cost not exceeding $13,000.

On the 24th of June, 1903, the drainage commissioners notified the railway company in writing that a bridge was necessary at the point where the company's right of way would be crossed or intersected by the proposed ditch; that it was necessary to enlarge the opening under the present bridge; that the proposed improvement was to be the water way of a combined system of drainage established in the vicinity under the charge and direction of the drainage commissioners of the district; that the main ditch of the drainage, where it will intersect the company's right of way, must be of the width of 23 feet and of the depth of 9½ feet, the bridge constructed to be of the width of 23 feet *in the clear at the sur- [567] face or level of land, and to permit at least sixteen feet in the clear at the bottom of the ditch. The notice stated that the company was required, in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, to build and construct such bridge within thirty days from the date of the notice, in default whereof the commissioners would construct the same at the cost and expense of the company.

The company disregarded the notice and failed to build and construct the required bridge or culvert at the point of intersection with the creek, in accordance with the dimensions specified in the notice, and so as to permit such enlargement of the channel under the bridge as would be sufficient for the natural flow of water in the proposed ditch or drain.

The petition averred that a majority of the lands of the drainage district were swamp or slough lands, and in their present condition were not subject to cultivation, but by means of the proposed deepening and enlarging of Rob Roy creek, and as a result of the removal of the timbers and stones in the creek and the enlargement and deepening of the creek, all the lands in the drainage district would be "greatly improved, and made good, tillable land, subject to cultivation;" that the proposed location of the ditch or drain along the creek was the best route or means for drainage of the district, constituting the only natural water course of the drainage district, and affording the only natural outlet or way of drainage of the lands to make them tillable; that if said improvement and enlargement of the ditch was made and the timbers and stones removed from the creek at the point of crossing, all of the lands of the district would be made good, tillable lands for general farming purposes; and that the proposed construction of a ditch or drain along Rob Roy creek, when completed in accordance with said plans, would "not divert or carry waters which by nature of force of gravity would flow or drain into any other natural water course in said drainage district or the vicinity thereof."

The commissioners allege in their peti-
[568] tion that the neglect, *failure, and refusal of the railway company to remove the timbers and stones it had placed in the creek, and to construct and enlarge the opening under its bridge or culvert, had prevented them from completing the construction of the ditch or drain in accordance with the plans adopted by them; that it was necessary for the use and protection of the proposed drainage work that the opening underneath the bridge or culvert be constructed and enlarged in the manner indicated in order that the lands in the district might be drained in accordance with said plans; which plans "are reasonable for the suitable and proper drainage of said district."

The relief asked was a writ of mandamus commanding the railway company to forthwith enlarge, deepen, and widen the water way over and across the company's right of way across Rob Roy Creek.

1. The first question is one of the authority of this court to review the judgment below. As we have seen, the railway company insisted in the court of original jurisdiction that the statute under which the [580] drainage commissioners proceeded *could not be applied in this case without taking its property for public use without compensation, and therefore depriving it of property without due process of law, or without denying to it the equal protection of the laws, guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States. The judgment of the trial court was adverse to that view. In the supreme court of the state the railway company, by its assignments of error, preserved its objection based on constitutional grounds. That court did not, in words, refer to the Constitution of the United States, and its opinion concluded: "Entertaining the views above expressed, and founding our conclusion upon the rights and duties of the parties as found in the common law, we deem it unnecessary to pass upon the constitutionality of § 40½ of the farm drainage act." [212 Ill. 120, 72 N. E. 225.]

The contention is that as the state court based its judgment on the common-law duty of the railway company, and not expressly on any Federal ground, it cannot be said that there was any denial of the Federal right claimed by the company; consequently, it is argued, this court is without jurisdiction to re-examine the final judgment. Rev. Stat. § 709, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 575.

Undoubtedly, the general rule is that where the judgment of the state court rests upon an independent, separate ground of local or general law, broad enough or sufficient in itself to cover the essential issues and control the rights of the parties, however the Federal question raised on the record might be determined, this court will affirm or dismiss, as the one course or the other may be appropriate, without considering that question. But it is equally well settled that the failure of the state court to pass on the Federal right or immunity specially set up, of record, is not conclusive, but this court will decide the Federal question if the necessary effect of the judgment is to deny a Federal right or immunity specially set up or claimed, and which, if recognized and enforced, would require a judgment different from one resting upon some ground of local or general law. And such plainly was the effect of the judgment in this case. If, as the railway company contended, the proposed *action of the drainage commis-[581] sioners would deprive it of property without due process of law and also deny to it the equal protection of the laws, then a judgment should have been rendered for the company. And that result could not be avoided merely by silence on the Federal question, and by placing the judgment on some principle of the common law. The constitutional grounds relied on must, if sustained, displace or supersede any principle of general or local law which, but for such grounds, might be sufficient for the complete determination of the rights of the parties. The claim of a Federal right or immunity specially set up from the outset went to the very root of the case and dominated every part of it. If that claim be valid, then the law is for the railway company; for the supreme law of the land must always control. Therefore a failure to recognize such Federal right or immunity, and the decision of the case on some ground of general or local law, necessarily has the same effect as if the claim of Federal right or immunity had been expressly denied. That claim having, then, been distinctly set up by the company, and being broad enough to cover the entire case, it may not be ignored, and this court cannot refuse to determine whether the alleged Federal right exists and is protected by the Constitution of the United States. If the case had been decided in favor of the railway company on some ground of local or general law, then the claim of a Federal right would have become immaterial, and we could not have re-examined the judgment. But the decision was otherwise, and was, in law, a denial of the claim of a Federal right.

For these reasons we are of opinion that this court has jurisdiction to re-examine the final judgment of the state court so far as it involved the Federal right or immunity specially set up by the railway company.

2. The concrete case arising upon the petition and the demurrer is this: A public corporation, charged by law with the duty of causing a large body of lands, principally swamp and slough lands, to be drained [582] and made capable of cultivation, *has, under direct legislative authority, adopted a reasonable and suitable plan to accomplish that object. That plan requires the enlarging and deepening of the channel of a natural water course running through the district, which is the only natural outlet or way of drainage of the lands of the district,— the best and only practicable mode by which the lands can be made tillable. But that plan cannot be carried out unless the timbers and stones in the creek—placed there by the railway company when it constructed the foundation for its present bridge—are removed. The timber and stones referred to cannot, however, be removed without destroying the foundations of the present bridge and rendering it necessary (if the railway company continues to operate its road, which we assume it intends to do) to construct another bridge with an opening underneath wide enough to permit a channel sufficient to carry off the waters of the creek as increased in volume under the drainage system adopted by the commissioners.

The contention of the railway company is that, as its present bridge was lawfully constructed, under its general corporate power to build, construct, operate, and maintain a railroad in the county and township aforesaid, and as the depth and width of the channel under it were sufficient, at the time, to carry off the water of the creek as it then flowed, and now flows,—the foundation of the bridge cannot be removed and its use of the bridge disturbed unless compensation be first made or secured to it in such amount as will be sufficient to meet the expense of removing the timbers and stones from the creek and of constructing a new bridge of such length and with such opening under it as the plan of the commissioners requires. The company insists that to require it to meet these expenses out of its own funds will be, within the meaning of the Constitution, a taking of its property for public use without compensation, and, therefore, without due process of law, as well as a denial to it of the equal protection of the laws.

The importance of these questions will justify a reference to some of the adjudged cases; referring first to those recognizing [583] *the distinction between an incidental injury to rights of private property resulting from the exercise of governmental powers, lawfully and reasonably exerted for the public good, and the taking, within the meaning of the Constitution, of private property for public use.

In Northern Transp. Co. v. Chicago, 99 U. S. 635, 642, 25 L. ed. 336, 338, which involved a claim for damages directly resulting from the construction by the city of Chicago of a tunnel under Chicago river, whereby for a very long time the plaintiff was prevented from using its dock and other property for purposes of its business; in Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 669, 31 L. ed. 205, 213, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 273, which related in part, to the lawful prohibition by the state of the use of private property in a particular way whereby its value was materially diminished, if not practically destroyed; in New York & N. E. R. Co. v. Bristol, 151 U. S. 556, 557, 571, 38 L. ed. 269, 272, 274, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 437, which involved the question whether a railroad company could be required, at its sole expense, to remove a grade crossing which it had lawfully established and used, and to establish another crossing at a different place; in Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Chicago, 166 U. S. 226, 252, 41 L. ed. 976, 990, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 581, in which one of the questions was whether it was a condition of the exercise by the state of its authority to regulate the use of property owned by individuals or corporations, that the owner should be indemnified for the damage or injury resulting from the exercise of such authority for legitimate public purposes; in Gibson v. United States, 166 U. S. 269, 271, 276, 41 L. ed. 996, 998, 1002, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 578, in which the owner of a farm on an island in the Ohio river, at which there was a landing, sought to recover compensation for the injury done to the farm by reason of the construction by the United States of a dike for the purpose of concentrating the waterflow in the main channel of the river; and in Scranton v. Wheeler, 179 U. S. 141, 164, 45 L. ed. 126, 137, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 48, which involved the question whether the United States was required to compensate an owner of land fronting on a public navigable river, when his access from the shore to the navigable part of such river was permanently obstructed by a pier erected in the river under *the authority of Congress for the purpose [584] of improving navigation,—in each of those cases this court recognized the principle that injury may often come to private property as the result of legitimate governmental action, reasonably taken for the public good and for no other purpose, and yet there will be no taking of such property within the meaning of the constitutional guaranty against the deprivation of property without due process of law, or against the taking of private property for public use without compensation. To this class belongs the recent, and, as we think, decisive case of New Orleans Gaslight Co. v. Drainage Commission, 197 U. S. 453, 49 L. ed. 831, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep.

471, to be hereafter adverted to in another connection. In this class may also be placed Mills v. United States, 12 L. R. A. 673, 46 Fed. 738. That was the case of an improvement by the United States of the navigation of Savannah river, which resulted in so raising the water in that river as to make it impossible to prevent the flooding of adjacent rice fields that were ordinarily and naturally drained into the river, and rendering it necessary that expense be incurred in order to provide new drainage from those fields into a back river, where the water levels were suitable. In commenting upon that case, this court said, in United States v. Lynah, 188 U. S. 445, 47 L. ed. 539, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 349: "Obviously there was no taking of the plaintiff's lands, but simply an injury which could be remedied at an expense, as alleged, of $10,000, and the action was one to recover the amount of this consequential injury. The court rightfully held that it could not be sustained." See also Bedford v. United States, 192 U. S. 217, 48 L. ed. 414, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 238, and Manigault v. Springs, 199 U. S. 473, ante, 274, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 127.

We refer also, as having direct application here, to some of the cases, familiar to the profession, that recognize the possession by each state of the power, never surrendered to the government of the Union, of guarding and promoting the public interests by reasonable police regulations that do not violate the Constitution of the state or the Constitution of the United States. Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 1, 6 L. ed. 23; Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Husen, 95 U. S. 465, 472, 24 L. ed. 527, 530; Patterson v. Kentucky, 97 U. [585] S. 501, 503, 24 L. ed. 1115, 1116; Morgan's L. & T. R. & S. S. Co. v. Board of Health, 118 U. Co.* v. New York, 165 U. S. 628–631, 41 L. ed. 853, 854, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 418.

We assume that the drainage statute in question is entirely consistent with the Constitution of Illinois. It is so regarded by the supreme court of the state, and that is all-sufficient in this case. We assume, also, without discussion—as from the decisions of the state court, we may properly assume—that the draining of this large body of lands so as to make them fit for human habitation and cultivation is a public purpose, to accomplish which the state may, by appropriate agencies, exert the general powers it possesses for the common good. By the removal of water from large bodies of land, the state court has said, and by "the subjection of such lands to cultivation, they are made to bear their proper proportionate burden to the support of the inhabitants and the commerce of the state. Their value is increased, and thereby their contribution in taxes to the state and local governments is increased." 212 Ill. 103, 119, 72 N. E. 219. It is conceded that this public purpose cannot be certainly and effectively attained except through the plan adopted by the drainage commissioners. Further, the regulations against which the railway company invokes the Constitution have a real, direct, and obvious relation to the public objects sought to be accomplished by them; in no sense are they arbitrary or unreasonable. Indeed it is admitted that the plan of the commissioners, is appropriate and the best that can be devised for draining the lands in question. But the railway company, in effect, if not in words, insists that the rights which it asserts in this case are superior and paramount to any that the public has to use the water course in *question for the [586] purpose of draining the lands in its vicinity, although such water course was in existence, for the benefit of the public, long before the railway company constructed its bridge. This contention cannot, however, be sustained, except upon the theory that the acquisition by the railway company of a right of way through the lands in question, and the construction on that right of way of a bridge across Rob Roy creek at the point in question, carried with it a surrender by the state of its power, by appropriate agencies, to provide for such use of that natural water course as might subsequently become necessary or proper for the public interests. If the state could part with such power, held in trust for the public,—which is by no means admitted,—it has not done so in any statute, either by express words or by necessary implication. When the railway company laid the foundations of its bridge in Rob Roy creek, it did so subject to the rights of the public in the use of that water course, and also subject to the possibility that new circumstances and future public necessities might, in the judgment of the state, reasonably require a material change in the methods used in crossing the creek with cars. It may be—and we take it to be true— that the opening under the bridge as originally constructed was sufficient to pass all the water then or now flowing through the creek. But the duty of the company, implied in law, was to maintain an opening under the bridge that would be adequate and effectual for such an increase in the volume of water as might result from lawful, reasonable regulations established by appropriate public authority from time to time for the drainage of lands on either side of the creek. Angell, Water Courses, 6th ed. § 465*b*, p. 640.

The supreme court of Illinois said in this case: "The right of drainage through a natural water course or a natural water way is a natural easement, appurtenant to the land of every individual through whose land such natural water course runs, and every owner of land along such water course is obliged to take notice of the natural easement possessed by other owners along the same water course." Again, in the same case: "Where lands are valuable for cultivation, and the country, as this, depends so much upon agriculture, the public welfare demands that the lands shall be drained; and, in the absence of any constitutional provision in relation to such laws they have been sustained. upon high author-[587] ity, as the exercise of the *police power." Further: "A natural water course, being a natural easement, is placed upon the same ground, in many respects as to the public right, as is a public highway. At the common law, if a railroad or another highway crosses a natural water course or a public highway, such highway or railroad must be so constructed across the existing highway or water way, and so maintained, that said highway or water way, as the case may be, shall not only subserve the demands of the public as they exist at the time of crossing the same, but for all future time. . . . The great weight of authority is, that where there is a natural water way, or where a highway already exists and is crossed by a railroad company under its general license to build a railroad, and without any specific grant by the legislative authority to obstruct the highway or water way, the railroad company is bound to make and keep its crossing, at its own expense, in such condition as shall meet all the reasonable requirements of the public as the changed conditions and increased use may demand." The court said that the implied authority of the company to build its present bridge was coupled with its common law duty "to build its bridge over the natural water course with a view of the future as well as the present contingencies and requirements of such water course, and with the further implied provision that there remained in the state, whenever the public welfare required it, the right to regulate its use." Still further: "The subject [the draining of lands] was deemed of such importance that the people, by § 31 of article 4 of the Constitution of 1870, conferred upon the general assembly plenary powers in making provision for drainage for agricultural and sanitary purposes, and pursuant to that power the general assembly passed the act under which the appellees are proceeding, declaring that the organization should be for agricultural and sanitary purposes. The drainage districts organized as are the appellees, under that law are invested with the right of eminent domain and the power of taxation, upon the theory that they are public utilities and are held to be quasi public corporations. In their organic character *they do not repre-[588] sent merely the individual property owners or themselves, but they represent the state in carrying out its policy, as found in the common law and declared by its Constitution and statutes. It has been so often said that it need only be adverted to here, that corporations such as appellant do not hold their property and exercise their franchises strictly in a private right, but that from the nature of their business and their relation to society they are public corporations in a sense, and are subject to public control and regulation, though with their grant of power to traverse the state with their lines of railroad it cannot be said that their right of private property attaches to every highway and water course over which their roads may be constructed. To so hold would render such enterprises, which are designed for the benefit of the state, obstacles to its progress and a menace to its general welfare. . . . Of course, in the exercise of the right of the public interest, as against such corporations, the demand must be reasonable, and must clearly appear to be for the public welfare. In this case it is not questioned that the improvement of Rob Roy creek, as proposed, is necessary for the proper drainage of the lands comprising the drainage district. The petition alleges that such enlargement is necessary and that the same cannot be carried on with the obstructions placed in the bed of said creek by appellant. This the appellant does not deny." 212 Ill. 109–111, 114, 118, 72 N. E. 219.

In Ohio & M. R. Co. v. McClelland, 25 Ill. 140, 144, it was said—indeed, all the cases hold—that "the power to enact police regulations operates upon all alike;" that that power "is incident to and a part of government itself, and need not be expressly reserved, when it grants rights or property to individuals or corporate bodies, as they take subservient to this right."

A case quite in point is that of Kankakee & S. R. Co. v. Horan, 131 Ill. 288, 23 N. E. 621. That was an action against a railroad company to recover for damage from the backing of water upon plaintiff's land by reason of an insufficient culvert constructed *by it for the passage of water from a certain[589] natural water course. The contention of the company was that the culvert when constructed was sufficient for the flow of water at the time, and that it was not bound to make such provision as was necessary for an increase of water in the slough subsequently arising from the drainage into it of the lands along its course. Upon this point the supreme court of Illinois said: "We do not subscribe to this doctrine. The Parker slough was a water course, and it was the legal right of anyone along its line for miles above the railroad, where the water naturally shed toward the slough, to drain into it, and no one below, owning land along the slough, would have any legal remedy against such person so draining water into the slough above him, for any damage done to his inheritance by means of an increased flow of water caused thereby. In other words, the slough was a legal water course for the drainage of all the land the natural tendency of which was to cast its surplus water, caused by the falling of rain and snow into it; and this whether the flow was increased by artificial means or not. It would seem legitimately to follow that the railroad company, in providing a passageway for the slough, was bound to anticipate and provide for any such legal increase of the water flow. If it did not, it was doing a wrong and legal injury to any one situated like the appellee, who received injury in consequence of a failure on its part to do its duty." See also the following Illinois cases: People ex rel. Bloomington v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 67 Ill. 118; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Moffitt, 75 Ill. 524; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Chicago, 140 Ill. 309, 29 N. E. 1109; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Thillman, 143 Ill. 127, 36 Am. St. Rep. 359, 32 N. E. 529; Frazer v. Chicago, 186 Ill. 480, 486, 51 L. R. A. 306, 78 Am. St. Rep. 296, 57 N. E. 1055.

Many cases in other courts are to the same general effect. They negative the suggestion of the railway company that the adequacy of its bridge and the opening under it for passing the water of the creek at the time the bridge was constructed determines its obligations to the public at all subsequent periods. In Cooke v. Boston & L. R. [590] Corp. 133 Mass. 185, 188, *it appeared that a railroad company had statutory authority to cross a certain highway with its road. The statute provided that if the railroad crossed any highway it should be so constructed as not to impede or obstruct the safe and convenient use of the highway. And one of the contentions of the company was that the statute limited its duty and obligation to provide for the wants of travelers at the time it exercised the privilege granted to it. The court said: "The legislature intended to provide against any obstruction of the safe and convenient use of the highway, for all time; and if, by the increase of population in the neighborhood, or by an increasing use of the highway, the crossing which at the outset was adequate is no longer so, it is the duty of the railroad corporation to make such alteration as will meet the present needs of the public who have occasion to use the highway." In Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Cluggish, 143 Ind. 347, 42 N. E. 743, the court said (quoting from Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Smith, 61 Fed. 885): "The duty of a railroad to restore a stream or highway which is crossed by the line of its road is a continuing duty; and if, by the increase of population or other causes, the crossing becomes inadequate to meet the new and altered conditions of the country, it is the duty of the railroad to make such alterations as will meet the present needs of the public." So, in Indiana ex rel. Muncie v. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. 83 Fed. 287, which was the case of an overhead crossing lawfully constructed on one of the streets of a city, the court said: "If, by the growth of population or otherwise, the crossing has become inadequate to meet the present needs of the public, it is the duty of the railroad company to remedy the defect by restoring the crossing so that it will not unnecessarily impair the usefulness of the highway."

The cases to which we have referred are in accord with the declarations of this court in the recent case of New Orleans Gaslight Co. v. Drainage Commission, 197 U. S. 453, 49 L. ed. 831, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 471. That case would seem to be decisive of the question before us. It there appeared that a gas company had acquired an exclusive right *to [591] supply gas to the city of New Orleans and its inhabitants through pipes and mains laid in the streets. In the exercise of that right it had laid its pipes in the streets. Subsequently a drainage commission, proceeding under statutory authority, devised a system of drainage for the city, and in the execution of its plans it became necessary to change the location in some places of the mains and pipes laid by the gas company. The contention of that company was that it could not be required, at its own cost, to shift its pipes and mains so as to accommodate the drainage system; that to require it to do so would be a taking of its property for public use without compensation, in violation of the Constitution of the United States. This court said: "The gas company did not acquire any specific location in the streets; it was content with the general right to use them; and when it located its pipes it was at the risk that they might be, at some future time, disturbed, when the state might require, for a necessary public use, that changes in location be made. . . . There is nothing in the grant to the gas company, even if it could legally be done, undertaking to limit the right of the state to establish a system of drainage in the streets. We think whatever right the gas company acquired was subject, in so far as the location of its pipes was concerned, to such further regulations as might be required in the interest of the public health and welfare. These views are amply sustained by the authorities. National Waterworks Co. v. Kansas City, 28 Fed. 921, in which the opinion was delivered by Mr. Justice Brewer, then circuit judge; Columbus Gaslight & Coke Co. v. Columbus, 50 Ohio St. 65, 19 L. R. A. 510, 40 Am. St. Rep. 648, 33 N. E. 292; Jamaica Pond Aqueduct Corp. v. Brookline, 121 Mass. 5; Re Deering, 93 N. Y. 361; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Chicago, 166 U. S. 226, 254, 41 L. ed. 979, 990, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 581. In the latter case it was held that uncompensated obedience to a regulation enacted for the public safety under the police power of the state was not taking property without due compensation. In our view, that is all there is to this case. The gas company, by its grant from the city, acquired no exclusive right to the location of its pipes in the [592] streets, as chosen *by it, under a general grant of authority to use the streets. The city made no contract that the gas company should not be disturbed in the location chosen. In the exercise of the police power of the state, for the purpose highly necessary in the promotion of the public health, it has become necessary to change the location of the pipes of the gas company so as to accommodate them to the new public work. In complying with this requirement at its own expense none of the property of the gas company has been taken, and the injury sustained is damnum absque injuria."

The learned counsel for the railway company seem to think that the adjudications relating to the police power of the state to protect the public health, the public morals, and the public safety are not applicable, in principle, to cases where the police power is exerted for the general well-being of the community apart from any question of the public health, the public morals, or the public safety. Hence, he presses the thought that the petition in this case does not, in words, suggest that the drainage in question has anything to do with the health of the drainage district, but only avers that the system of drainage adopted by the commissioners will reclaim the lands of the district, and make them tillable or fit for cultivation. We cannot assent to the view expressed by counsel. We hold that the police power of a state embraces regulations designed to promote the public convenience or the general prosperity, as well as regulations designed to promote the public health, the public morals, or the public safety. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Ohio, 173 U. S. 285, 292, 43 L. ed. 702, 704, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 465; Gilman v. Philadelphia, 3 Wall. 713, 729, 18 L. ed. 96, 100; Pound v. Turck, 95 U. S. 459, 464, 24 L. ed. 525, 527; Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Husen, 95 U. S. 470, 24 L. ed. 529. And the validity of a police regulation, whether established directly by the state or by some public body acting under its sanction, must depend upon the circumstances of each case and the character of the regulation, whether arbitrary or reasonable, and whether really designed to accomplish a legitimate public purpose. Private property cannot be taken without compensation for public use under a police regulation relating *strictly to the public health, [593]
the public morals, or the public safety, any more than under a police regulation having no relation to such matters, but only to the general welfare. The foundations upon which the power rests are in every case the same. This power, as said in Carthage v. Frederick, 122 N. Y. 268, 10 L. R. A. 178, 19 Am. St. Rep. 490, 25 N. E. 480, has always been exercised by municipal corporations, "by making regulations to preserve order, to promote freedom of communication, and to facilitate the transaction of business in crowded communities. Compensation has never been a condition of its exercise, even when attended with inconvenience or pecuniary loss, as each member of a community is presumed to be benefited by that which promotes the general welfare." The constitutional requirement of due process of law, which embraces compensation for private property taken for public use, applies in every case of the exertion of governmental power. If, in the execution of any power, no matter what it is, the government, Federal or state, finds it necessary to take private property for public use, it must obey the constitutional injunction to make or secure just compensation to the owner. Cherokee Nation v. Southern Kansas R. Co. 135 U. S. 641, 659, 34 L. ed. 295, 303, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 965; Sweet v. Rechel, 159 U. S. 380, 399, 402, 40 L. ed. 188, 196, 197, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 43; Monongahela Nav. Co. v. United States, 148 U. S. 312, 336, 37 L. ed. 463, 471, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 622; United States v. Lynah, 188 U. S. 445, 47 L. ed. 539, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 349. If the means employed have no real, substantial relation to public objects which government may legally accomplish,—if they are arbitrary and unreasonable, beyond the necessities of the case,—the judiciary will disregard mere forms, and interfere for the protection of rights injuriously affected by such illegal action. The authority of the courts to interfere in such cases is beyond all doubt. Minnesota v. Barber, 136 U. S. 313, 320, 34 L. ed. 455, 458, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 185, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 862. Upon the general subject there is no real conflict among the adjudged cases. Whatever conflict there is arises upon the question whether there has been or will be in the particular case, within the true meaning of the Constitution, a "taking" of private property for public use. If the injury complained of is only incidental to the legitimate exercise of governmental powers for the public good, then [594] there is *no taking of property for the public use, and a right to compensation, on account of such injury, does not attach under the Constitution. Such is the present case. There are, unquestionably, limitations upon the exercise of the police power which cannot, under any circumstances, be ignored. But the clause prohibiting the taking of private property without compensation "is not intended as a limitation of the exercise of those police powers which are necessary to the tranquillity of every well-ordered community, nor of that general power over private property which is necessary for the orderly existence of all governments. It has always been held that the legislature may make police regulations, although they may interfere with the full enjoyment of private property, and though no compensation is given." Sedgw. Stat. & Const. Law, 434.

It remains to deal with a particular aspect of the case. The opening under the present bridge, we assume from the record, was sufficient, when the bridge was constructed, to pass all the water naturally flowing in the creek from lands in that locality. It is sufficient if the channel of the river be left as it is now. The commissioners demand, however, as they may rightfully do in the public interest, a larger, deeper, and wider channel in order to accommodate the increased volume of water in the creek that will come from the proposed plan of the commissioners. But that is a matter which concerns the public, not the railway company. The duty of the company will end when it removes the obstructions which it has placed in the way of enlarging, deepening, and widening of the channel. It follows, upon principles of justice, that while the expense attendant upon the removal of the present bridge and culvert and the timbers and stones placed by the company in the creek, as well as the expense of the erection of any new bridge which the company may elect to construct in order to conform to the plan of the commissioners, should be borne by the railway company, the expense attendant merely upon the removal of soil in order to enlarge, deepen, and widen the channel must be borne by the district. The expense to be borne by the [595] district and the railway *company, respectively, can be ascertained by the state court in some appropriate way, and such orders made as will be necessary to facilitate the execution of the plan of the commissioners.

Without further discussion, we hold it to be the duty of the railway company, at its own expense, to remove from the creek the present bridge, culvert, timbers, and stones placed there by it, and also (unless it abandons or surrenders its right to cross the creek at or in the vicinity of the present crossing) to erect at its own expense and maintain a new bridge for crossing that will conform to the regulations established by the drainage commissioners, under the authority of the state; and such a requirement if enforced will not amount to a taking of private property for public use within the meaning of the Constitution, nor to a denial of the equal protection of the laws.

Leaving it to the state court to give effect to these views by appropriate orders, and subject to the above qualifications, the decree of the state court is affirmed.

Mr. Justice Holmes, concurring:

I concur in the main with the judgment of the court. I agree that the public authority has a right to widen or deepen a channel if it sees fit, and that any cost that the railroad is put to in rebuilding a bridge the railroad must bear. But the public must pay for the widening or deepening, and I think that it does not matter whether what it has to remove is the original earth or same other substance lawfully put in the place of the original earth. Very likely in this case the distinction is of little importance; but it may be hereafter. I suppose it to be plain, as my brother Brewer says, that, if an expense is thrown upon the railroad unlawfully, its property is taken for public use without due compensation. Woodward v. Central Vermont R. Co. 180 Mass. 599, 62 N. E. 1051.

*I am authorized to say that my brothers [596] White and McKenna agree with my view.

Mr. Justice Brewer, dissenting:

The question in this case is a narrow one, yet of profound importance, and, involving, as in my judgment it does, a grievous wrong to owners of private property, I am constrained to dissent. Conceding the regularity of the proceedings and the power of the state to drain the lands in the drainage district, and, if necessary therefor, to compel the building of a new and enlarged bridge over Rob Roy creek, I dissent from the conclusion that the state may cast the entire cost of such rebuilding upon the railroad company.

It appears from the petition, which was demurred to, and whose allegations of fact must therefore be taken as true, that the drainage district consists of about 2,000 acres on both sides of Rob Roy creek; that a majority of the lands of said drainage district are swamp or slough lands, and, under natural conditions, not subject to cultivation, but by drainage will all be greatly improved and made good tillable lands. The railroad company has for forty years maintained a bridge or culvert over Rob Roy creek which has answered and does answer all its purposes and necessities. The cost of the ditches and drains in the drainage district in accordance with the plans adopted by the commissioners is estimated at $20,000. The railroad bridge or culvert across the creek does not exceed in value $8,000, and a new bridge or culvert can be constructed at a cost of not exceeding $13,000. The drainage act provides for an appraisement of the damage done to any tract by the construction of the proposed work, and a judgment in favor of the owner against the commissioners of the district for that amount. It also provides for an assessment of the benefits to the different tracts, upon the basis of which assessments taxes are to be levied to pay for the construction and maintenance of the drainage system. In [597] other words, any damage done to *any particular tract by the construction of the drainage system is to be paid to the owner of that tract, if a private individual, and the tracts which are benefited are to be charged with the cost in proportion to the amount of benefit received. Section 40½ of the drainage act then provides:

"The commissioners shall have the power and are required to make all necessary bridges and culverts along or across any public highway or railroad which may be deemed necessary for the use or protection of the work, and the cost of the same shall be paid out of the road and bridge tax, or by the railroad company, as the case may be: Provided, however, notice shall first be given to the road or railroad authorities to build or construct such a bridge or culvert, and they shall have thirty days in which to build or construct the same, such bridges or culverts shall, in all cases, be constructed so as not to interfere with the free flow of water through the drains of the district. Should any railroad company refuse or neglect to build or construct any bridge or culvert as herein required, the commissioners constructing the same may recover the cost and expenses therefor in a suit against said company before any justice of the peace or any court having jurisdiction, and reasonable attorney's fees may be recovered as part of the cost. The proper authorities of any public road or railroad shall have the right of appeal the same as provided for individual landowners."

According to this, if any bridge or culvert on any public highway is needed in order to perfect the drainage system, the cost of it is to be paid out of the public funds; but if a bridge or culvert is required on a railroad, the cost of it must be paid by the railroad company. And this is arbitrary, without any appraisement of benefits or damages.

Now, the property of a railroad company is private property. It cannot be taken for public uses without just compensation. True, it is used by the owners in performing the quasi public work of transportation, but it is not given up to public uses generally. It is not devoted to education or the improvement of farm lands, or, indeed, any other use than that of transportation. *If [598] taken therefrom and devoted to other public uses it is the taking of private property for public uses. That this can be done may be conceded, but only upon just compensation.

When private property is taken for public uses compensation must be paid. That is the mandate of the Federal Constitution and of that of nearly every state in the Union. Independently of such mandate, compensation would be required. In 2 Kent, Com. 12th ed. p. 339, it is said:

"A provision for compensation is a necessary attendant on the due and constitutional exercise of the power of the lawgiver to deprive an individual of his property without his consent; and this principle in American constitutional jurisprudence is founded in natural equity, and is laid down by jurists as an acknowledged principle of universal law." See also cases cited in the note; especially Gardner v. Newburgh, 2 Johns. Ch. 162, 166, 7 Am. Dec. 526.

In Sinnickson v. Johnson, 17 N. J. L. 129, 145, 34 Am. Dec. 184, referred to approvingly by this court in Pumpelly v. Green Bay & M. Canal Co. 13 Wall. 166, 178, 20 L. ed. 557, 560; and Monongahela Nav. Co. v. United States, 148 U. S. 312, 324, 37 L. ed. 463, 467, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 622, 625, it was said:

"This power to take private property reaches back of all constituted provisions; and it seems to have been considered a settled principle of universal law that the right to compensation is an incident to the exercise of that power; that the one is so inseparably connected with the other that they may be said to exist, not as separate and distinct principles, but as parts of one and the same principle."

If this be true when the taking is for that which is solely a public use, how much more true is it when the taking is largely for the benefit of private individuals, and at best only incidentally for the benefit of the public? Now the sole purpose of this proceeding, as admitted by the demurrer, was the transformation of these swamp and untillable lands into good tillable lands; in other words, to that extent, increasing the value of the farms in the hands of their private [599] owners. While the statute *under which these proceedings were had contemplates drainage for agricultural and sanitary purposes, there is nothing in this record to show that any sanitary result was contemplated, and the only object disclosed is the direct beneficial result to the owners of these swamp lands. There is not the slightest intimation that the health, morals, or safety of the community will be promoted, or is intended to be promoted, by the drainage. I quote the exact language of the petition:

"And the petitioners aver that the aforesaid location of the ditch or drain along the said Rob Roy creek was for the purpose of enlarging the channel or water course of the aforesaid Rob Roy creek, and thereby enabling the land in said drainage district to be better drained and render the soil in said district more tillable.

"And your petitioners aver that a majority of the lands of said drainage district are what is known as swamp or slough land, and under the present condition are not subject to cultivation, but by means of the proposed deepening and enlarging of said Rob Roy creek, as herein described, and as a result of the removal of said timbers and stones in said Rob Roy creek, at the place aforesaid, and of the enlargement of and deepening of said Rob Roy creek, all of the lands in said drainage district will be greatly improved, and made good, tillable land, subject to cultivation."

If it be a principle of natural justice that private property shall not be taken for public purposes without just compensation, is it not equally a principle of natural justice that no man shall be compelled to pay out money for the benefit of the public without any reciprocal compensation? What difference in equity does it make whether a piece of land is taken for public uses or so many dollars for like purposes? Cary Library v. Bliss, 151 Mass. 364, 378, 379, 7 L. R. A. 765, 25 N. E. 902; Woodward v. Central Vermont R. Co. 180 Mass. 599, 603, 62 N. E. 1051.

But it is said that this is done under the police power of the state, and that that can [600] be exercised without any provision for *compensation. It seems to me the police power has become the refuge of every grievous wrong upon private property. Whenever any unjust burden is cast upon the owner of private property which cannot be supported under the power of eminent domain or that of taxation, it is referred to the police power. But no exercise of the police power can disregard the constitutional guaranties in respect to the taking of private property, due process, and equal protection, nor should it override the demands of natural justice. The question in the case is not how far the state may go in compelling a railroad company to expend money in increasing its facilities for transportation, but how far it can go in charging upon the company the cost of improving farms along the line of its road.

Again, it will be perceived that by the section quoted, if, in consequence of the drainage, a bridge or culvert is required on any public highway, its cost is paid out of the public funds; but whenever a bridge or culvert is required along or across a railroad the company is charged with the cost. In the one case the public pays, and in the other a private owner. It is not pretended that the railway is in any way benefited by the drainage. Its property is not improved, its revenues are not increased. The reconstruction of the bridge or culvert is not needed by it in its work of transportation. It has used this present bridge for over forty years, meeting in that time all the demands of the public for transportation. So that, receiving no benefit, it is charged with the cost of reconstruction,—about $13,000,—in order to improve the value of the lands belonging to private owners in this drainage district, when if a highway crossed at the same place and a new bridge or culvert was required, the cost of it would be paid out of the public funds. I cannot conceive how this can be looked upon as "the equal protection of the laws."

Further, even under the conclusion reached by the court, the plaintiff in error should recover its costs, and in accord with the common practice in this court, the order should be that the judgment be reversed and the case remanded for further proceedings *not [601] inconsistent with our opinion. Stanley v. Schwalby, 162 U. S. 255, 282, 40 L. ed. 960, 969, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 754. Why should it be compelled to pay two or three hundred dollars in costs when it has shown that the decision below placed an improper charge upon it, the amount of which is not disclosed, and which may be a very substantial sum?

I am, therefore, constrained to dissent from both the opinion and judgment.

UNITED STATES, Appt.,
v.
WILLIAM A. CLARK.

1. Public lands—bona fide purchaser—notice.—A purchaser of timber lands after receivers' final receipts have issued is entitled to protection, under the Act of June 3, 1878 (20 Stat. at L. 89, chap. 151, § 2, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1545), as a bona fide purchaser, against the cancelation, for the original frauds of the entrymen, of the patents afterwards issued, unless he is shown to have had actual notice of such fraud.

2. Appeal—review of findings of fact—concurrent findings.—The concurrent findings of the two lower courts that a purchaser of timber lands had no actual knowledge or notice of the original frauds of the entrymen will be adopted by the Supreme Court of the United States, on appeal, unless clearly erroneous.

Argued January 9, 10, 1906. Decided March 5, 1906.

APPEAL from the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit to review a decree which affirmed a decree of the Circuit Court for the District of Montana, dismissing a bill filed on behalf of the United States to cancel certain patents for timber lands for the frauds of the entrymen. Affirmed.

See same case below, 138 Fed. 294.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Marsden C. Burch and Fred A. Maynard argued the cause, and, with Solicitor General Hoyt, filed a brief for appellant:

It is not possible, under any circumstances whatever, for a man to become vested with the rights of a bona fide purchaser, who completes his purchase before patents have issued.

A man who claims to be a bona fide purchaser must, among other facts, allege and prove that his vendor was seised in fee and in possession. The title purchased must be apparently perfect, good at law, a vested estate in fee, for the purchaser of an equitable title holds it subject to the equities upon it in the hands of the vendor, and has no better standing in a court of equity.

Where a person has not actual notice, if the circumstances are such as to enable the court to say, not only that he might have acquired, but also that he ought to have acquired, the notice with which it is sought to affect him, and that he would have acquired it but for his gross negligence in the conduct of the business in question, he will be treated as if he had notice.

Wilson v. Wall, 6 Wall. 83, 91, 18 L. ed. 727, 730.

The rule is universal and elementary that, if a purchaser in any form receives notice before he has completely acquired or perfected his own interest under the purchase, his position as bona fide purchaser is thereby destroyed, though he may have paid a valuable consideration.

Pom. Eq. Jur. §§ 753, 762.

Messrs. Walter M. Bickford and George F. Shelton argued the cause and filed a brief for appellee:

The defense of bona fide purchaser for a valuable consideration, without notice, was available to the defendant. This defense was absolute, and precluded a recovery by the government, for the reason that, prior to the commencement of suit, patents had issued from the government for said lands, and the full legal title to the same had vested in the defendant.

There is an absolute failure of proof on the part of the government to establish that any fraud whatever was committed.

Maxwell Land-Grant Case (United States v. Maxwell Land-Grant Co.) 121 U. S. 325, 379, 30 L. ed. 949, 958, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1015; United States v. Stone, 2 Wall. 535, 17 L. ed. 767; Atlantic Delaine Co. v. James, 94 U. S. 207, 24 L. ed. 112; Story, Eq. Jur. § 157; Lyman v. United Ins. Co. 2 Johns. Ev. § 78; Lewis v. Shaw, 70 Fed. 289; United States v. Detroit Timber & Lumber Co. supra; United States v. Stinson, 197 U. S. 204, 49 L. ed. 725, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 426; United States v. Budd, 144 U. S. 154, 162, 36 L. ed. 384, 386, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 575.

The defendant did not have notice of the alleged violations of the law in the inception of title to the lands purchased by him.

United States v. Detroit Timber & Lumber Co. 67 C. C. A. 1, 131 Fed. 674; Jones v. Simpson, 116 U. S. 609, 615, 29 L. ed. 742, 744, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 538; Wilson v. Wall, 6 Wall. 83, 91, 18 L. ed. 727, 730; Ware v. Egmont, 4 De G. M. & G. 460; Sugden, Vend. & P. 722; Meehan v. Williams, 48 Pa. 238; Townsend v. Little, 109 U. S. 585, 36 L. ed. 552, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 759.

The burden of proof rests upon the government to show, not only the fraud charged, by the most satisfactory and convincing proof, but also that the defendant had notice of the alleged frauds which would put him on inquiry, and lead to his discovery of such frauds, if any.

Colorado Coal & I. Co. v. United States, 123 U. S. 307, 317, 318, 31 L. ed. 182, 186, 187, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 131; United States v. San Jacinto Tin Co. 125 U. S. 273, 300, 31 L. ed. 747, 756, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 850; United States v. Des Moines Nav. & R. Co. 142 U. S. 510, 35 L. ed. 1099, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 308; United States v. American Bell Teleph. Co. 167 U. S. 224, 42 L. ed. 144, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 809; United States v. Marshall Silver Min. Co. 129 U. S. 579, 589, 32 L. ed. 734, 738, 9 Sup. Ct. It is doubtful whether, in this case, there is such an allegation of fact in the bill as would warrant the court in an investigation of the question of whether the defendant Clark was a purchaser with notice.

The rights of a bona fide purchaser cannot and will not be disturbed unless the testimony is conclusive of the facts alleged. There must be no question as to the conclusive character of the proof. He is favored in equity. His rights are to be protected at all hazards. A forfeiture of those rights can only be decreed when there is no other course left, by reason of the conclusive character of the proof adduced in support of the claim of the government. Lewis v. Shaw, 57 Fed. 516; United States v. Meeker, 50 Fed. 146; Johnson v. Towsley, 13 Wall. 72, 20 L. ed. 485.

This is a bill for the cancelation of eighty patents for timber lands in Montana, now owned by the defendant, on the ground that the patentees did not purchase the same in good faith for their own exclusive use and benefit, but for speculation, and under agreement by which their title should inure to the benefit of another, and that the defendant knew the facts in a general way, if not in detail. Act of June 3, 1878, chap. 151, § 2, 20 Stat. at L. 89 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1545), extended to all public-land states by act of August 4, 1892, chap. 375, § 2, 27 Stat. at L. 348. The defendant pleaded that he was a bona fide purchaser, excepted as such from the invalidation of the patents by the act, and denied the material allegations of the bill. Voluminous evidence was taken, and at the hearing the bill was dismissed by the circuit court. 125 [607] *Fed. 774. That court found that Clark had no actual knowledge of the alleged frauds or of facts sufficient to put him on inquiry (125 Fed. 776, 777), and, considering the requirement of clear proof, according to the statement of this court in the Maxwell Land-Grant Case (United States v. Maxwell Land-Grant Co.) 121 U. S. 325, 381, 30 L. ed. 949, 959, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1015, further was of opinion that the original frauds alleged were not made out. The circuit court of appeals, in view of the pendency of indictments, did not discuss the alleged original frauds, but, assuming for the purposes of decision that they had been committed, confirmed the findings of the circuit court with regard to Clark. One judge dissented on the ground that Clark knew enough to be put upon inquiry. 138 Fed. 294. The United States then appealed to this court.

The bill proceeds upon the footing that Clark has the legal title to the lands in question. The entrymen conveyed to one Cobban, the alleged partner in their frauds, and Cobban conveyed to Clark, all by warranty deeds. It is true that they conveyed before the patents issued, shortly after obtaining the receiver's receipt, but it is assumed that the legal title, when created, followed the deeds. We make the same assumption. Landes v. Brant, 10 How. 348, 13 L. ed. 449; Bush v. Person, 18 How. 82, 15 L. ed. 273; Myers v. Croft, 13 Wall. 291, 20 L. ed. 562; United States v. Detroit Timber & Lumber Co. 200 U. S. 321, ante, 499, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 282. See further, Ayer v. Philadelphia & B. Face Brick Co. 159 Mass. 84, 34 N. E. 177. But the position is that Clark is privy to the original frauds, and that, even if he is not, inasmuch as he did not purchase on the faith of the patents, he has no better title than the entrymen would have had if the title had remained in them. No distinction is attempted on the ground that the deeds, as well as the bargain, preceded the patents.

We may assume for the purposes of decision, as did the circuit court of appeals, that the original frauds are made out, although there is a great amount of testimony to good faith. But the point of law just stated has been disposed of by United States v. Detroit Timber & Lumber Co. supra. The United States is attempting to upset a legal title. In order to do that it must charge Clark with notice of the original frauds. The fact that Clark, while he had a merely equitable or personal *claim against the gov- [608] ernment, held it subject to any defect which it might have, whether he knew it or not, as generally is the case with regard to assigned contracts not negotiable, was not equivalent to actual notice of the defect. It is recognized in the act of March 3, 1891, chap. 561, § 7, 26 Stat. at L. 1098 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1521), that there may be a bona fide purchaser before a patent issues. The title when conveyed related back to the date of the original entries. Therefore actual notice must be proved.

But so far as actual knowledge or notice on the part of Clark is concerned, both of the courts below found in explicit terms that the proof failed. We perceive no sufficient reason for departing from the rule that, except in a very clear case, where both courts have concurred, we do not disturb their findings of fact. United States v. Stinson, 197 U. S. 200, 207, 49 L. ed. 724, 726, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 426; The Germanic (Oceanic Steam Nav. Co. v. Aitken) 196 U. S. 589, 595, 49 L. ed. 610, 613, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 317. If ever this rule is to be applied, it should be when those findings are against a charge of fraud, and when the effort is to overthrow a patent of the United States. The requirement that the proof should be clear in such a case has been repeated in a series of decisions, from the Maxwell Land-Grant Case (United States v. Maxwell Land-Grant Co.) 121 U. S. 325, 30 L. ed. 949, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1015, to United States v. Stinson, 197 U. S. 200, 204, 49 L. ed. 724, 725, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 426. There is nothing sufficient to show that Clark had actual knowledge of the arrangement by which Cobban got the lands. The allegation that Cobban was Clark's agent in the purchase wholly breaks down. Clark was at a distance. He dealt as a purchaser with Cobban, and paid him the market price, and a substantial profit even on the government's calculation. So far as any inference was to be drawn from the nearness of the respective dates of the receiver's receipts, the deeds of the entrymen to Cobban, and the deeds of Cobban to Clark, it was as open to the officers of the government as to Clark, if indeed, he knew anything about those dates; yet they seem to have suspected nothing, and he was advised by reputable counsel that the titles were good, and bought only on his advice. Clark, his agents and advisers, testify that they did not know or suspect anything wrong.

With regard to constructive notice in addition to the facts *just mentioned, the government relies on an argument that Cobban began negotiations with Clark before he had acquired title to the lands, not, however, identifying those lands. Assuming this to be true, it requires Clark to have kept that fact in mind when the conveyances were made to him, and noticing the date of the conveyances to Cobban, and of the receiver's receipts, to infer that the negotiations were begun upon a scheme to get the lands from the government by fraud. It requires an actual and not necessary inference from knowledge with which Clark may have been chargeable, but which he probably, or at least possibly, did not actually possess. It is argued further that Clark's inspector must have gone upon the land about the time of the entries in order to do the necessary work of estimating the timber. If, for the purposes of argument, we assume that knowledge of a timber inspector of facts affecting the title, with which he had nothing to do, was chargeable to Clark, still the knowledge is a mere guess. There was nothing present or required to be present on the face of the earth to indicate when the entry took place. We cannot infer fraud merely from more or less familiar relations between some of Clark's agents and Cobban. When suspicion is suggested, it is easily entertained. But bearing in mind, as was said in United States v. Detroit Timber & Lumber Co., that Clark was not bound to hunt for grounds of doubt, and recurring to the canons of proof laid down by the decisions, and to the findings of the courts below, we are of opinion that the decree dismissing the bill must be affirmed.

THE DECISIONS

OF THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1905.

---

[1] *COMMONWEALTH OF KENTUCKY
v.
CALEB POWERS. (No. 393.)

Ex Parte: IN THE MATTER OF THE COMMONWEALTH OF KENTUCKY, Petitioner. (No. 15.)

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 1–40.)

1. Removal of causes—denial of civil rights.—The denial, in summoning or impaneling jurors, of any equal civil rights secured to an accused by the Federal Constitution or laws, does not, unless authorized by the state Constitution or laws, as interpreted by its highest court, give the right to remove a criminal prosecution from a state to a Federal circuit court, under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 641, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, pp. 520, 521, authorizing such removal whenever the accused is denied, or cannot enforce in the judicial tribunals of the state, any right secured to him by any law providing for the equal civil rights of citizens of the United States or of all persons within its jurisdiction.

2. Error to state court—when writ may run to inferior tribunal.—A writ of error will lie from the Supreme Court of the United States to review the final judgment of a subordinate state court denying a Federal right specially set up or claimed, if, under the local law, that court is the highest court of the state entitled to pass upon such claim of Federal right.

3. Removal of causes—denial of civil rights.—The nonrecognition by the state courts of the validity of a pardon pleaded in bar of a criminal prosecution, even if involving a denial of a right secured to the accused by the Federal Constitution or laws, does not make a case for a removal of such cause from a state to a Federal circuit court, under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 641, authorizing such removals whenever the accused is denied or cannot enforce in the judicial tribunals of NOTE.—When writ of error may run to inferior state court.

In declaring that a writ of error may run from the Supreme Court of the United States to the highest court of the state "in which a decision of the Federal question could be had," although the final judgment of that court was subject to review in a higher state tribunal, KENTUCKY v. POWERS extends the rule heretofore announced by the Federal court. Previous decisions have stated the rule as requiring that the state court whose judgment is sought to be reviewed be the highest court in which a decision in the "suit" could be had. Mullen v. Western Union Beef Co. 173 U. S. 116, 43 L. ed. 635, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 404; Fisher v. Perkins (Fisher v. Carrico) 122 U. S. 522, 30 L. ed. 1192, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1227. And the usual difficulty has been to determine whether the judgment was rendered by the court which, as to the particular case, was the state court of last resort. McComb v. Knox County, 91 U. S. 1, 23 L. ed. 185; Great Western Teleg. Co. v. Burnham, 162 U. S. 339, 40 L. ed. 991, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 850; The Moses Taylor (The Moses Taylor v. Hammons) 4 Wall. 411, 18 L. ed. 397; Lane v. Wallace, 131 U. S. ccxix. Appx., and 26 L. ed. 703; Callan v. Bransford, 139 U. S. 197, 35 L. ed. 144, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 519; Miller v. Joseph, 17 Wall. 655, 21 L. ed. 741; Gregory v. No. 15, Original, argued January 22, 1906. Decided March 12, 1906.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Kentucky to review an order granting a writ of habeas corpus in aid of an order removing to that court a criminal prosecution pending in the Circuit Court of Scott County, in that state. Reversed with directions to set aside both orders. Also, a PETITION by the Commonwealth of Kentucky for a writ of mandamus to compel the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Kentucky to remand a criminal prosecution which had been removed to that court from the Circuit Court of Scott County, in that state, and to restore the custody of the accused to the state authorities. Rule for mandamus made absolute.

See same case below, 139 Fed. 452.

Statement by Mr. Justice Harlan:

These cases arise out of a criminal prosecution begun in one of the courts of Kentucky, and, after several trials, removed on the petition of the accused, Caleb Powers, into the circuit court of the United States for the eastern district of Kentucky.

The principal question to be determined is whether the prosecution was removable from the state court.

After referring to the indictment and to the transfer of the prosecution into the circuit court of the United States, the petition for removal alleged that the accused was within the jurisdiction of the United States and of the commonwealth of Kentucky; that he was, and all of his life had been, a citizen of the United States, and of that commonwealth, and as such citizen was entitled to enforce in the judicial tribunals of Kentucky, *on the trial and final disposition of said [3] prosecution, all equal civil rights and equal protection of laws secured to him by that part of the Amendment providing that "no state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." [Art. 14, § 1.] He also claimed the rights secured by § 1977 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1259), providing, "all persons within the jurisdiction of the United States shall have the same right in every state and territory to make and enforce contracts, to sue, be parties, give evidence, and to the full and equal benefit of all laws and proceedings for the security of persons and property as is enjoyed by white citizens, and shall be subject to like punishment, pains, penalties, taxes, licenses, and exactions of every kind, and to no other;" as well as those secured by the act of Congress of March 1st, 1875. (18 Stat. at L. 335, chap. 114, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1260), the preamble of which for review in the Supreme Court of the United States by writ of error to those courts. But unless a writ of error lies when the inferior state court is the highest tribunal which can pass upon the Federal question, it is clear, as stated by Mr. Justice Harlan in KENTUCKY v. POWERS, that it will be in the power of a state so to regulate the jurisdiction of its courts as to prevent the Supreme Court of the United States from protecting rights secured by the Federal Constitution and improperly denied in a subordinate state court, although specially set up and claimed.

Even where there is no uncertainty as to whether the judgment sought to be reviewed is that of the highest court of the state, it is sometimes difficult to determine whether the writ of error has been directed to the proper court.

The writ is ordinarily directed to the court which rendered the judgment. Atherton v. Fowler, 91 U. S. 143, 23 L. ed. 265.

But where the record remains in, or is returned to, the inferior state court, the writ of error may be directed to that court. McDonald v. Massachusetts, 180 U. S. 311, 45 L. ed. 542, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 389; Rothschild v. Knight, 184 U. S. 334, 46 L. ed. 573, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 391; Wurts v. Hoagland, 105 U. S. 701, 26 L. ed. 1109; Gelston v. Hoyt, 3 Wheat. 246, 4 L. ed. 381; Green v. Van Buskerk, 3 Wall. 448, 18 L. ed. 245; McGuire v. Massachusetts, 3 Wall. 382, 18 L. ed. 164; Wedding v. Meyler, 192 U. S. 573, 48 L. ed. 570, 66 L.R.A. 833, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 322; and Polleys v. Black River Improv. Co. 113 U. S. 81, 28 L. ed. 938, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 369.

At any time before the remittitur, the writ may be directed to the higher court. Wurts v. Hoagland, supra.

The word "may," as used in this connection, probable means "must." Atherton v. Fowler, supra.

And the mere fact that the highest state court orders its judgment of affirmance to be certified to the lower state court, where it is received and entered, does not make it proper to direct the writ of error to the lower court. Underwood v. McVeigh, 131 U. S. cxix., Appx., and 21 L. ed. 952.

And see division II. b, of note to wedding v. Meyler, 66 L.R.A. 833, on the Practice and procedure governing the transfer of causes to the Federal Supreme Court on writ of error or appeal.

declares that: "Whereas, it is essential to just government we recognize the equality of all men before the law, and hold that it is the duty of government in its dealings with the people to mete out equal and exact justice to all, of whatever nativity, race, color, or persuasion, religious or political; and it being the appropriate object of legislation to enact great fundamental principles into law."

The petition then refers to the arrest of the accused on the 9th of March, 1900, upon the charge of being an accessory before the fact to the wilful murder of William Goebel, and alleges that on the 10th of March, 1900, and prior to the finding and reporting of the indictment against the accused, "William S. Taylor, who was then the duly and legally elected, qualified, actual, and acting governor of the state of Kentucky, and had in his actual possession and under his actual control the office and executive mansion prepared by said state for its governor, and all the books, papers, records, and archives belonging thereto, in due form of law duly and legally granted and de-
[4] livered *to your petitioner, and your petitioner accepted from him, a full, complete, absolute, and unconditional pardon, release, and acquittance of the identical charge against him in said indictment, and the charge now pending in said prosecution against your petitioner in said Scott circuit court, and under which your petitioner is now in custody; that said Taylor, at the time he granted said pardon, had the right and authority, under the Constitution and the laws of Kentucky, to grant same; that your petitioner accepted said pardon, and from the time same was granted he claimed, and he now claims, the full benefit and effect thereof and his liberty thereunder. That on the day said pardon was granted him it was, by said Taylor, as governor aforesaid, duly entered on the exevecutive journal kept in his office, and a certificate thereof was duly and in due form of law, and as required by law, issued and delivered to him, duly executed by said governor and the secretary of said state, and placed in your petitioner's possession, and same was by your petitioner accepted. Your petitioner further states that at the time the said pardon was granted to him by his Excellency, the said William S. Taylor, and subsequent thereto, the said William S. Taylor was, and prior thereto he had been recognized, regarded, and treated as the duly elected, actual, and acting governor of the state of Kentucky by the executive power and executive departments, of the United States government, including the President, the Attorney General, and the Postmaster General, and by the postmaster at Frankfort, Kentucky;" that "for said state to hold him in custody, or to try or to require him to be tried in any one of its courts for the offense alleged against him in and by said indictment, since the granting and acceptance of said pardon and the issuance and acceptance of the certificate thereof, is a denial to him of the equal protection of the laws and the equal civil rights to which he is entitled under and as provided for in and by the portions of said amendment to the Constitution of the United States above copied, and by said section of said Revised Statutes, and by said act of Congress;" and, that "notwithstanding the granting and acceptance *of said pardon, the issuance and ac-[5] ceptance of said certificate, the fact that the said William S. Taylor was the governor of Kentucky when said pardon was granted and when said certificate was issued, and was then recognized as such governor by said executive officers of the United States, that he cannot enforce in the said Scott circuit court in which said prosecution is pending, or in that part of the state in which said Scott county is located, or in any court, judicial tribunal, or place of the said state, the equal civil rights and the equal protection of the laws secured to him by each and all of the three portions of said amendment copied above, and by said section of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and by said act of Congress for the reasons now set forth."

The accused here refers to the three trials to which he was subjected, and after stating that he was confined in the county jail, without bail, and awaiting trial, proceeds in his petition: "That at each of said trials your petitioner presented to said Scott circuit court said certificate of pardon, and pleaded and offered in evidence said pardon and said certificate as a bar and complete defense to said prosecution and the trial and conviction of your petitioner under said indictment, but at each of said trials the said trial court overruled said pleas and refused to admit said pardon and certificate as evidence, and held and adjudged that said pardon and certificate were null and void and of no effect whatever, and in each of said trials the said holding of the trial court in reference to said pardon and certificate was duly excepted to and made one of the grounds which was presented and on which a reversal was asked by said court of appeals on the trial of each one of said appeals heretofore mentioned, and on each one of said appeals your petitioner contended that said pardon and certificate entitled him to an acquittal of the charge contained in said indictment, but the said court of appeals, on the trial and final disposition of each one of said appeals, failed and refused to hold that said pardon and certificate authorized your petitioner's acquittance of said charge; instead, that court, as the [6]said trial court had *done, held that said pardon and certificate were and are null and void and of no effect whatever. The holding of said court of appeals on the trial of each of said appeals was reduced to writing, and each holding, as prepared and ordered by said court of appeals, has been, by the official reporter of that court, under the court's direction, caused to be printed in, and is now a part of, the official printed reports of said court, and all of said holdings are now in full force and effect as, and they in fact are, the laws of said state in this case, and are binding upon and will have to control this honorable court. That the instances named are the only instances in which said court of appeals or any trial court of said state ever held any pardon and certificate thereof, granted, entered, and issued by any governor of Kentucky, to be void and of no effect. That in consequence of the action and holdings of said trial court and said court of appeals, above stated, this honorable court, cannot, and should this case be retried in this honorable court, could not, allow your petitioner to plead or introduce said pardon and certificate as evidence as a defense to the said charges contained in said indictment against him, and could not allow your petitioner his liberty and acquittal under and by virtue of said pardon and certificate, or allow said pardon and certificate to have any effect whatever in your petitioner's behalf, but instead is and will be bound in consequence of said laws to hold said pardon and certificate null and void and of no effect whatever."

In the second paragraph of his petition for removal the accused states that he is a citizen of the United States and of Kentucky, and as such is entitled to enforce in the judicial tribunals of the state the equal civil rights and the equal protection of the law secured to him by the above constitutional provisions and statutes.

His petition then alleges: "But your petitioner states that he is denied and cannot enforce in the judicial tribunals of this state and in the part of the state where this action is pending, the rights secured to him [7]by said laws and each of said laws, *because the said state of Kentucky has enacted a law which has not been repealed nor abrogated, and which is now in full force and effect, to wit, § 281 of the Criminal Code of Practice of said state, which section reads as follows: 'The decisions of the court upon challenges to the panel and for cause, upon motions to set aside an indictment, and upon motions for a new trial, shall not be subject to exception;' and because of the decisions of the court of appeals of Kentucky, the highest judicial tribunal in this state, rendered in this action. . . . upholding the validity of said law, notwithstanding its plain contravention of the said provisions of the Constitution of the United States.

"Your petitioner states that the death of said Goebel occurred during the existence of intense political excitement following the election of a governor and other state officers in November, 1899; that said Goebel had been the Democratic candidate for the office of governor, and was, at the time of his death, contesting the right of said William S. Taylor to the office of governor, said Taylor, who was a Republican candidate for that office, having been actually elected governor and declared elected governor by the duly and legally constituted authorities, and inducted into said office; that this petitioner was, at said election, the Republican candidate for the office of secretary of state, and had been actually elected and declared elected to said office, and had been inducted into said office; and there was pending at the time of said Goebel's death a contest for the said office of secretary of state, against this defendant, inaugurated by one C. B. Hill, who had been a Democratic candidate for said office; that the public mind was, by said election and said contest for the office of governor, lieutenant governor, secretary of state, and the other state offices greatly inflamed, and bitter and intense political animosities were excited and fostered by reason thereof, and that such feelings existed at all of the trials of this petitioner hereinafter referred to, and such feelings still exist against him on the part of said *ad-[8] herents of said Goebel throughout the state of Kentucky, and particularly in Scott county.

"Your petitioner further states that he was first put on trial under said charge on the 9th day of July, 1900, at a special term of the Scott circuit court begun and holden on said date; that said trial resulted in a verdict of conviction, and he was sentenced to confinement in the state penitentiary during his natural life; that the jury in said trial was selected from a large number of the citizens of said county, and that, with three or four exceptions, all of the venire men were purposely summoned because of their known party affiliations, which were different from the known party affiliations of your petitioner; that by the laws of Kentucky in such cases made and provided the prosecution has a right to five, and the defense to fifteen, peremptory challenges, and that with the exception of three or four Republicans and Independent Democrats, all of those summoned were known to be partisan Goebel Democrats, while your petitioner was and is a Republican, and was known to belong to the Republican party; that from venire men so summoned a trial jury was selected that was composed almost if not entirely, of Goebel Democrats, and no Republicans, although there were then residing in said county many hundreds of citizens qualified for jury service who were Republicans and Independent Democrats, and not supporters of said Goebel in his candidacy or contest for the office of governor of Kentucky, nor in sympathy with him; but your petitioner avers and charges that all of such citizens, with the exceptions named, were intentionally passed by in summoning said venire men, in order that your petitioner should not have a fair trial by a jury of his peers, impartially selected, but to the end that such jury might be selected to convict him.

"Your petitioner further respectfully represents that the sheriff of Scott county, to whom is assigned the duty of selecting all jurors whose names are not drawn from the jury wheel, is a Goebel Democrat, as are also the deputy sheriffs of said county.

[9] *"Your petitioner further states that at said first trial hereinbefore mentioned the judge of the Scott circuit court, when the original list of names drawn from the jury wheel for jury service had been exhausted, although requested by counsel for this petitioner, and while there remained in said jury wheel about one hundred names, to draw the names remaining in said jury wheel therefrom, refused to do so, but directed the sheriff to summon one hundred men for jury service, and explicitly directed him to summon no men for jury service from the city of Georgetown, but to go out into the county for that purpose. Your petitioner states that the said one hundred names that remained at said time in said jury wheel had been placed there by impartial and unbiased jury commissioners prior to the election in November, 1899, and prior to the killing of said Goebel. Your petitioner states that on the morning following the order of the court to the sheriff to summon the one hundred men for jury service from the county, and when said one hundred men so summoned had appeared in court, they were seated on one side of the court room, separate and apart from the spectators and other persons; that the judge of said court, without notice to your petitioner or any of his counsel, and without making any request of any of his counsel or of this petitioner to accompany him, left the bench and went to the side of the court room wherein said parties summoned for jury service were assembled, and without swearing said parties, so far as this petitioner saw, heard, or has information, as to their excuses for not serving as jurors, if any they had, called them up to him one at a time, not in the hearing of this petitioner, or his counsel, and excused such of them from jury service as he saw fit, without any knowledge on the part of this petitioner or his counsel as to why such parties were thus excused, and on the following day the same proceeding was had as to forty additional men that had been summoned for jury service in this case.

"Your petitioner further states that an appeal was taken from the judgment of said court to the Kentucky court of appeals, and that at the January term, 1901, of said court, the *judgment of the trial court was [10] reversed; that your petitioner was again tried in the Scott circuit court at its October, 1901, term, and a verdict of guilty returned again, fixing the punishment of your petitioner at confinement in the state penitentiary for life; that in summoning the venire men from whom the jury was selected at the second trial, the same unjust and unlawful discrimination was practised, and that of one hundred and twenty-five venire men summoned in Scott county, all were partisan Goebel Democrats except three, and of one hundred and sixty-eight venire men summoned in the adjoining county of Bourbon, all were partisan Democrats except three, so that of the aggregate of two hundred and ninety summoned, two hundred and eighty-four were Goebel Democrats and six were Republicans, notwithstanding the fact that there were many hundreds of citizens in each of said counties qualified for jury service who were Republicans, or Independent Democrats, and not Goebel partisans.

"Your petitioner states that at said second trial he objected to the formation of a jury from the venire men summoned as hereinbefore stated, and moved to discharge the entire venire on the ground that he could not obtain a fair trial before a jury selected therefrom, and filed in support of said objection an affidavit."

The affidavit referred to is given in full in the margin.†

†The affiant states that he ought not to be required to go to trial before a jury drawn as a panel for service at the present term of this court or already summoned from the county of Bourbon, for the following reasons, namely: that the political canvass in this state in 1899, in which the late William Goebel was candidate for the office of governor, was a heated and angry one, and tended to create great antagonism in the minds of his political adherents against those who opposed; that

[11] *The petition then proceeds: "Your petitioner states that although the statements in said affidavit were true and known to be true by the court, he was forced to submit to trial before a jury composed entirely [12]of Goebel Democrats, your petitioner *always having been a Republican in politics, as hereinabove stated; and, as hereinabove stated, your petitioner was at said trial found guilty and sentenced to imprisonment for life by the judgment of said Scott circuit court; that your petitioner took an appeal from the judgment so rendered, [13]which judgment was *reversed by the court of appeals of Kentucky at the September, 1902, term; that your petitioner was again and for the third time tried at a special term of the Scott circuit court under the charge hereinabove mentioned, which trial was begun and holden on the 3d day of August, 1903, and that of the number of one hundred and seventy-six venire men summoned from Bourbon county, from which the jury was selected, three only, or possibly four, were Republicans, and the remaining one hundred and seventy-three (two) were Goebel Democrats and were summoned for that reason, and because they differed politically from your petitioner, whereas there were many hundreds of Republicans and Independent Democrats in said county qualified for jury service, but your petitioner states they were purposely avoided and passed by in summoning said venire men, and that said trial jury was not selected impartially, as required by law; that in the year 1896 there were over twenty-six hundred votes in said county for William McKinley, Republican candidate for President of the United States, and about twenty-two hundred votes cast for William J. Bryan, his Democratic opponent; that in the year 1899 William S. Taylor, Republican candidate for governor of Kentucky, received twenty-seven more votes in said county than were cast for said William Goebel, his Democratic opponent, and that a jury impartially selected could not have been and would not have been, as it was, composed entirely of Goebel Democrats,—on his said third trial one juror, a Goebel supporter, but of doubtful politics, excepted.

"Your petitioner further represents that at the third and last trial of this petitioner in said Scott circuit court, the judge thereof entered an order directing the sheriff of said Scott county to summon two hundred men from Bourbon county for jury service; that this petitioner's attorneys asked the court to admonish the sheriff to summon an equal number of men of each political party; that this request was refused, and thereupon counsel for this petitioner asked the court to instruct the sheriff to summon the talesmen as he came to them, *regardless [14] this canvass was followed by a contest before the state legislature for said office, in which the deepest and fiercest passions were stirred in the minds of his followers in this county, as well as in other counties of the state, including the county of Bourbon; that during that contest the said Goebel was killed, which killing tended still further to deepen and intensify the political passions of his friends and admirers in this county and in the county of Bourbon and throughout the state, against this affiant, who was a candidate for a state office on the Republican ticket in the said year of 1900. The passions thus created have since that time been stimulated and fed by the political contests which have since followed, and are still in existence, in this county and Bourbon county. Affiant says that, at a special term of this court in July, 1900, he was put on trial in this county, charged with being an accessory before the fact to the killing of said William Goebel, and was by the jury found guilty. From the judgment of the court at that term, the affiant appealed to the appellate court, the appeal being taken in the early part of September in said year; that at the subsequent October term of said court, jury commissioners for this county were selected whose duty it was to select a large number of names and place them in the jury wheel for service during the year 1901.

The three commissioners appointed were John Bradford, Ben Mallory, and H. H. Haggard, all three of whom were partisan supporters and allies, in the contest referred to, of the said William Goebel, deceased. The said jury commissioners discharged the work assigned to them by placing in said jury wheel the names of two hundred citizens of Scott county, for purposes of said jury service; that at the February term, 1901 of the circuit court of this county, and at the May term of the said year, seventy-five or more names were drawn from the jury wheel for said service; that at the present term there were drawn from the said jury wheel for the purpose of securing a jury in this case about one hundred and twenty-five names, that being the entire number of names placed in the wheel. Affiant further states that at the regular state election of 1900, in the county of Scott, there were cast for the Democratic candidate, in round numbers, 2,500 votes, and for the Republican candidate 2,100 votes; that of these 2,100 votes not less than 1,300 were white voters of equal character, standing, and intelligence with the white voters who cast their votes for the Democratic party at said election.

Affiant says that, despite these conditions, which were shown to exist in this county, that of the 200 names placed in the jury wheel by the aforesaid commissioners and drawn out as herein described, only five were supporters of the Republican party, and the other 195 being active partisan friends and supporters of the party with which William Goebel was identified as its leader, and whose minds and passions had been inflamed against this affiant by continued political agitation.

The affiant further says that of the five Republicans whose names were placed in the jury wheel for jury service by said commisof political affiliation. This the court also refused to do.

"Your petitioner further states that said trial resulted in a verdict of guilty, affixing the death sentence, and a judgment was thereupon entered, from which judgment an appeal was taken to the court of appeals of Kentucky, and on December 6th, 1904, the judgment of conviction was for the third time reversed by said court, and that it is the purpose and intention of the Commonwealth of Kentucky to subject this petitioner to a fourth trial under said charge, within a short time, in said Scott circuit court.

"Your petitioner further respectfully states that at each of said three trials the facts in relation to the jurors given or hereinbefore recited were embraced in affidavits filed in support of challenges to the panel and the venire and objections to the formation of the jury from the men summoned as hereinabove mentioned, and were also embraced in the motions and grounds for new trial prepared and filed on behalf of this petitioner at each of said trials, but that they were disregarded by the court and your petitioner's challenge to the panels, to the venire, and the motions for new trials in each instance overruled; that by reason of § 281 of the Criminal Code of the state, hereinbefore quoted, this petitioner was and is denied the right of any exception on said grounds, and the court of appeals of Kentucky, on each of the three appeals hereinbefore set forth, have decided that no irregularity in the summoning or impaneling of the jury is a reversible error, and they are powerless to reverse any judgment of said court by reason of such facts, and have held said law to be valid, and such law is now the law of this case, and said court of appeals of Kentucky are powerless upon any future appeal to reverse any judgment of said court by reason of a repetition of the acts hereinbefore set forth, or for any other irregularity or improper conduct in the formation of a jury, no matter how prejudicial to the substantial rights of your petitioner they may be, and must be followed and cannot be disregarded by this honorable court.

*"Your petitioner therefore prays this hon- [15]
orable court that the said indictment and the prosecution pending thereunder in this honorable court against your petitioner be removed into the circuit court of the United States for the eastern district for trial at the next ensuing term of said circuit court, and your petitioner will ever pray."

sioners, as before stated, one man drawn for service at the February term of this court, 1901, and another at the May term; of the remaining three, two of them at the present term disqualified themselves herein by previously formed opinions, and the fifth and last, after qualification and acceptance on the voir dire, was peremptorily challenged by the commonwealth. The affiant says that it will be impossible under these circumstances for him to avoid being tried at this term of this court except by a jury composed entirely of his political opponents, and exclusively made up of those who were the adherents and admirers of said Goebel, and it will be impossible for him to obtain a fair and impartial trial before any jury so constituted and formed.

The affiant further states that the officers of this county who went to Bourbon county to summon the men for jury service sent directly to the sheriff of Bourbon county, who, together with his deputies, were earnest and ardent adherents, supporters, and friends of the said William Goebel, and opposed politically to this affiant; that the officers of this county consulted and advised with the said officers of Bourbon county as to the selection of the men summoned, and that Wallace Mitchell, deputy sheriff of said county, James Burke, another deputy sheriff of said county, Joseph Williams, a constable of Bourbon county, and James A. Gibson, a guard for county prisoners in Bourbon county, all of whom are the political adherents of said Goebel and politically opposed to this affiant, acted with them in making the selection and summoning said men. He says that the political complexion of Bourbon is almost equally Democratic and Republican, there being a slight majority in favor of the Democratic party; that of the Republicans, about three fifths are colored, but there are many conscientious, fairminded and respectable citizens of Bourbon county, qualified for jury service, of the same political faith of this affiant, a great many of whom could have been as readily and conveniently summoned, and who would give to both sides herein a fair and impartial trial; but that none of such persons were summoned with the exception of two men, and with these exceptions ninety-one of the ninety-three names appearing upon the list furnished this affiant as a correct list of the men summoned from Bourbon county are the names of the supporters and adherents of said Goebel, and opposed politically to this affiant, and were summoned for jury service herein by reason of such fact, as this affiant believes.

Affiant further states that said Wallace Mitchell the deputy sheriff of Bourbon county, is now a candidate for sheriff of said county, seeking an election at the hands of the supporters and adherents of said William Goebel, and is their nominee for said office. Said Mitchell, in the fall of 1900, acted in summoning for jury service in this court in the case of the Com. v. Youtsey, indicter for the same offense as this affiant, and in making the selection of men to serve as jurors therein, made the statement that he would not summons a single Brown Democrat or Republican for such service, and he did not summons any such.

Messrs. N. B. Hays and Lawrence Maxwell, Jr., argued the cause, and, with Messrs. Robert B. Franklin and C. J. Bronston, filed a brief for petitioner in No. 15, original:

Strauder v. West Virginia, 100 U. S. 303, 311, 25 L. ed. 664, 666; Virginia v. Rives (Ex parte Virginia) supra.

Mr. E. L. Worthington argued the cause, and, with Messrs. Richard Yates, R. D. Hill, James C. Sims, and H. Clay Howard, filed a brief for respondent:

It is true that this court has decided in Strauder v. West Virginia, 100 U. S. 303, 25 L. ed. 664, and other cases, that a legislative denial of his equal civil rights entitles a party to a removal under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 641, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 520. But it puts this, not upon the ground that a legislative denial is within the terms of that section, but upon the ground that it is fair to presume that this legislative denial will be followed by a denial in the judicial tribunals.

But it would be an anomalous construction of a statute which speaks not of a legislative denial, nor of an executive denial, but solely of a judicial denial,—a denial in the judicial tribunals of the state,—to say that it refers not to a judicial denial, but solely to a legislative denial.

Nor has this court ever decided that a denial in the judicial tribunals of the state, which is made before the last and final trial has begun, does not come within the spirit as well as the letter of this section.

The judgment of a trial court of a state cannot be re-examined and reversed or affirmed by this court unless that trial court is the highest court of the state in which a decision in the suit can be had. The court of appeals is the highest court in Kentucky in which a decision in the prosecution against Caleb Powers can be had. It is the judgment of that court only in the case, therefore, that may be re-examined by this court. The judgment of the Scott circuit court cannot be so re-examined.

It results, therefore, that the error of the Scott circuit court in denying to Powers the right to be tried by a jury selected without class discrimination,—a right which is given him by the Constitution and laws of the United States,—cannot be corrected, on appeal or writ of error, by any court; not by the court of appeals of Kentucky, because of § 281 of the Criminal Code; and not by this court, because it can re-examine the judgment of the court of appeals only, which is the highest court in the state in which a decision in the suit can be had.

This court cannot reverse a judgment of the court of appeals because it correctly decided that it had no jurisdiction to pass on certain alleged errors committed by the trial court.

Mr. Frank S. Black also argued the cause, and, with Messrs. Richard Yates, E. L. Worthington, R. D. Hill, James C. Sims, and H. Clay Howard, filed a brief for respondent:

Messrs. Frank S. Black and R. C. Kinkead also submitted the cause for appellee.

Mr. Justice Harlan delivered the opinion of the court:

Powers, the accused, was indicted in the circuit court of Franklin county, Kentucky, for the crime of having been an accessory before the fact to the murder of William Goebel, who was assassinated in that county on the 30th day of January, 1900. The prosecution was removed by change of venue to the circuit court of Scott county. In the latter court the accused was found guilty and his punishment fixed by the jury at confinement in the state penitentiary for life. Upon appeal *to the court of appeals [23] of Kentucky the judgment was reversed and a new trial ordered. 110 Ky. 386, 53 L. R. A. 245, 61 S. W. 735. At the second trial the verdict was guilty, and the punishment was again fixed at confinement in the penitentiary for life. Upon appeal, that judgment was reversed and a new trial ordered. 114 Ky. 239, 70 S. W. 644, 1050, 71 S. W. 494. A third trial occurred, which resulted in a verdict of guilty, with the punishment fixed at death. This judgment was also reversed and the case sent back for a new trial. 26 Ky. L. Rep. 1111, 83 S. W. 146.

When the case came on for trial the fourth time the accused tendered and offered to file in the state court his petition praying, upon grounds therein stated (and which appear in the above statement), that the prosecution be removed for trial into the circuit court of the United States for the eastern district of Kentucky. But the state court would not allow the petition to be filed. Subsequently, a partial transcript of the record was filed in the Federal court, and the case was docketed in that court. The commonwealth objected to the filing of the transcript from the state court and to the docketing of the case in the Federal court, and moved to vacate the order of filing and docketing. That motion was overruled.

Thereupon the accused, by his counsel, presented to the Federal court an application for a writ of habeas corpus, in order that he might be discharged from the custody of the state authorities. For the reasons set forth in the opinion of that court the application was granted and a writ ordered to issue, commanding the jailer of Scott county, who held the accused in custody for the state, to deliver him into the custody of the marshal of the Federal court, which was done, that officer being directed to keep the accused confined in the county jail of Campbell county, Kentucky, until the further order of the Federal court. 139 Fed. 452. From that order the commonwealth of Kentucky has prosecuted the above appeal (No. 393), the sole ground of such appeal being that the Federal court [24] was without jurisdiction to make the *order allowing the writ of habeas corpus and taking the accused from the custody of the state authorities. The accused has moved to dismiss the appeal because the remedy of the commonwealth was by a writ of mandamus.

The commonwealth also asked leave to file a petition for mandamus to compel the Federal court to remand the case to the state court and to restore the custody of the accused to the state authorities. Leave to file was granted and the Federal judge, having made his return, submitted the rule upon the record of the case, including the opinion filed by the court below when the writ of habeas corpus was awarded to take the accused from the custody of the state authorities. This is case No. 15, Original.

The fundamental question to be determined is whether the removal of this criminal prosecution from the state court into the Federal court was authorized by any statute of the United States. We say, by any statute, because the subordinate judicial tribunals of the United States can exercise only such jurisdiction, civil and criminal, as may be authorized by acts of Congress. Chief Justice Marshall, speaking for this court, has said that "courts which originate in the common law possess a jurisdiction which must be regulated by their common law, until some statute shall change their established principles; but courts which are created by written law, and whose jurisdiction is defined by written law, cannot transcend that jurisdiction." Ex Parte Bollman, 4 Cranch, 75, 93, 2 L. ed. 554, 560; United States v. Hudson, 7 Cranch, 32, 33, 3 L. ed. 259, 260; Cary v. Curtis, 3 How. 236, 245, 11 L. ed. 576, 581; M'Intire v. Wood, 7 Cranch, 504, 506, 3 L. ed. 420, 421; United States v. Eckford (United States v. Tillou) 6 Wall. 484, 488, 18 L. ed. 920, 921; Sheldon v. Sill, 8 How. 441, 449, 12 L. ed. 1147, 1151; Jones v. United States, 137 U. S. 202, 211, 34 L. ed. 691, 695, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 80.

The adjudged cases make it clear that whatever the nature of a civil suit or criminal procceding in a state court, it cannot be removed into a Federal court unless warrant therefor be found in some act of Congress.

*We are now to enquire whether the case [25] was removable from the state court, in virtue of any act of Congress.

The removal of this prosecution into the Federal court was rested on §§ 641 and 642 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, pp. 520, 521), which are as follows:

"§ 641. When any civil suit or criminal prosecution is commenced in any state court, for any cause whatsoever, against any person who is denied or cannot enforce in the judicial tribunals of the state, or in the part of the state where such suit or prosecution is pending, any right secured to him by any law providing for the equal civil rights of citizens of the United States, or of all persons within the jurisdiction of the United States, . . . such suit or prosecution may, upon the petition of such defendant, filed in said state court at any time before the trial or final hearing of the cause, stating the facts and verified by oath, be removed, for trial, into the next circuit court to be held in the district where it is pending. Upon the filing of such petition all further proceedings in the state courts shall cease and shall not be resumed except as hereinafter provided. But all bail and other security given in such suit or prosecution shall continue in like force and effect as if the same had proceeded to final judgment and execution in the state court. . . .

"§ 642. When all the acts necessary for the removal of any suit or prosecution, as provided in the preceding section, have been performed, and the defendant petitioning for such removal is in actual custody on process issued by said state court, it shall be the duty of the clerk of said circuit court to issue a writ of habeas corpus cum causa, and of the marshal, by virtue of said writ, to take the body of the defendant into his custody, to be dealt with in said circuit court according to law and the orders of said court, or, in vacation, of any judge thereof; and the marshal shall file with or deliver to the clerk of said state court a duplicate copy of said writ."

The contention of the commonwealth is that the decisions of this court wholly preclude the suggestion that § 641 authorized the removal of this case into the Federal court. In review of this contention we must see what has been heretofore decided.

[26] *Among the cases to which our attention has been called, the first one, in point of time, involving the construction of § 641, is Ex parte Wells, 3 Woods, 128, 132, Fed. Cas. No. 17,386, determined in the circuit court of the United States for the district of Louisiana, Mr. Justice Bradley presiding. The accused there sought to remove the prosecution from the state court, upon the ground, among others, that such vindictive prejudice existed against them on the part of the lawmaking and law-administering authorities of the state that they would be denied their rights as citizens in the state court, as well as before any jury that might be impaneled therein under the then-existing jury law of the state; consequently, they would not be able to enforce their rights in said court. It was also alleged that the state court and its officers had so manipulated the local law as to deprive the accused of an impartial jury, and that they would be deprived of the full and equal benefit of the laws and proceedings for the security of their persons. The court, having found that there was nothing in the Constitution or laws of the state that was hostile to the equal rights of the accused, in any particular, said: "The allegations with regard to the manipulation of the law in such manner as to secure a jury inimical to the petitioners, and with regard to the existence of a general prejudice against them in the minds of the court, the jurors, the officials, and the people, are not within the purview of the statute authorizing a removal. The 14th Amendment to the Constitution, which guarantees the equal benefit of the laws, on which the present application is based, only prohibits state legislation violative of said right; it is not directed against individual infringements thereof. The civil rights bill of 1866 was broader in its scope, undertaking to vindicate those rights against individual aggression; but, still, only when committed under color of some 'law, statute, ordinance, regulation, or custom.' [14 Stat. at L. 27, chap. 31, § 1.] And when that provision in this law, which is transferred to § 641 of the Revised Statutes, gave the right to remove to the United States courts a cause commenced in a state court, against a person who is denied or cannot enforce any *of the rights secured by the act, it had [27] reference to a denial of those rights or impediments to their enforcement, arising from some state law, statute, regulation, or custom. It is only when some such hostile state legislation can be shown to exist, interfering with the party's right of defense, that he can have his cause removed to the Federal court."

In Strauder v. West Virginia, 100 U. S. 303, 309, 312, 25 L. ed. 664, 666, 667, which was an indictment in a court of West Virginia against a person of the African race for the crime of murder, the accused, before the trial commenced, presented his petition for the removal of the case into the United States court upon the ground that the laws of the state, in relation to both grand and petit juries, discriminated against colored citizens, because of their race, in violation of the Constitution and the laws of the United States. The petition for removal was denied, and the accused was forced to a trial in the state court, found guilty, and sentenced. That judgment was affirmed by the supreme court of appeals of the state, and the case was brought here upon writ of error. This court held the state statute to be unconstitutional, as making an illegal discrimination against negroes, because of their race. After referring to what was said in United States v. Reese, 92 U. S. 214, 23 L. ed. 563, to the effect that rights and immunities created by or dependent upon the Constitution of the United States can be protected by Congress, and that the form and manner of the protection may be such as Congress, in the legitimate exercise of its legislative discretion, shall provide, the court said: "There is express authority to protect the rights and immunities referred to in the 14th Amendment, and to enforce observance of them by appropriate congressional legislation. And one very efficient and appropriate mode of extending such protection and securing to a party the enjoyment of the right or immunity is a law providing for the removal of his case from a state court, in which the right is denied by the state law, into a Federal court, where it will be upheld. This is an ordinary mode of protecting rights and immunities conferred by the Federal Constitution and laws. Section 641 is *such a provision." Adverting [28] to the act from which §§ 1977 and 1978 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, pp. 1259-1262) were taken, the court further said: "This act puts in the form of a statute what had been substantially ordained by the constitutional amendment. It was a step towards enforcing the constitutional provisions. Section 641 was an advanced step, fully warranted, we think, by the 5th section of the 14th Amendment." Observe that this was the case of a state statute held to prevent the enforcement in the judicial tribunals of the state of rights secured to the accused by the Constitution of the United States. Upon that point this court said: "That the petition of the plaintiff in error, filed by him in the state court before the trial of his case, made a case for removal into the Federal circuit court, under § 641, is very plain, if, by the constitutional amendment and § 1977 of the Revised Statutes, he was entitled to immunity from discrimination against him in the selection of jurors, because of their color, as we have endeavored to show that he was. It set forth sufficient facts to exhibit a denial of that immunity, and a denial by the statute law of the state. There was error, therefore, in proceeding to the trial of the indictment against him after his petition was filed, as also in overruling his challenge to the array of the jury, and in refusing to quash the panel."

In Virginia v. Rives (Ex parte Virginia), 100 U. S. 313, 321, 25 L. ed. 667, 670, which was an indictment in a court of Virginia against colored persons charged with the crime of murder, the accused moved that the venire, which was composed entirely of white men, should be modified so as to allow one third of the jury to be composed of colored men. That motion was overruled. Thereupon the defendants, before the trial, sought by petition to have the prosecution removed into the Federal court, upon the ground that the right secured to them by the act of Congress providing for the equal civil rights of all citizens of the United States was denied to them in the judicial tribunals of the county in which the prosecution was pending; also, upon the ground that the grand jury finding the indictment had been organized in discrimination [29]against the *colored race because of their race. The application to remove the case was denied, and the defendants were tried in the state court and convicted. The case at that stage of the trial was docketed, at the motion of the accused, in the Federal court, and, upon writ of habeas corpus sued out from that court. they were taken from the custody of the state, and placed in the custody of the United States marshal. The commonwealth of Virginia obtained from this court a rule against the judge of the Federal court to show cause why the accused should not be redelivered to the authorities of the state, to be dealt with according to the laws of that commonwealth. The judge made his return to the rule, averring that the indictments were removed into the Federal court by virtue of § 641 of the Revised Statutes. It is important to notice that there was no claim in that case that either the Constitution or laws of Virginia denied the civil rights of colored people, or stood in the way of their enforcing the equal protection of the laws. The law, this court said, made no discrimination against them because of their color, nor any discrimination at all. And further, referring to the officer charged with the duty of selecting jurors, this court said: "He made himself liable to punishment at the instance of the state and under the laws of the United States. In one sense, indeed, his act was the act of the state, and was prohibited by the constitutional amendment. But, inasmuch as it was a criminal misuse of the state law, it cannot be said to have been such a 'denial or disability to enforce in the judicial tribunals of the state,' the rights of colored men, as is contemplated by the removal act. § 641. It is to be observed that act gives the right of removal only to a person 'who is denied, or cannot enforce, in the judicial tribunals of the state, his equal civil rights.' And this is to appear before trial. When a statute of the state denies his right, or interposes a bar to his enforcing it, in the judicial tribunals, the presumption is fair that they will be controlled by it in their decisions; and in such a case a defendant may affirm on oath what is necessary for a removal. Such a case is clearly within the provisions of § 641. But *when a subordinate officer of the state, [30]in violation of state law, undertakes to deprive an accused party of a right which the statute law accords to him, as in the case at bar, it can hardly be said that he is denied, or cannot enforce, 'in the judicial tribunals of the state' the rights which belong to him. In such a case it ought to be presumed the court will redress the wrong. If the accused is deprived of the right, the final and practical denial will be in the judicial tribunal which tries the case, after the trial has commenced. If, as in this case, the subordinate officer, whose duty it is to select jurors, fails to discharge that duty in the true spirit of the law; if he excludes all colored men solely because they are colored; or if the sheriff to whom a venire is given, composed of both white and colored citizens, neglects to summon the colored jurors only because they are colored; or if a clerk whose duty it is to take the twelve names from the box rejects all the colored jurors for the same reason,—it can with no propriety be said the defendant's right is denied by the state, and cannot be enforced in the judicial tribunals. The court will correct the wrong, will quash the indictment or the panel, or, if not, the error will be corrected in a superior court. We cannot think such cases are within the provisions of § 641. Denials of equal rights in the action of the judicial tribunals of the state are left to the revisory powers of this court."

The question as to the scope of § 641 of the Revised Statute again arose in the subsequent cases of Neal v. Delaware, 103 U. S. 370, 386, 26 L. ed. 567, 570; Bush v. Kentucky, 107 U. S. 110, 116, 27 L. ed. 354, 356, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 625; Gibson v. Mississippi, 162 U. S. 565, 581, 584, 40 L. ed. 1075, 1078, 1079, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 904, and Smith v. Mississippi, 162 U. S. 592, 600, 40 L. ed. 1082, 1085, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 900. In each of these cases it was distinctly adjudged, in harmony with previous cases, that the words in § 641—"who is denied or cannot enforce in the judicial tribunals of the state, or in the part of the state where such suit or prosecution is pending, any right secured to him by any law providing for the equal civil rights of citizens of the United States, or of all persons within the jurisdiction of the United States"—did not give the right [31] of removal, unless *the Constitution or the laws of the state in which the criminal prosecution was pending denied or prevented the enforcement in the judicial tribunals of such state of the equal rights of the accused as secured by any law of the United States. Those cases, as did the prior ones, expressly held that there was no right of removal under § 641, where the alleged discrimination against the accused, in respect of his equal rights, was due to the illegal or corrupt acts of administrative officers, unauthorized by the Constitution or laws of the state, as interpreted by its highest court. For wrongs of that character the remedy, it was held, is in the state court, and ultimately in the power of this court, upon writ of error, to protect any right secured or granted to an accused by the Constitution or laws of the United States, and which has been denied to him in the highest court of the state in which the decision, in respect of that right, could be had.

In Gibson v. Mississippi, supra, the words of this court as to the scope of § 641 were very emphatic. In that case there was a conviction in a state court of a negro for the crime of murder, and in which one of the questions, upon writ of error to the highest court of that state, was as to the action of the trial court in denying a petition for the removal of the prosecution to the Federal court. This court said: "When the Constitution and laws of a state, as interpreted by its highest judicial tribunal, do not stand in the way of the enforcement of rights secured equally to all citizens of the United States, the possibility that during the trial of a particular case the state court may not respect and enforce the right to the equal protection of the laws constitutes no ground, under the statute, for removing the prosecution into the circuit court of the United States in advance of a trial. We may repeat here what was said in Neal v. Delaware, namely, that in thus construing the statute 'we do not withhold from a party claiming that he is denied, or cannot enforce in the judicial tribunals of the state, his constitutional equality of civil rights, all opportunity of appealing to the courts of the United States for redress *of his wrongs. For if not entitled, [32] under the statute, to the removal of the suit or prosecution, he may, when denied, in the subsequent proceedings of the state court, or in the execution of its judgment, any right, privilege, or immunity given or secured to him by the Constitution or laws of the United States, bring the case here for review.' . . . We therefore held in Neal v. Delaware that Congress had not authorized a removal of the prosecution from the state court, where jury commissioners or other subordinate officers had, without authority derived from the Constitution and laws of the state, excluded colored citizens from juries because of their race." Again: "The application was to remove the prosecution from the state court, and a removal, as we have seen, could not be ordered upon the ground simply that citizens of African descent had been improperly excluded, because of their race, and without the sanction of the Constitution and laws of the state, from service on previous grand juries, or from service on the particular grand jury that returned the indictment against the accused. We do not overlook in this connection the fact that the petition for the removal of the cause into the Federal court alleged that the accused, by reason of the great prejudice against him on account of his color, could not secure a fair and impartial trial in the county, and that he prayed an opportunity to subpœna witnesses to prove that fact. Such evidence, if it had been introduced, and however cogent, could not, as already shown, have entitled the accused to the removal sought; for the alleged existence of race prejudice interfering with a fair trial was not to be attributed to the Constitution and laws of the state. It was incumbent upon the state court to see to it that the accused had a fair and impartial trial, and to set aside any verdict of guilty based on prejudice of race."

The cases to which we have adverted had reference, it is true, to alleged discriminations against negroes because of their race. But the rules announced in them equally apply where the accused is of the white race. Section 641, as well as the 14th Amendment of the Constitution, is for the benefit [33]of all *of every race whose cases are embraced by its provisions, and not alone for the benefit of the African race.

We have not overlooked the suggestion, earnestly pressed upon our attention, that it is impossible for the accused to obtain a fair trial in the locality where the prosecution is pending. Indeed, the suggestion is, in effect, that there was a deliberate purpose on the part of those charged with the administration of justice in that locality to take his life, under the forms of law, even if the facts did not establish his guilt of the crime charged. It is true that, looking alone at the petition for removal, the trials of the accused disclose such misconduct on the part of administrative officers connected with those trials as may well shock all who love justice and recognize the right of every human being, accused of crime, to be tried according to law. The case, as made by the record, it must be conceded, tends to show, if it does not justify the belief, that administrative officers having connection with the trial of the accused had it in mind, at each trial, to exclude from the jury, so far as it was possible to do so, every person, however competent, who belonged to the same political party as the accused. In his separate opinion, in 26 Ky. L. Rep. 1111, 1117, 83 S. W. 146, 149, Judge Barker, of the court of appeals of Kentucky, referring to the third trial of the accused, said: "It is clear that the trial judge was of opinion that it was not an offense against the 14th Amendment or a denial of the equal protection of the laws to the defendant to exclude Republicans [the accused being a Republican in politics] from the jury, solely because they were Republicans, provided the selected Democrats [the deceased Goebel being a Democrat in politics] were possessed of the statutory qualifications required for jury service."

It is appropriate here to recall that the circuit court, referring to the petition for removal, said: "The commonwealth of Kentucky has not filed a reply to said petition for removal, or in any way taken issue with the defendant as to any of the allegations thereof. Said allegations must, therefore, be accepted as true, save in so far as they may be contradicted by the transcript [34]*on file herein. In the case of Dishon v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. 66 C. C. A. 345, 133 Fed. 471, Judge Richards, in discussing the affirmative allegations of a petition for removal in a civil suit under the jurisdictional acts of 1887, 1888 (24 Stat. at L. 552, chap. 373, 25 Stat. at L. 433, chap. 866, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 508), said: 'If these averments were not true, the plaintiff should have denied them, and an issue would then have been made for the court below to try and determine. No answer was filed; no issue in any other way was taken. The plaintiff contented himself with making a motion to remand, and which only raised a legal question, namely, whether, upon the facts stated in the petition for removal, taken in connection with the record, a case for removal was made out.' In the case of Whitten v. Tomlinson, 160 U. S. 231, 40 L. ed. 406, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 297, Justice Gray, in referring to a petition for a writ of habeas corpus, under §§ 751–755, U. S. Rev. Stat. (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, pp. 592, 593), said: 'In a petition for a writ of habeas corpus, verified by oath of the petitioner, as required by U. S. Rev. Stat. § 754, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 593, facts duly alleged may be taken to be true, unless denied by the return, or controlled by other evidence. But no allegation of fact in the petition can be assumed to be admitted, unless distinct and unambiguous.' The allegations of the petition for removal are not borne out by the transcript in all their detail. They are, however, borne out to a substantial degree, and are not contradicted in any substantial particular. It establishes the discrimination complained of in the selection of the jurors by the subordinate officers having to do therewith on the second and third trials, and that on both trials the Scott circuit court held that such discrimination was not illegal and the defendant had no right to complain thereof, it not being claimed that the jurors selected did not possess the statutory qualifications. As to the first trial, all that the transcript shows is that it was one of the grounds of defendant's motion for new trial that the circuit judge, after the regular panel was exhausted, had refused to draw from the wheel the names of the jurors placed there in the fall of 1899, before any motive for discrimination had arisen, concerning which Judge Du Relle had this to say in the opinion delivered by him on behalf of the majority of the court of appeals *on the first appeal: [35]'In the grounds relied on in the motion for new trial it is stated that the court overruled the motion of appellant, after the regular panel was exhausted, to draw the remaining names necessary to complete the jury from the jury wheel. It is to be regretted that, in a case concerning which so much feeling existed, the simple and easy mode was not adopted, which would have put beyond cavil the question of the accused having a trial by jury impartially selected. This will doubtless be done upon the succeeding trial.'"

Taking, then, the facts to be as represented in the petition for removal, still the remedy of the accused was not to have prosecution removed into the Federal court, that court not being authorized to take cognizance of the case upon removal from the state court. It is not contended, as it could not be, that the Constitution and laws of Kentucky deny to the accused any rights secured to him by the Constitution of the United States or by any act of Congress. Such being the case, it is impossible, in view of prior adjudications, to hold that this prosecution was removable into the circuit court of the United States by virtue of § 641 of the Revised Statutes. Such a case as the one before us has not been provided for by any act of Congress; that is, a circuit court of the United States has not been authorized to take cognizance of a criminal prosecution commenced in a state court for an alleged crime against the state, where the Constitution and laws of such state do not permit discrimination against the accused in respect of such rights as are specified in the first clause of § 641. This court, while sustaining the subordinate courts of the United States in the exercise of such jurisdiction as has been lawfully conferred upon them, must see to it that they do not usurp authority not affirmatively given to them by acts of Congress. In Mansfield C. & L. M. R. Co. v. Swan, 111 U. S. 379, 382, 28 L. ed. 462, 463, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 510, 511, we said that "the rule, springing from the nature and limits of the judicial power of the United States, is inflexible and without exception, which requires this court, of its own motion, to deny its own jurisdiction, and, in the ex-[36] ercise of its appellate power, that of *all other courts of the United States, in all cases where such jurisdiction does not affirmatively appear in the record on which, in the exercise of that power, it is called to act. On every writ of error or appeal the first and fundamental question is that of jurisdiction,—first, of this court, and then of the court from which the record comes. This question the court is bound to ask and answer for itself, even when not otherwise suggested, and without respect to the relation of the parties to it." This principle has been again and again reaffirmed. Great Southern Fire Proof Hotel Co. v. Jones, 177 U. S. 449, 453, 44 L. ed. 842, 843, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 690, and authorities there cited.

Now, it affirmatively appears of record that the circuit court has taken jurisdiction of this case on removal from the state court, when, as we hold, no act of Congress authorized it do so. We cannot, in fidelity to the law, as declared in former cases, overlook this defect of jurisdiction in the court below or fail to express our inability to concur in the views of the learned court below upon this point.

The circuit court said: "I, therefore, conclude that the prior action of the Scott circuit court denying the defendant the equal protection of the laws is a real hindrance and obstacle to his asserting his right thereto in a future trial therein,—just as real as an unconstitutional statute would be,—and that the defendant is denied the equal protection of the laws in said court, within the meaning of said section, and entitled to a removal on account thereof. He is denied in said court the equal protection of the laws because he has been denied, and such denial has never been set aside, but remains in full force and effect. . . . By an 'inability to enforce in the judicial tribunals of the state' is meant, as I construe the statute, any judicial tribunal of the state that may have jurisdiction of the prosecution." This view is met by what has been said in former cases, namely, that the words in § 641—"who is denied or cannot enforce in the judicial tribunals of the state"—have no application to any case where the rights secured to an accused "by any law providing for the equal civil rights of citizens of the United States, *or of all persons with- [37] in the jurisdiction of the United States," are recognized or are not denied by the Constitution or laws of the state in which the prosecution is pending.

Under this holding, the accused is not deprived of opportunity to have his rights, of whatever nature, which are secured or guaranteed to him by the Constitution or laws of the United States, fully protected by a Federal court. But, it is said that the action of the trial court in refusing to quash the indictment or the panel of petit jurors, although the motion to quash was based on Federal grounds, cannot, under the laws of Kentucky, be reviewed by the court of appeals, the highest court of that commonwealth. If such be the law of Kentucky, as declared by the statutes and by the court of appeals of that commonwealth, then, after the case is disposed of in that court by final judgment, in respect of the matters of which, under the local law, it may take cognizance, a writ of error can run from this court to the trial court as the highest court of Kentucky in which a decision of the Federal question could be had; and this court in that event, upon writ of error, reviewing the final judgment of the trial court, can exercise such jurisdiction in the case as may be necessary to vindicate any right, privilege, or immunity specially set up or claimed under the Constitution and laws of the United States, and in respect of which the decision of the trial court is made final by the local law; that is, it may re-examine the final judgment of the trial court so far as it involved and denied the Federal right, privilege, or immunity asserted. This must be so, else it will be in the power of a state to so regulate the jurisdiction of its courts as to prevent this court from protecting rights secured by the Constitution, and improperly denied in a subordinate state court, although specially set up and claimed. What we have said is clear from § 709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 575), which declares that "a final judgment or decree in any suit in the highest court of a state, in which a decision in the suit could be had, . . . where any title, right, privilege, or immunity is claimed under the Constitution, . . . and the decision is against the court of New Jersey, this court said: "If the proceedings in the court of oyer and terminer could not, under the laws of New Jersey, be reviewed in a higher court of that state, except upon the allowance of a writ of error by such court or by some judge, and if such allowance was refused, then the judgment of the court of original jurisdiction was, within the meaning of the acts of Congress, the judgment of the highest court of the state in which a determination of the case could be had, and such judgment could have been, upon writ of error re-examined here, if it had denied any right, privilege, or immunity specially set up and claimed under the Constitution of the United States." So, in Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Elliott, 184 U. S. 530, 539, 46 L. ed. 673, 678, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 446, in which the defendant made a claim of immunity in virtue of an authority exercised under the United States, it was held that our writ of error ran, not to the supreme court of Missouri, but to the Kansas City court of appeals,—the highest court in which, under the law of that state, the question as to that immunity could be decided.

It is necessary to notice one other point made in behalf of the accused. At each of the trials he pleaded in bar of the prosecution a pardon granted to him on the 10th day of March, 1900, by William S. Taylor, who was alleged to have been, at the time, the duly elected, qualified, actual, and acting governor of Kentucky, having in his possession and under his control all the books, papers, records, and archives, as well as the executive mansion, belonging to the office of governor. That pardon, it is alleged, was accepted by the accused. It is further alleged that at the time said pardon was issued Taylor had been recognized, regarded, and treated as the lawful governor of Kentucky by the executive power and executive department of the government of the United States, including the President, the Attorney General, and the Postmaster General, and by the postmaster at Frankfort, the capital of Kentucky. The petition for removal alleged that the court in which the accused was tried, as well as the court of appeals of Kentucky, had refused to recognize said pardon as having [40] any legal effect, and had *thereby denied to him the equal civil rights and the equal protection of the laws secured to him by the above provisions of the Constitution and laws of the United States; consequently, it was contended, he was denied, and could not enforce, in any judicial tribunal of Kentucky, the rights which said pardon gave him.

Manifestly, in view of what has already been said, this question as to the pardon of the accused does not make a case of removal on the ground of the denial or inability to enforce in the judicial tribunals of Kentucky of a right secured to the accused "by any law providing for the equal civil rights of citizens of the United States or of all persons within the jurisdiction of the United States." Whether the nonrecognition by the courts of the state of the validity of the alleged pardon involved a denial of any right secured to the accused by any other law or by the Constitution of the United States, we need not now consider. As the circuit court could not, in virtue of § 641, take cognizance of this prosecution or removal, we cannot properly pass upon the merits of any question of Federal right which might arise in the case. It is sufficient to say that if the accused, by reason of the Taylor pardon, acquired any right under the Constitution or laws of the United States, and if, at the next trial of his case, that right, having been specially set up and claimed, should be denied by the highest court of the state in which a decision of that question could be had, such action of that court, in respect of that pardon, can be reviewed here upon writ of error. We do not perceive that any question arising out of the pardon could make a case under § 641 for the removal of the prosecution from the state court.

We are all of opinion that the order awarding the writ of habeas corpus cum causa must be reversed, with directions to set aside that order as well as the order docketing the case in the circuit court of the United States; also, that the rule in relation to mandamus must be made absolute, the prosecution remanded to the state court, and the custody of the accused surrendered to the state authorities.

It is so ordered.

*TERRITORY OF NEW MEXICO, Appt., [41]

v.

ATCHISON, TOPEKA, & SANTA FE RAILWAY COMPANY, Rio Grande, Mexico, & Pacific Railroad Company, and Silver City, Deming, & Pacific Railroad Company.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 41–43.)

Appeal from territorial supreme court —jurisdictional amount.—That part of a judgment of a territorial district court, in favor of plaintiff in an action to recover taxes, which was disallowed by the judgment of the territorial supreme court, reversing the judgment below except as to an item which was not contested, is the "matter in dispute," within the meaning of the act of March 3, 1885 (23 Stat. at L. 443, chap. 355, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 572), providing for appeals to the Supreme Court of the United States from the territorial supreme courts.

Argued January 26, 1906. Decided March 12, 1906.

APPEAL from the Supreme Court of the Territory of New Mexico to review a judgment affirming in part a judgment of the District Court of Grant County, in that territory, in favor of the territory, in an action to recover taxes. Dismissed because the jurisdictional amount was not involved.

See same case below, 11 N. M. 669, 72 Pac. 14.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Frank W. Clancy argued the cause, and, with Mr. A. H. Harllee, filed a brief for appellant.

Mr. Robert Dunlap argued the cause, and, with Messrs. H. L. Waldo, R. E. Twitchell, and Gardiner Lathrop, filed a brief for appellees.

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the opinion of the court:

The territory of New Mexico commenced three separate actions against appellees, respectively, in the district court of Grant county, New Mexico, to recover taxes alleged to be due on a levy to pay certain judgments against the county, including *a [42] particular item of $276.21, arising from the increase of the valuation of the property of the railroad companies. The aggregate amount claimed was $8,646.49, with interest at the rate of 25 per cent per annum. The cases were consolidated and submitted to the district court on an agreed statement of facts with exhibits attached, a jury being waived, and resulted in a judgment, October 9, 1902, for $5,156.71 with interest at 6 per cent per annum. This included the $276.21 with interest. Appellees sued out writs of error from the supreme court of the territory. No cross writ of error was brought and no cross errors were assigned. In the supreme court the item of $276.21 with interest was not contested. February 26, 1903, the supreme court announced its conclusion that the judgment be reversed, but as the item of $276.21 was not contested, rendered judgment for that amount, thereby rejecting the sum of $4,880.50 of the judgment below, that sum with interest at 6 per cent amounting to less than $5,000 on that date. 11 N. M. 669, 72 Pac. 14. From the judgment so rendered the territory prosecuted an appeal to this court, under the act of Congress in that behalf, January 17, 1905, and prayed in its assignment of errors that the judgment of the supreme court be reversed and set aside, and the cause be "remanded to said supreme court, with directions to affirm the judgment of the district court of Grant county." The appeal was heard in this court on January 26, 1906, and on that day appellant filed an additional assignment of errors to the effect that the supreme court of New Mexico erred in failing to hold that appellant was entitled to interest at the rate of 25 per cent per annum from October 9, 1902. But the judgment of the district court gave interest at 6 per cent, and, as before stated, the territory did not complain of that judgment as rendered.

NOTE.—As to review by the United States Supreme Court of territorial decisions—see note to Miners' Bank v. Iowa, 13 L. ed. U. S. 867.

By the act of March 3, 1885 (23 Stat. at L. 443, chap. 355, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 572), no appeal or writ of error could be allowed from any judgment or decree of the territorial supreme courts, with certain exceptions not material here, "unless the [43] matter in dispute, exclusive of costs, *shall exceed the sum of five thousand dollars." The matter in dispute here was that part of the judgment of the district court which was disallowed by the supreme court, and that was less than five thousand dollars.

Appeal dismissed.

EDWIN F. HALE, Appt.,
v.
WILLIAM HENKEL, United States Marshal.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 43–89.)

1. Grand jury — necessity of formal charge.—The examination of witnesses before a grand jury need not be preceded by a presentment, indictment, or other formal charge.

2. Grand jury—summoning witnesses.—In summoning witnesses before a grand jury it is sufficient to apprise them of the names of the parties with respect to whom they will be called upon to testify, without indicating the nature of the charge against such persons.

3. Witnesses—self-incrimination—statutory immunity.—The examination of witnesses before a grand jury concerning an alleged violation of the antitrust act of July 2, 1890 (26 Stat. at L. 209, chap. 647, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3200), is a "proceeding" within the meaning of the proviso to the act of February 25, 1903 (32 Stat. at L. 854–904, chap. 755, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1905, p. 602), that no person shall be prosecuted or be subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for, or on account of, any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he may testify or produce evidence in any proceeding, suit, or prosecution under certain named statutes, of which the antitrust act is one.

4. Witnesses—self-incrimination—sufficiency of statutory immunity.—The right of a witness to claim his privilege against self-incrimination, afforded by U. S. Const., 5th Amend., when examined concerning an alleged violation of the antitrust act of July 2, 1890, is taken away by the proviso to the act of February 25, 1903, that no person shall be prosecuted or be subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for, or on account of, any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he may testify or produce evidence in any proceeding, suit, or prosecution under certain named statutes, of which the antitrust act is one, which furnishes a sufficient immunity from prosecution to satisfy the constitutional guaranty, although it may not afford immunity from prosecution in the state courts for the offense disclosed.

5. Witnesses—self-incrimination—sufficiency of statutory immunity.—The difficulty, if any, of procuring the testimony which a person has given on his examination before a grand jury concerning an alleged violation of the antitrust act of July 2, 1890, does not render the immunity from prosecution or forfeiture, given by the proviso to the act of February 25, 1903, insufficient to satisfy the guaranty of U. S. Const. 5th Amend., against self-incrimination.

6. Witnesses—self-incrimination—privilege is personal.—The privilege against self-incrimination afforded by U. S. Const. 5th Amend., is purely personal to the witness, and he cannot claim the privilege of another person, or of the corporation of which he is an officer or employee.

7. Constitutional law—searches and seizures.—The protection against unreasonable searches and seizures afforded by U. S

8. Constitutional law—searches and seizures.—A corporation charged with a violation of the antitrust act of July 2, 1890, is entitled to immunity under U. S. Const., 4th Amend., from such an unreasonable search and seizure as the compulsory production before a grand jury, under a subpœna duces tecum, of all understandings, contracts, or correspondence between such corporation and six other companies, together with all reports and accounts rendered by such companies from the date of the organization of the corporation, as well as all letters received by that corporation since its organization, from more than one dozen different companies, situated in seven different states.

Argued January 4, 5, 1906. Decided March 12, 1906.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York to review an order discharging a writ of habeas corpus to inquire into a commitment for a contempt in refusing to testify before the grand jury and produce the papers and documents called for in a subpœna duces tecum, and remanding the petitioner to the custody of the marshal. Affirmed.

See same case below, 139 Fed. 496.

Statement by Mr. Justice Brown:

This was an appeal from a final order of the circuit court, made June 18, 1905, dismissing a writ of habeas corpus, and remanding the petitioner, Hale, to the custody of the marshal.

The proceeding originated in a subpœna duces tecum, issued April 28, 1905, commanding Hale to appear before the grand jury at a time and place named, to "testify
[45] and give evidence *in a certain action now pending . . . in the circuit court of the United States for the southern district of New York, between the United States of America and the American Tobacco Company and MacAndrews & Forbes Company, on the part of the United States, and that you bring with you and produce at the time and place aforesaid:"

1. All understandings, agreements, arrangements, or contracts, whether evidenced by correspondence, memoranda, formal agreements, or other writings, between MacAndrews & Forbes Company and six other firms and corporations named, from the date of the organization of the said MacAndrews & Forbes Company.

2. All correspondence by letter or telegram between MacAndrews & Forbes Company and six other firms and corporations.

3. All reports made or accounts rendered by these six companies or corporations to the principal company.

4. Any agreements or contracts, or arrangements, however evidenced, between MacAndrews & Forbes Company and the Amsterdam Supply Company or the American Tobacco Company or the Continental Company or the Consolidated Tobacco Company.

5. All letters received by the MacAndrews & Forbes Company since the date of its organization from thirteen other companies named, located in different parts of the United States, and also copies of all correspondence with such companies.

Petitioner appeared before the grand jury in obedience to the subpœna, and, before being sworn, asked to be advised of the nature of the investigation in which he had been summoned; whether under any statute of the United States, and the specific charge, if any had been made, in order that he might learn whether or not the grand jury had any lawful right to make the inquiry, and also that he be furnished with a copy of the complaint, information, or proposed indictment upon which they were acting; that he had been informed that there was no action pending in the circuit court, as stated in the subpœna, and that the grand jury was investigating no specific charge against *any [46] one, and he therefore declined to answer: First, because there was no legal warrant for his examination, and, second, because his answers might tend to incriminate him.

After stating his name, residence, and the fact that he was secretary and treasurer of the MacAndrews & Forbes Company, he declined to answer all other questions in regard to the business of the company, its officers, the location of its office, or its agreement or arrangements with other companies. He was thereupon advised by the assistant district attorney that this was a proceeding under the Sherman act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraint and monopolies; that, under the act of 1903, amendatory thereof, no person could be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture on account of any matter or thing concerning which he might testify or produce documentary evidence in any prosecution under said act, and that he thereby offered and assured appellant immunity from punishment. The witness still persisted in his refusal to answer all questions.

He also declined to produce the papers and documents called for in the subpœna:

First. Because it would have been a physical impossibility to have gotten them together within the time allowed.

Second. Because he was advised by counsel that he was under no legal obligations to produce anything called for by the subpœna.

Third. Because they might tend to incriminate him.

Whereupon the grand jury reported the matter to the court, and made a presentment that Hale was in contempt, and that the proper proceedings should be taken. Thereupon all the parties appeared before the circuit judge, who directed the witness to answer the questions and produce the papers. Appellant still persisting in his refusal, the circuit judge held him to be in contempt, and committed him to the custody of the marshal until he should answer the questions and produce the papers. A writ of habeas corpus was thereupon sued out, and a hearing had before another judge of the same court, who discharged the writ and remanded the petitioner.

Mr. De Lancey Nicoll argued the cause, and, with Messrs. Junius Parker and John D. Lindsay, filed a brief for appellant:

Unless the grand jury, in prosecuting the investigation referred to, in its two reports to the court was acting within the scope of its jurisdiction, the court was without authority to punish the witness for his supposed contumacy in refusing to answer questions, and all of its acts and proceedings in the premises were without authority, and void.

It is doubtless true that the grand jury will ordinarily be presumed to have followed the "usual" methods of procedure. But such presumption only arises in the absence of any averment or suggestions to the contrary.

United States v. Terry, 39 Fed. 355.

Notwithstanding the language of the subpœna, which commanded the petitioner to testify and produce papers and documents "in a certain action," the requirement that the petitioner appear before the grand jury necessarily shows that there was, in fact, no action pending, for there can be no action, or prosecution, or even a criminal proceeding, until after someone has been formally accused of acts constituting a criminal offense, by indictment duly returned by the grand jury, or, at least, by information lodged before a magistrate.

Post v. United States, 161 U. S. 583, 40 L. ed. 816, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 611.

An ex parte inquisitorial investigation, based upon mere suspicion or speculation, without any complaint or charge, and that may, and presumably would be, without result, is not a "case" or "controversy" within the meaning of the Constitution; and no court has any power or right to lend its aid or assistance to such a matter.

Re Pacific R. Commission, 32 Fed. 241; Kilbourn v. Thompson, and Interstate Commerce Commission v. Brimson, supra.

By the common law the powers of grand juries were restricted to the presentment to the court of accusations of two sorts; viz., indictments returned after the examination of witnesses, and presentments made upon the knowledge or observation of the grand jurors themselves.

The powers and duties of grand juries, ingrafted into our system by the Constitution, are only such as were possessed by grand juries at the common law; namely, of considering and acting upon indictments previously framed and laid before them by a known prosecutor, and of presenting facts within their own knowledge.

United States v. Mundel, 6 Call (Va.) 245.

Except in the single state of Tennessee, where there is legislative authority for it in respect to certain classes of offenses, the theory of general inquisitorial power in a grand jury is absolutely repudiated.

In no case that can be found in the books, where the point has been presented, directly or indirectly, has there been intimation that a grand jury could prosecute an investigation in the absence of a specific charge of crime, directed against a particular person or persons, except in certain Pennsylvania decisions, where the courts have held that, under the instructions of the court, attention of grand juries may be drawn to matters of general public import, such as "great riots that shake the social fabric, public pestilences," etc.

Even though a grand jury may send for witnesses before an indictment has been actually framed and laid before them, still, it is perfectly certain that there must at least be pending before them some specific charge directed against a particular person or persons.

To suppose the powers of a grand jury, created, not by express statute, but by the necessity of their aiding the jurisdiction of a court, to transcend that jurisdiction, would be to consider grand juries, once convened, to be clothed with powers not conferred by law, but originating with themselves. Whether a subpœna duces tecum for papers or a search warrant for chattels be issued, the spirit of the Amendment demands that, while in the latter case there must be probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, with a description of the place to be searched, etc., in the former it must be shown to the court or authority issuing the process that there is some proper cause pending, in relation to which the papers or documents called for are material evidence.

Are our constitutional safeguards against self-incrimination more infirm than those furnished by the common law? In former times it was thought a startling proposition that a corporation could be called upon to furnish evidence against one of its members. Here a corporation is sought to be compelled, by indirection, to furnish evidence against itself.

Mr. Henry W. Taft argued the cause, and, with Mr. Felix H. Levy and Attorney General Moody, filed a brief for appellee:

At the date of the adoption of the 5th Amendment, and for fifty years thereafter, under the procedure sanctioned by usage and precedent, an American grand jury (1) could proceed in cases other than those in which a private prosecutor presented a duly engrossed indictment, and (2) on its own motion, or at the instance of the court or the prosecuting attorney, could (and, necessarily, by an inquisitorial method) investigate an alleged or suspected crime, and, after the investigation, direct an indictment to be drawn in accordance with the evidence.

Up to this time there had not been in any court in this country a judicial expression which attempted to limit the in-quisitorial powers of the grand jury, except in the case of State v. Smith, Meigs, 99, 33 Am. Dec. 132, decided in 1838, but the decision in that case is not significant or important, for the reason that certain early statutes of the state of Tennessee expressly limited the power of the grand jury. In 1845, however, in the case of Re Lloyd, 3 Clark (Pa.) 188, there appeared the first well-considered expression of any American court showing a tendency at variance with the view expressed by Judge Addison, in the same state, fifty-four years before.

The decisions of the Federal courts continue to recognize broad inquisitorial powers in a grand jury.

Even in Pennsylvania, where some restrictions not common in other jurisdictions have been imposed upon the powers of the grand jury acting on its own motion, their power to act at the instance of the district attorney is recognized.

McCullough v. Com. 67 Pa. 30; Rowand v. Com. 82 Pa. 405; Com. v. Green, 126 Pa. 531, 12 Am. St. Rep. 894, 17 Atl. 878.

Criminal prosecutions before a grand jury in England at the time of the establishment of the judicial system of the United States were almost always commenced by private prosecutors. But the courts of this country have never thought it wise policy to permit a private prosecutor to take any part, except as a witness, in setting the machinery of the criminal law in motion.

Re Charge, supra.

Even in Pennsylvania, where, as early as 1705, the English practice was retained by statute to the extent of requiring that the name of the prosecutor should be placed upon the indictment, it was held, in 1769, that this statute did not apply where there was no real prosecutor, i. e., where the prosecution took its rise from the grand jury, or, we might add with equal reason, from the prosecuting attorney.

King v. Lukens, 1 Dall. 5, 1 L. ed. 13.

In its beginnings, the grand jury seems to have been devised as a convenient method to assist itinerant justices in England in detecting crime and punishing it. They seem clearly to have been expected to investigate, and originally they indicted frequently, on mere rumor.

St. Tr. 1330.

If the claim of the appellant be conceded, that a charge is necessary, it must also follow that he has the right to object to the admissibility of evidence, on the ground that it is not competent under the charge. But there are abundant authorities in the Federal courts to the effect (1) that the granting of such a right would necessarily result in a violation of the secrecy of the proceedings of the grand jury, and (2) that a witness has no right to question the regularity of the proceedings of a grand jury.

United States v. Brown, 1 Sawy. 533, Fed. Cas. 14,671; McGregor v. United States, 134 Fed. 187; United States v. Cobban, 127 Fed. 713; United States v. Farrington, 5 Fed. 343; United States v. Terry and United States v. Reed, supra; United States v. Ambrose, 3 Fed. 283.

If a charge more specific than that which may be fairly inferred from the statement of the district attorney be necessary, the court will presume that it was made. In other words, the court will presume that both the grand jury and the district attorney proceeded in accordance with their sworn duties and in accordance with law.

United States v. Terry, supra; United States v. Hunter, 15 Fed. 714; United States v. Reed and United States v. McAvoy, supra.

The attitude of the witness showed that he regarded the evidence called for as material, for he objected on the ground that it would incriminate him. He could not interpose that objection capriciously; to make it available, the possibility of crimination must have appeared from the circumstances.

It is doubtful whether, except in a most extreme case, a witness has any right at all to raise such objections as those raised here, and certainly not unless it clearly appears that his constitutional rights are in danger. A witness before a grand jury has no right to inquire whether that body is properly constituted and a lawful body.

Ex parte Haymond, 91 Cal. 545, 27 Pac. 859.

The scope of the powers of a grand jury is limited by the jurisdiction of the court of which it is an appendage.

United States v. Hill, 1 Brock. 156, Fed. Cas. No. 15,364.

It is also subject to the direction of the court, and cannot effectually exercise some of its most important functions without the interposition of the court. It must resort to the court to enforce, by subpœna, the attendance of witnesses, and it is only through the order of the court that witnesses may be punished for contumacy. Com. v. Bannon, 97 Mass. 214; Heard v. Pierce, 8 Cush. 338, 54 Am. Dec. 757.

The court may inquire whether the grand jury has exceeded its powers (People v. Naughton, 7 Abb. Pr. N. S. 421; Denning v. State, 22 Ark. 131), and may punish the entire jury or any of its members (Turk v. State, 7 Ohio, pt. 2, p. 240; State v. Cowan, 1 Head, 280; Re Ellis, Hempst. 10).

Whether a cause or action under the title mentioned in the subpœna was pending is unimportant. The proceeding might have proceeded without a title.

United States v. Reed, 2 Blatchf. 435, Fed. Cas. No. 16,134.

It is quite clear from the historical origin of the 4th Amendment that it was not intended to limit the power of the judiciary when it was proceeding in the ordinary way through the writ of subpœna duces tecum to compel the production, upon a trial in court, of documentary evidence. That writ had existed from time immemorial in England,—long before general executive warrants came into use. Without such a writ it would be utterly impossible to carry on the administration of justice (Summers v. Moseley, 2 Cromp. & M. 477; Wertheim v. Continental R. & Trust Co. 21 Blatchf. 246, 15 Fed. 718, and note; Amey v. Long, 9 East, 473); but its purpose and effect is totally different from a search warrant and other writs of that kind.

The 4th Amendment aimed at the seizure of papers or other tangible property by officers of the law in such manner that the owner was deprived not only of his possession and control of them, but also of his right, when they were produced as evidence, to assert his privilege in order to avoid their incriminating effect.

It is difficult to see how, under any circumstances, a compulsory production of papers under a subpœna duces tecum can be held to be an unreasonable search and seizure, particularly where the papers cannot be used to incriminate the witness.

Interstate Commerce Commission v. Baird, 194 U. S. 25, 48 L. ed. 860, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 563; Re Moser (Mich.) 11 Det. L. N. 593, 101 N. W. 591; 1 Greenl. Ev. 16th ed. § 469a.

Unreasonableness, under the 4th Amendment, cannot be predicated upon either the indefiniteness of the description of the books and papers called for in the subpœna, or upon the volume of evidence and the inconvenience in producing it.

Reg. v. Gurney, 11 Cox, C. C. 414; United States v. Babcock, 3 Dill. 567, Fed. Cas. No. 14,484; Re Storror, 63 Fed. 564; Wigmore, Ev. § 2193; United States v. Tilden, 10 Ben. 566, Fed. Cas. No. 16,522; Mitchell's Case, 12 Abb. Pr. 249.

The petitioner was bound to produce the documents called for by the subpœna. Whatever his cause, his failure to do so constitutes contempt.

See also Wigmore, Ev. § 2200, p. 2979.

Every person subject to the jurisdiction of a competent and lawful tribunal is bound to give testimony. This is a solemn and important duty that every citizen owes to his country (Ward v. State, 2 Mo. 120, 22 Am. Dec. 449). He is privileged to decline only in case his answers may tend to criminate him. Our system of jurisprudence does not permit a witness to refuse to answer because he prefers not to, or even because his answer will tend to degrade him, except, only, where degrading testimony is interposed solely to affect his credibility.

Where the reason of the privilege ceases, the privilege also ceases.

The proceeding before the grand jury was a "proceeding, suit, or prosecution" within the meaning of the immunity provision.

Except as evidence in defense may be incident to or involved in accusing evidence, a grand jury generally has no right to seek for or receive evidence in defense.

Mr. Justice Brown delivered the opinion of the court:

Two issues are presented by the record in this case, which are so far distinct as to require separate consideration. They depend upon the applicability of different provisions of the Constitution, and, in determining the question of affirmance or reversal, should not be confounded. The first of these involves the immunity of the witness from oral examination; the second, the legality of his action in refusing to produce the documents called for by the subpœna duces tecum.

1. The appellant justifies his action in re-
[59] fusing to answer the *questions propounded to him, 1st, upon the ground that there was no specific "charge" pending before the grand jury against any particular person; 2d, that the answers would tend to criminate him.

The first objection requires a definition of the word "charge" as used in this connection, which it is not easy to furnish. An accused person is usually charged with crime by a complaint made before a committing magistrate, which has fully performed its office when the party is committed or held to bail, and is quite unnecessary to the finding of an indictment by a grand jury; or by an information of the district attorney, which is of no legal value in prosecutions for felony; or by a presentment, usually made, as in this case, for an offense committed in the presence of the jury; or by an indictment which, as often as not, is drawn after the grand jury has acted upon the testimony. If another kind of charge be contemplated, when and by whom must it be preferred? Must it be in writing, and if so, in what form? Or may it be oral? The suggestion of the witness, that he should be furnished with a copy of such charge, if applicable to him, is applicable to other witnesses summoned before the grand jury. Indeed, it is a novelty in criminal procedure with which we are wholly unacquainted, and one which might involve a betrayal of the secrets of the grand jury room.

Under the ancient English system, criminal prosecutions were instituted at the suit of private prosecutors, to which the King lent his name in the interest of the public peace and good order of society. In such cases the usual practice was to prepare the proposed indictment and lay it before the grand jury for their consideration. There was much propriety in this, as the most valuable function of the grand jury was not only to examine into the commission of crimes, but to stand between the prosecutor and the accused, and to determine whether the charge was founded upon credible testimony or was dictated by malice or personal ill-will.

We are pointed to no case, however, holding that a grand jury *cannot proceed with- [60] out the formality of a written charge. Indeed, the oath administered to the foreman, which has come down to us from the most ancient times, and is found in Shaftesbury's Trial, 8 How. St. Tr. 769, indicates that the grand jury was competent to act solely on its own volition. This oath was that "you shall diligently inquire and true presentments make of all such matters, articles, and things as shall be given you in charge, as of all other matters, and things as shall come to your own knowledge touching this present service," etc. This oath has remained substantially unchanged to the present day. There was a difference, too, in the nomenclature of the two cases of accusations by private persons and upon their own knowledge. In the former case their action was embodied in an indictment formally laid before them for their consideration; in the latter case, in the form of a presentment. Says Blackstone in his Commentaries, bk. 4, p. 301:

"A presentment, properly speaking, is the notice taken by a grand jury of any offense from their own knowledge or observation, without any bill of indictment laid before them at the suit of the King, as the presentment of a nuisance, a libel, and the like; upon which the officer of the court must afterwards frame an indictment, before the party presented can be put to answer it."

Substantially the same language is used in 1 Chitty, Crim. Law, 162.

In United States v. Hill, 1 Brock. 156, Fed. Cas. No. 15,364, it was indicated by Chief Justice Marshall that a presentment and indictment are to be considered as one act, the second to be considered only as an amendment to the first, and that the usage of this country has been to pass over, unnoticed, presentments on which the attorney does not think it proper to institute proceedings.

In a case arising in Tennessee the grand jury without the agency of the district attorney, had called witnesses before them, whom they interrogated as to their knowledge concerning the then late Cuban expedition. Mr. Justice Catron sustained the legality of the proceeding and compelled the [61] witnesses *to answer. His opinion is reported in Wharton's Criminal Pleading & Practice, 8th ed. § 337. He says: "The grand jury have the undoubted right to send for witnesses and have them sworn to give evidence generally, and to found presentments on the evidence of such witnesses; and the question here is whether a witness thus introduced is legally bound to disclose whether a crime has been committed, and also who committed the crime." His charge contains a thorough discussion of the whole subject.

While presentments have largely fallen into disuse in this country, the practice of grand juries acting upon notice, either of their own knowledge or upon information obtained by them, and incorporating their findings in an indictment, still largely obtains. Whatever doubts there may be with regard to the early English procedure, the practice in this country, under the system of public prosecutions carried on by officers of the state appointed for that purpose, has been entirely settled since the adoption of the Constitution. In a lecture delivered by Mr. Justice Wilson of this court, who may be assumed to have known the current practice, before the students of the University of Pennsylvania, he says (Wilson's Works, vol. 2, p. 213):

"It has been alleged that grand juries are confined, in their inquiries, to the bills offered to them, to the crimes given them in charge, and to the evidence brought before them by the prosecutor. But these conceptions are much too contracted; they present but a very imperfect and unsatisfactory view of the duty required from grand jurors, and of the trust reposed in them. They are not appointed for the prosecutor or for the court; they are appointed for the government and for the people; and of both the government and people it is surely the concernment that, on one hand, all crimes, whether given or not given in charge, whether described or not described with professional skill, should receive the punishment which the law denounces; and that, on the other hand, innocence, however strongly assailed by accusations drawn up in regular form, and *by accusers, marshaled in legal array, [62] should, on full investigation, be secure in that protection which the law engages that she shall enjoy inviolate.

"The oath of a grand juryman—and his oath is the commission under which he acts—assigns no limits, except those marked by diligence itself, to the course of his inquiries: Why, then, should it be circumscribed by more contracted boundaries? Shall diligent inquiry be enjoined? And shall the means and opportunities of inquiry be prohibited or restrained?"

Similar language was used by Judge Addison, president of the court of common pleas, in charging the grand jury at the session of the common pleas court, in 1791:

"If the grand jury, of their own knowledge, or the knowledge of any of them, or from the examination of witnesses, know of any offense committed in the county, for which no indictment is preferred to them, it is their duty either to inform the officer who prosecutes for the state, of the nature of the offense, and desire that an indictment for it be laid before them, or, if they do not, or, if no such indictment be given them, it is their duty to give such information of it to the court; stating, without any particular form, the facts and circumstances which constitute the offense. This is called a presentment."

The practice, then, prevailing, with regard to the duty of grand juries, shows that a presentment may be based, not only upon their own personal knowledge, but from the examination of witnesses.

While no case has arisen in this court in which the question has been distinctly presented, the authorities in the state courts largely preponderate in favor of the theory that the grand jury may act upon information received by them from the examination of witnesses without a formal indictment, or other charge previously laid before them. An analysis of cases approving of this method of procedure would unduly burden this opinion, but the following are the leading ones upon the subject: Ward v. State, 2 Mo. 120, 22 Am. Dec. 449; State v. Terry, 30 Mo. 368; Ex *parte Brown, 72 Mo. 83, 37 [63] Am. Rep. 426; Com. v. Smyth, 11 Cush. 473; State v. Wolcott, 21 Conn. 272–280; State v. Magrath, 44 N. J. L. 227; Thompson & M. Juries, §§ 615–617. In Blaney v. State, 74 Md. 153, 21 Atl. 547, the court said:

"However restricted the functions of grand juries may be elsewhere, we hold in this state they have plenary inquisitorial powers, and may lawfully themselves, and upon their own motion, originate charges against offenders, though no preliminary proceedings have been had before a magistrate, and though neither the court nor the state's attorney has laid the matter before them."

The rulings of the inferior Federal courts are to the same effect. Mr. Justice Field, in charging a grand jury in California (2 Sawy. 667, Fed. Cas. No. 18,255), said of the grand jury acting upon their own knowledge:

"Not by rumors and reports, but by knowledge acquired from the evidence before you, and from your own observations. Whilst you are inquiring as to one offense, another and a different offense may be proved, or witnesses before you may, in testifying, commit the crime of perjury."

Similar language was used in United States v. Kimball, 117 Fed. 156–161; United States v. Reed, 2 Blatchf. 449, Fed. Cas. No. 16,134; United States v. Terry, 39 Fed. 355. And in Frisbie v. United States, 157 U. S. 160, 39 L. ed. 657, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 586, it is said by Mr. Justice Brewer:

"But in this country it . . . is for the grand jury to investigate any alleged crime, no matter how or by whom suggested to them, and after determining that the evidence is sufficient to justify putting the party suspected on trial, to direct the preparation of the formal charge or indictment."

There are doubtless a few cases in the state courts which take a contrary view, but they are generally such as deal with the abuses of the system, as the indiscriminate summoning of witnesses with no definite object in view, and in a spirit of meddlesome inquiry. In the most pertinent of these cases (Re Lester, 77 Ga. 143), the mayor
[64] of Savannah, who was also *ex officio the presiding judge of a court of record, was called upon to bring into the superior court the "Information Docket" of his court, to be used as evidence by the state in certain cases pending before the grand jury. It was held "that the powers of the body are inquisitorial to a certain extent is undeniable; yet they have to be exercised within well-defined limits. . . . The grand jury can find no bill nor make any presentment except upon the testimony of witnesses sworn in a particular case, where the party is charged with a specified offense."

This case is readily distinguishable from the one under consideration, in the fact that the subpœna in this case did specify the action as one between the United States and the American Tobacco Company and the MacAndrews-Forbes Company; and that the Georgia Penal Code prescribed a form of oath for the grand jury, "that the evidence you shall give the grand jury on this bill of indictment (or presentment, as the case may be, here state the case) shall be the truth," etc. This seems to confine the witness to a charge already laid before the jury.

In Lewis v. Wake County, 74 N. C. 194, the English practice, which requires a preliminary investigation where the accused can confront the accuser and witnesses with testimony, was adopted as more consonant to principles of justice and personal liberty. It was further said that none but witnesses have any business before the grand jury, and that the solicitor may not be present, even to examine them. The practice in this particular in the Federal courts has been quite the contrary.

Other cases lay down the principle that it must be made to appear to the grand jury that there is reason to believe that a crime has been committed, and that they have not the power to institute or prosecute an inquiry on the chance that some crime may be discovered. Re Morse, 18 N. Y. Crim. Rep. 312, 87 N. Y. Supp. 721; State v. Adams, 2 Lea, 647, an unimportant case, turning upon a local statute. In Pennsylvania, grand juries are somewhat more restricted in their powers than is usual in other states (McCullough v. Com. 67 Pa. 30; Rowand* v. Com. 82 Pa. 405; Com. v.[65] Green, 126 Pa. 531, 12 Am. St. Rep. 894, 17 Atl. 878), and in Tennessee inquisitorial powers are granted in certain cases and withheld in others (State v. Adams, supra; State v. Smith, Meigs, 99, 33 Am. Dec. 132).

We deem it entirely clear that under the practice in this country, at least, the examination of witnesses need not be preceded by a presentment or indictment formally drawn up, but that the grand jury may proceed, either upon their own knowledge or upon the examination of witnesses, to inquire for themselves whether a crime cognizable by the court has been committed; that the result of their investigations may be subsequently embodied in an indictment, and that, in summoning witnesses, it is quite sufficient to apprise them of the names of the parties with respect to whom they will be called to testify, without indicating the nature of the charge against them. So valuable is this inquisitorial power of the grand jury that, in states where felonies may be prosecuted by information as well as indictment, the power is ordinarily reserved to courts of impaneling grand juries for the investigation of riots, frauds, and nuisances, and other cases where it is impracticable to ascertain in advance the names of the persons implicated. It is impossible to conceive that in such cases the examination of witnesses must be stopped until a basis is laid by an indictment formally preferred, when the very object of the examination is to ascertain who shall be indicted. As criminal prosecutions are instituted by the state through an officer selected for that purpose, he is vested with a certain discretion with respect to the cases he will call to their attention, the number and character of the witnesses, the form in which the indictment shall be drawn, and other details of the proceedings. Doubtless abuses of this power may be imagined, as if the object of the inquiry were merely to pry into the details of domestic or business life. But were such abuses called to the attention of the court, it would doubtless be alert to repress them. While the grand jury may not indict upon current rumors or unverified reports, they may act upon knowledge acquired either from their own ob-[66] servations *or upon the evidence of witnesses, given before them.

2. Appellant also invokes the protection of the 5th Amendment to the Constitution, which declares that no person "shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself," and in reply to various questions put to him he declined to answer, on the ground that he would thereby incriminate himself.

The answer to this is found in a proviso to the general appropriation act of February 25, 1903 (32 Stat. at L. 854–904, chap. 755, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1905, p. 602), that "no person shall be prosecuted or be subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he may testify or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, in any proceeding, suit, or prosecution under said acts," of which the antitrust law is one, providing, however, that "no person so testifying shall be exempt from prosecution or punishment for perjury committed in so testifying."

While there may be some doubt whether the examination of witnesses before a grand jury is a suit or prosecution, we have no doubt that it is a "proceeding" within the meaning of this proviso. The word should receive as wide a construction as is necessary to protect the witness in his disclosures, whenever such disclosures are made in pursuance of a judicial inquiry, whether such inquiry be instituted by a grand jury, or upon the trial of an indictment found by them. The word "proceeding" is not a technical one, and is aptly used by the courts to designate an inquiry before a grand jury. It has received this interpretation in a number of cases. Yates v. Queen, L. R. 14 Q. B. Div. 648; Hogan v. State, 30 Wis. 428, 11 Am. Rep. 575.

The object of the amendment is to establish in express language and upon a firm basis the general principle of English and American jurisprudence, that no one shall be compelled to give testimony which may expose him to prosecution for crime. It is not declared that he may not be compelled to testify to facts which may impair his reputation for probity, or even tend to disgrace him; but the line is drawn at testimony that may expose *him to prosecution. If the [67] testimony relate to criminal acts long since past, and against the prosecution of which the statute of limitations has run, or for which he has already received a pardon or is guaranteed an immunity, the amendment does not apply.

The interdiction of the 5th Amendment operates only where a witness is asked to incriminate himself,—in other words, to give testimony which may possibly expose him to a criminal charge. But if the criminality has already been taken away, the amendment ceases to apply. The criminality provided against is a present, not a past, criminality, which lingers only as a memory, and involves no present danger of prosecution. To put an extreme case, a man in his boyhood or youth may have committed acts which the law pronounces criminal; but it would never be asserted that he would thereby be made a criminal for life. It is here that the law steps in and says that if the offense be outlawed or pardoned, or its criminality has been removed by statute, the amendment ceases to apply. The extent of this immunity was fully considered by this court in Counselman v. Hitchcock, 142 U. S. 547, 35 L. ed. 1110, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 816, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 195, in which the immunity offered by Rev. Stat. § 860 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 661), was declared to be insufficient. In consequence of this decision an act was passed applicable to testimony before the Interstate Commerce Commission in almost the exact language of the act of February 25, 1903, above quoted. This act was declared by this court in Brown v. Walker, 161 U. S. 591, 40 L. ed. 819, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 369, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 644, to afford absolute immunity against prosecution for the offense to which the question related, and deprived the witness of his constitutional right to refuse to answer. Indeed, the act was passed apparently to meet the declaration in Counselman v. Hitchcock (586, L. ed. 1122, Inters. Com. Rep. 828, Sup. Ct. Rep. 206), that "a statutory enactment, to be valid, must afford absolute immunity against future prosecution for the offense to which the question relates." If the constitutional amendment were unaffected by the immunity statute, it would put it within the power of the witness to be his own judge as to what would tend to incriminate him, and would justify him in refusing [68] to answer almost *any question in a criminal case, unless it clearly appears that the immunity was not set up in good faith.

We need not restate the reasons given in Brown v. Walker, both in the opinion of the court, and in the dissenting opinion, wherein all the prior authorities were reviewed, and a conclusion reached by a majority of the court, which fully covers the case under consideration.

The suggestion that a person who has testified compulsorily before a grand jury may not be able, if subsequently indicted for some matter concerning which he testified, to procure the evidence necessary to maintain his plea, is more fanciful than real. He would have not only his own oath in support of his immunity, but the notes often, though not always, taken of the testimony before the grand jury, as well as the testimony of the prosecuting officer, and of every member of the jury present. It is scarcely possible that all of them would have forgotten the general nature of his incriminating testimony or that any serious conflict would arise therefrom. In any event, it is a question relating to the weight of the testimony, which could scarcely be considered in determining the effect of the immunity statute. The difficulty of maintaining a case upon the available evidence is a danger which the law does not recognize. In prosecuting a case, or in setting up a defense, the law takes no account of the practical difficulty which either party may have in procuring his testimony. It judges of the law by the facts which each party claims, and not by what he may ultimately establish.

The further suggestion that the statute offers no immunity from prosecution in the state courts was also fully considered in Brown v. Walker, and held to be no answer. The converse of this was also decided in Jack v. Kansas, 199 U. S. 372, ante, 234, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 73,—namely, that the fact that an immunity granted to a witness under a state statute would not prevent a prosecution of such witness for a violation of a Federal statute did not invalidate such statute under the 14th Amendment. It was held both by this court and by the [69] supreme court of Kansas that *the possibility that information given by the witness might be used under the Federal act did not operate as a reason for permitting the witness to refuse to answer, and that a danger so unsubstantial and remote did not impair the legal immunity. Indeed, if the argument were a sound one it might be carried still further and held to apply not only to state prosecutions within the same jurisdiction, but to prosecutions under the criminal laws of other states to which the witness might have subjected himself. The question has been fully considered in England, and the conclusion reached that the only danger to be considered is one arising within the same jurisdiction and under the same sovereignty. Queen v. Boyes, 1 Best & S. 311; King of Sicilies v. Willcox, 7 St. Tr. N. S. 1049, 1068; State v. March, 46 N. C. (1 Jones, L.) 526; State v. Thomas, 98 N. C. 599, 2 Am. St. Rep. 351, 4 S. E. 518. The entire question of immunity is also exhaustively treated in Wigmore on Evidence, §§ 2255–2259.

The case of United States v. Saline Bank, 1 Pet. 100, 7 L. ed. 69, is not in conflict with this. That was a bill for discovery, filed by the United States against the cashier of the Saline Bank, in the district court of the Virginia district, who pleaded that the emission of certain unlawful bills took place within the state of Virginia, by the law whereof penalties were inflicted for such emissions. It was held that defendants were not bound to answer and subject them to those penalties. It is sufficient to say that the prosecution was under a state law which imposed the penalty, and that the Federal court was simply administering the state law, and no question arose as to a prosecution under another jurisdiction.

But it is further insisted that, while the immunity statute may protect individual witnesses, it would not protect the corporation of which appellant was the agent and representative. This is true, but the answer is that it was not designed to do so. The right of a person under the 5th Amendment to refuse to incriminate himself is purely a personal privilege of the witness. It was never intended to permit him to plead the fact that some third person might be incriminated by his testimony, even *though he [70] were the agent of such person. A privilege so extensive might be used to put a stop to the examination of every witness who was called upon to testify before the grand jury with regard to the doings or business of his principal, whether such principal were an individual or a corporation. The question whether a corporation is a "person" within the meaning of this amendment really does not arise, except, perhaps, where a corporation is called upon to answer a bill of discovery, since it can only be heard by oral evidence in the person of some one of its agents or employees. The amendment is limited to a person who shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself; and if he cannot set up the privilege of a third person, he certainly cannot set up the privilege of a corporation. As the combination or conspiracies provided against by the Sherman antitrust act can ordinarily be proved only by the testimony of parties thereto, in the person of their agents or employees, the privilege claimed would practically nullify the whole act of Congress. Of what use would it be for the legislature to declare these combinations unlawful if the judicial power may close the door of access to every available source of information upon the subject? Indeed, so strict is the rule that the privilege is a personal one that it has been held in some cases that counsel will not be allowed to make the objection. We hold that the questions should have been answered.

3. The second branch of the case relates to the nonproduction by the witness of the books and papers called for by the subpœna duces tecum. The witness put his refusal on the ground, first, that it was impossible for him to collect them within the time allowed; second, because he was advised by counsel that, under the circumstances, he was under no obligation to produce them; and finally, because they might tend to incriminate him.

Had the witness relied solely upon the first ground, doubtless the court would have given him the necessary time. The last ground we have already held untenable. While the second ground does not set forth [71] with technical accuracy the real reason *for declining to produce them, the witness could not be expected to speak with legal exactness, and we think is entitled to assert that the subpœna was an infringement upon the 4th Amendment to the Constitution, which declares that "the right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, paper, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no warrants shall issue but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized."

The construction of this amendment was exhaustively considered in the case of Boyd v. United States, 116 U. S. 616, 29 L. ed. 746, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 524, which was an information in rem against certain cases of plate glass, alleged to have been imported in fraud of the revenue acts. On the trial it became important to show the quantity and value of the glass contained in a number of cases previously imported; and the district judge, under § 5 of the act of June 22, 1874, [18 Stat. at L. 187, chap. 391, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 2018], directed a notice to be given to the claimants, requiring them to produce the invoice of these cases under penalty that the allegations respecting their contents should be taken as confessed. We held (page 622, L. ed. p. 748, Sup. Ct. Rep. p. 528) "that a compulsory production of a man's private papers to establish a criminal charge against him, or to forfeit his property, is within the scope of the 4th Amendment to the Constitution, in all cases in which a search and seizure would be," and that the order in question was an unreasonable search and seizure within that amendment.

The history of this provision of the Constitution and its connection with the former practice of general warrants, or writs of assistance, was given at great length, and the conclusion reached that the compulsory extortion of a man's own testimony, or of his private papers, to connect him with a crime of a forfeiture of his goods, is illegal (p. 634, L. ed. p. 752, Sup. Ct. Rep. p. 534), "is compelling a man to be a witness against himself, within the meaning of the 5th Amendment to the Constitution, and is the equivalent of a search and seizure—and an unreasonable search and seizure—within the meaning of the 4th Amendment.

*Subsequent cases treat the 4th and 5th [72] Amendments as quite distinct, having different histories, and performing separate functions. Thus, in the case of Interstate Commerce Commission v. Brimson, 154 U. S. 447, 38 L. ed. 1047, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 545, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1125, the constitutionality of the interstate commerce act, so far as it authorized the circuit courts to use their processes in aid of inquiries before the Commission, was sustained, the court observing in that connection:

"It was clearly competent for Congress, to that end, to invest the Commission with authority to require the attendance and testimony of witnesses, and the production of books, papers, tariffs, contracts, agreements, and documents relating to any matter legally committed to that body for investigation. We do not understand that any of these propositions are disputed in this case."

The case of Adams v. New York, 192 U. S. 585, 48 L. ed. 575, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 372, which was a writ of error to the supreme court of the state of New York, involving the seizure of certain gambling paraphernalia, was treated as involving the construction of the 4th and 5th Amendments to the Federal Constitution. It was held, in substance, that the fact that papers pertinent to the issue may have been illegally taken from the possession of the party against whom they are offered was not a valid objection to their admissibility; that the admission as evidence in a criminal trial of papers found in the execution of a valid search warrant prior to the indictment was not an infringement of the 5th Amendment, and that, by the introduction of such evidence, defendant was not compelled to incriminate himself. The substance of the opinion is contained in the following paragraph. It was contended that: "If a search warrant is issued for stolen property, and burglars' tools be discovered and seized, they are to be excluded from testimony by force of these amendments. We think they were never intended to have that effect, but are rather designed to protect against compulsory testimony from a defendant against himself in a criminal trial, and to punish wrongful invasion of the home of the citizen or the unwarranted seizure of his papers and [73]property, and to *render invalid legislation or judicial procedure having such effect."

The Boyd Case must also be read in connection with the still later case of Interstate Commerce Commission v. Baird, 194 U. S. 25, 48 L. ed. 860, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 563, which arose upon the petition of the Commission for orders requiring the testimony of witnesses and the production of certain books, papers, and documents. The case grew out of a complaint against certain railway companies that they charged unreasonable and unjust rates for the transportation of anthracite coal. Objection was made to the production of certain contracts between these companies upon the ground that it would compel the witnesses to furnish evidence against themselves in violation of the 5th Amendment, and would also subject the parties to unreasonable searches and seizures. It was held that the circuit court erred in holding the contracts to be irrelevant, and in refusing to order their production as evidence by the witnesses who were parties to the appeal. In delivering the opinion of the court the Boyd Case was again considered in connection with the 4th and 5th Amendments, and the remark made by Mr. Justice Day that the immunity statute of 1893 "protects the witness from such use of the testimony given as will result in his punishment for crime or the forfeiture of his estate."

Having already held that, by reason of the immunity act of 1903, the witness could not avail himself of the 5th Amendment it follows that he cannot set up that amendment as against the production of the books and papers, since, in respect to these, he would also be protected by the immunity act. We think it quite clear that the search and seizure clause of the 4th Amendment was not intended to interfere with the power of courts to compel, through a subpœna duces tecum, the production, upon a trial in court, of documentary evidence. As remarked in Summers v. Moseley, 2 Cromp. & M. 477, it would be "utterly impossible to carry on the administration of justice" without this writ. The following authorities are conclusive upon this question: Amey v. Long, 9 East, [74]473; Bull v. Loveland, 10 *Pick. 9; United States Exp. Co. v. Henderson, 69 Iowa, 40, 28 N. W. 426; Greenl. Ev. 469*a*.

If, whenever an officer or employee of a corporation were summoned before a grand jury as a witness he could refuse to produce the books and documents of such corporation, upon the ground that they would incriminate the corporation itself, it would result in the failure of a large number of cases where the illegal combination was determinable only upon the examination of such papers. Conceding that the witness was an officer of the corporation under investigation, and that he was entitled to assert the rights of the corporation with respect to the production of its books and papers, we are of the opinion that there is a clear distinction in this particular between an individual and a corporation, and that the latter has no right to refuse to submit its books and papers for an examination at the suit of the state. The individual may stand upon his constitutional rights as a citizen. He is entitled to carry on his private business in his own way. His power to contract is unlimited. He owes no duty to the state or to his neighbors to divulge his business, or to open his doors to an investigation, so far as it may tend to criminate him. He owes no such duty to the state, since he receives nothing therefrom, beyond the protection of his life and property. His rights are such as existed by the law of the land long antecedent to the organization of the state, and can only be taken from him by due process of law, and in accordance with the Constitution. Among his rights are a refusal to incriminate himself, and the immunity of himself and his property from arrest or seizure except under a warrant of the law. He owes nothing to the public so long as he does not trespass upon their rights.

Upon the other hand, the corporation is a creature of the state. It is presumed to be incorporated for the benefit of the public. It receives certain special privileges and franchises, and holds them subject to the laws of the state and the limitations of its charter. Its powers are limited by law. It can make no contract not authorized by its charter. Its rights to *act as a [75]corporation are only preserved to it so long as it obeys the laws of its creation. There is a reserved right in the legislature to investigate its contracts and find out whether it has exceeded its powers. It would be a strange anomaly to hold that a state, having chartered a corporation to make use of certain franchises, could not, in the exercise of its sovereignty, inquire how these franchises had been employed, and whether they had been abused, and demand the production of the corporate books and papers for that purpose. The defense amounts to this: That an officer of a corporation which is charged with a criminal violation of the statute, may plead the criminality of such corporation as a refusal to produce its books. To state this proposition is to answer it. While an individual may lawfully refuse to answer incriminating questions unless protected by an immunity statute, it does not follow that a corporation, vested with special privileges and franchises, may refuse to show its hand when charged with an abuse of such privileges.

It is true that the corporation in this case was chartered under the laws of New Jersey, and that it receives its franchise from the legislature of that state; but such franchises, so far as they involve questions of interstate commerce, must also be exercised in subordination to the power of Congress to regulate such commerce, and in respect to this the general government may also assert a sovereign authority to ascertain whether such franchises have been exercised in a lawful manner, with a due regard to its own laws. Being subject to this dual sovereignty, the general government possesses the same right to see that its own laws are respected as the state would have with respect to the special franchises vested in it by the laws of the state. The powers of the general government in this particular in the vindication of its own laws are the same as if the corporation had been created by an act of Congress. It is not intended to intimate, however, that it has a general visitatorial power over state corporations.

4. Although, for the reasons above stated, [76] we are of the *opinion that an officer of a corporation which is charged with a violation of a statute of the state of its creation, or of an act of Congress passed in the exercise of its constitutional powers, cannot refuse to produce the books and papers of such corporation, we do not wish to be understood as holding that a corporation is not entitled to immunity, under the 4th Amendment, against unreasonable searches and seizures. A corporation is, after all, but an association of individuals under an assumed name and with a distinct legal entity. In organizing itself as a collective body it waives no constitutional immunities appropriate to such body. Its property cannot be taken without compensation. It can only be proceeded against by due process of law, and is protected, under the 14th Amendment, against unlawful discrimination. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150, 154, 41 L. ed. 666, 667, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 255, and cases cited. Corporations are a necessary feature of modern business activity, and their aggregated capital has become the source of nearly all great enterprises.

We are also of opinion that an order for the production of books and papers may constitute an unreasonable search and seizure within the 4th Amendment. While a search ordinarily implies a quest by an officer of the law, and a seizure contemplates a forcible dispossession of the owner, still, as was held in the Boyd Case, the substance of the offense is the compulsory production of private papers, whether under a search warrant or a subpœna duces tecum, against which the person, be he individual or corporation, is entitled to protection. Applying the test of reasonableness to the present case, we think the subpœna duces tecum is far too sweeping in its terms to be regarded as reasonable. It does not require the production of a single contract, or of contracts with a particular corporation, or a limited number of documents, but all understandings, contracts, or correspondence between the MacAndrews & Forbes Company, and no less than six different companies, as well as all reports made and accounts rendered by such companies from the date of the organization of the MacAndrews & Forbes Company, *as well as all letters received by [77] that company since its organization from more than a dozen different companies, situated in seven different states in the Union.

If the writ had required the production of all the books, papers, and documents found in the office of the MacAndrews & Forbes Company, it would scarcely be more universal in its operation or more completely put a stop to the business of that company. Indeed, it is difficult to say how its business could be carried on after it had been denuded of this mass of material, which is not shown to be necessary in the prosecution of this case, and is clearly in violation of the general principle of law with regard to the particularity required in the description of documents necessary to a search warrant or subpœna. Doubtless many, if not all, of these documents may ultimately be required, but some necessity should be shown, either from an examination of the witnesses orally, or from the known transactions of these companies with the other companies implicated, or some evidence of their materiality produced, to justify an order for the production of such a mass of papers. A general subpœna of this description is equally indefensible as a search warrant would be if couched in similar terms. Ex parte Brown, 72 Mo. 83, 37 Am. Rep. 426; Shaftsbury v. Arrowsmith, 4 Ves. Jr. 66; Lee v. Angas, L. R. 2 Eq. 59.

Of course, in view of the power of Congress over interstate commerce, to which we have adverted, we do not wish to be understood as holding that an examination of the books of a corporation, if duly authorized by act of Congress, would constitute an unreasonable search and seizure within the 4th Amendment.

But this objection to the subpœna does not go to the validity of the order remanding the petitioner, which is, therefore, affirmed.

Mr. Justice Harlan, concurring:

I concur entirely in what is said in the [78]opinion of the court *in reference to the powers and functions of the grand jury and as to the scope of the 5th Amendment of the Constitution: I concur also in the affirmance of the judgment; but must withhold my assent to some of the views expressed in the opinion. It seems to me that the witness was not entitled to assert, as a reason for not obeying the order of the court, that the subpœna duces tecum was an infringement of the 4th Amendment, which declares that "the right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, paper, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no warrants shall issue but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized." It may be, I am inclined to think, as a matter of procedure and practice, that the subpœna duces tecum was too broad and indefinite. But the action of the court in that regard was, at the utmost, only error, and that error did not affect its jurisdiction to make the order, nor authorize the witness — whose personal rights, let it be observed, were in nowise involved in the pending inquiry—to refuse compliance with the subpœna, upon the ground that it involved an unreasonable search and seizure of the books, papers, and records of the corporation whose conduct, so far as it related to the Sherman antitrust act, was the subject of the examination. It was not his privilege to stand between the corporation and the government in the investigation before the grand jury. In my opinion, a corporation—"an artificial being, invisible, intangible, and existing only in contemplation of law"—cannot claim the immunity given by the 4th Amendment; for it is not a part of the "people," within the meaning of that Amendment. Nor is it embraced by the word "persons" in the Amendment. If a contrary view obtains, the power of the government, by its representatives, to look into the books, records, and papers of a corporation, of its own creation, to ascertain whether that corporation has obeyed or is defying the law, will be greatly curtailed, if not destroyed. If a corporation, when its affairs are under examination by a grand jury *proceeding in its work under the orders[79] of the court, can plead the immunity given by the 4th Amendment against unreasonable searches and seizures, may it not equally rely upon that Amendment to protect it even against a statute authorizing or directing the examination by the agents of the government creating it, of its papers, documents, and records, unless they specify the particular papers, documents, and records to be examined? If the order of the court below is to be deemed invalid as an unreasonable search and seizure of the papers, books, deemed valid if made under the express auand records of the corporation, could it be thority of an act of Congress? Congress could not, any more than a court, authorize an unreasonable seizure or search in violation of the 4th Amendment. In my judgment when a grand jury, seeking, in the discharge of its public duties, to ascertain whether a corporation has violated the law in any particular, requires the production of the books, papers, and records of such corporation, no officer of that corporation can rightfully refuse, when ordered to do so by the court, to produce such books, papers, and records in his official custody, upon the ground simply that the order was, as to the corporation, an unreasonable search and seizure within the meaning of the 4th Amendment.

Mr. Justice McKenna, concurring:

I concur in the judgment, but not in all the propositions declared by the court. I think the subpœna is sufficiently definite. The charge pending was a violation of the antitrust act of 1890. [26 Stat. at L. 209, chap. 647, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3200.] The documents and papers sought were the understandings and agreements of the accused companies. That the documents commanded were many or evidenced transactions occurring through a period of time are not circumstances fatal to the validity of the subpœna. If there was a violation of the antitrust act, that is, combinations in restraint of trade, it would be probably evidenced by formal agreements, but it might also be evidenced or its transactions alluded to in telegrams *and letters sent during the[80] time the combination operated. Each telegram, each letter, would contribute proof, and therefore material testimony. Why, then, should they not be produced? What answer is given? It is said the subpœna is tantamount to requiring all the books, papers, and documents found in the office of the MacAndrews & Forbes Company, and an embarrassment is conjectured as a result to its business. These, then, I assume, are the detrimental consequences that will be produced by obedience to the subpœna. If such consequences could be granted, they are not fatal to the subpœna. But they may be denied. There can be, at most, but a temporary use of the books, and this can be accommodated to the convenience of parties. It is matter for the court, and we cannot assume that the court will fail of consideration for the interest of parties, or subject them to more inconvenience than the demands of justice may require.

I cannot think that the consequences mentioned are important or necessary to the argument. A more serious matter is the application of the 4th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States.

It is said "a search implies a quest by an officer of the law; a seizure contemplates a forcible dispossession of the owner." Nothing can be more direct and plain; nothing more expressive to distinguish a subpœna from a search warrant. Can a subpœna lose this essential distinction from a search warrant by the generality or speciality of its terms? I think not. The distinction is based upon what is authorized or directed to be done,—not upon the form of words by which the authority or command is given. "The quest of an officer" acts upon the things themselves,—may be secret, intrusive, accompanied by force. The service of a subpœna is but the delivery of a paper to a party,—is open and aboveboard. There is no element of trespass or force in it. It does not disturb the possession of property. It cannot be finally enforced except after challenge, and a judgment of the court upon the challenge. This is a safeguard against abuse the same as it is of other processes of [81] the *law; and it is all that can be allowed without serious embarrassment to the administration of justice. Of course, it constrains the will of parties, subjects their property to the uses of proof. But we are surely not prepared to say that such uses are unreasonable, or are sacrifices which the law may not demand.

However, I may apprehend consequences that the opinion does not intend. It seems to be admitted that many, if not all, of the documents may ultimately be required, but it is said, "some necessity should be shown, either from an examination of the witnesses orally, or from the known transactions of these companies with the other companies implicated, or some evidence of their materiality produced, to justify an order for the production." This intimates a different objection to the order of the court than the generality of the subpœna, and, if good at all, would be good even though few instead of many documents had been required or described ever so specifically. I am constrained to dissent from it. The materiality of his testimony is not open to a witness to determine, and the order of proof is for the court. Besides, if a grand jury may investigate without specific charge, may investigate upon the suggestion of one of its members, must it demonstrate the materiality of every piece of testimony it calls for before it can require the testimony? So limit the power of a grand jury and you may make it impotent in cases where it needs power most and in which its function can best be exercised.

But what does the record show? It shows that Hale refused to give the testimony that, this court says, should have preceded the order under review. He refused to answer what the business of the MacAndrew & Forbes Company was, or where its office was, or whether there was an agreement with the company and the American Tobacco Company in regard to the products of their respective businesses, or whether the company he represented sold its products throughout the United States. The ground of refusal was that there was no legal warrant or authority for his examination,—not that the documents or testimony *was not material, or not shown to be material. Besides, after objection made to the laying of a foundation, complaint cannot be made that no foundation was laid. And it seems to be an afterthought in the proceedings on habeas corpus that the ground objection to examination did not exclusively refer to the want of power in the grand jury.

By virtue of its dominion over interstate commerce Congress has power, the opinion of the court asserts, over corporations engaged in that commerce. And the power is the same as if the corporations had been created by Congress. And yet it is said to be a power subject to the limitation of the 4th Amendment. To this I am not prepared to assent. I have already pointed out the essential distinction between a subpœna duces tecum and a search warrant, and, it may be, the case at bar demands from me no expression of opinion of the 4th Amendment. And I am mindful, too, of the reservation in the opinion of the court of the power of Congress to require by direct legislation the fullest disclosures of their affairs from corporations engaged in interstate commerce. While recognizing this may be true, and, that until such power is exercised, there may be reasons for holding that corporations are entitled to the protection of the 4th Amendment, there are reasons against the contention, and I wish to guard against any action which would preclude against their consideration in cases where the 4th Amendment may be a more determining factor than it is in the case at bar. There are certainly strong reasons for the contention that, if corporations cannot plead the immunity of the 5th Amendment, they cannot plead the immunity of the 4th Amendment. The protection of both amendments, it can be contended, is against the compulsory production of evidence to be used in criminal trials. Such warrants are used in aid of public prosecutions (Cooley, Const. Lim., 6th ed. 364), and in Boyd v. United States, 116 U. S. 616, 29 L. ed. 746, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 524, a relation between the 4th Amendment and the 5th Amendment was declared. It was said the amendments throw great light on each other, "for the 'unreasonable [83] searches and seizures' condemned *in the 4th Amendment are almost always made for the purpose of compelling a man to give evidence against himself, which, in criminal cases, is condemned in the 5th Amendment; and compelling a man 'in a criminal case to be a witness against himself,' which is condemned in the 5th Amendment, throws light on the question as to what is an 'unreasonable search and seizure' within the meaning of the 4th Amendment. And we have been unable to perceive that the seizure of a man's private books and papers, to be used in evidence against him, is substantially different from compelling him to be a witness against himself." Boyd v. United States is still recognized, and if its reasoning remains unimpaired, and the purpose and effect of the 4th Amendment receives illumination from the 5th, or, to express the idea differently, if the amendments are the complements of each other, directed against the different ways by which a man's immunity from giving evidence against himself may be violated, it would seem a strong, if not an inevitable, conclusion, that, if corporations have not such immunity, they can no more claim the protection of the 4th Amendment than they can of the 5th.

Mr. Justice Brewer, dissenting:

With what is said in the opinion of the court of the necessity of a "charge," with the proposition that the immunity granted by the Federal statute is sufficient protection against both the nation and the several states, with the holding that the protection accorded by the 5th Amendment to the Constitution is personal to the individual, and does not extend to an agent of an individual, or justify such agent in refusing to give testimony incriminating his principal, and also that the subpœna duces tecum cannot be sustained, I fully agree.

Further, I desire to emphasize certain truths which in this and other cases decided to-day seem to be ignored or depreciated. The immunities and protection of articles 4, [84] 5, and 14 *of the Amendments of the Federal Constitution are available to a corporation so far as, in the nature of things, they are applicable. Its property may not be taken for public use without just compensation. It cannot be subjected to unreasonable searches and seizures. It cannot be deprived of life or property without due process of law.

It may be well to compare the words of description in articles 4 and 5 with those in article 14:

"Article 4. The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, paper, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no warrants shall issue but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized.

"Article 5. No person . . . shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself, nor to be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; nor shall private property be taken for public use, without just compensation."

"Article 14. Nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws."

In Santa Clara County v. Southern P. R. Co. 118 U. S. 394, 396, 30 L. ed. 118, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1132, Mr. Chief Justice Waite said:

"The court does not wish to hear argument on the question whether the provision in the 14th Amendment to the Constitution, which forbids a state to deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws, applies to these corporations. We are all of opinion that it does."

These decisions were under the 14th Amendment; but if the word "person" in that amendment includes corporations, it also includes corporations when used in the 4th and 5th Amendments.

By the 4th Amendment the "people" are guaranteed protection against unreasonable searches and seizures. "Citizens," is a descriptive word; no broader, to say the least, than "people."

As repeatedly held, a corporation is a citizen of a state for purposes of jurisdiction of Federal courts, and, as a citizen, it may locate mining claims under the laws of the United States (McKinley v. Wheeler, 130 U. S. 630, 32 L. ed. 1048, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 638) and is entitled to the benefit of the Indian depredation acts (United States v. Northwestern Express Stage, & Transp. Co. 164 U. S. 686, 41 L. ed. 599, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 206). Indeed, it is essentially but an association of individuals, to which is given certain rights and privileges, and in which is vested the legal title. The beneficial ownership is in the individuals, the corporation being simply an instrumentality by which the powers granted to these associated individuals may be exercised. As said by Chief Justice Marshall in Providence Bank v. Billings, 4 Pet. 514, 562, 7 L. ed. 939, 956: "The great object of an incorporation is to bestow the character and properties of individuality on a collective and changing body of men."

United States v. Amedy, 11 Wheat. 392, 6 L. ed. 502, was the case of an indictment under an act of Congress for destroying a vessel with intent to prejudice the underwriters. The act of Congress declared that "if any person shall . . . wilfully and corruptly cast away . . . any ship or vessel . . . with intent or design to prejudice any person or persons that hath underwritten or shall underwrite any policy," etc. [2 Stat. at L. 290, chap. 40, § 2, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3641.] The indictment charged an intent to defraud an incorporated insurance company, and the court held that a corporation is a person within the meaning of the act, saying (p. 412, L. ed. p. 507):

"The mischief intended to be reached by [86] the statute is the *same, whether it respects private or corporate persons. That corporations are, in law, for civil purposes, deemed persons, is unquestionable. And the citation from 2 Inst. 736, establishes that they are so deemed within the purview of penal statutes. Lord Coke, there, in commenting on the statute of 31 Eliz. chap. 7, respecting the erection of cottages, where the word used is, 'no person shall,' etc., says: 'This extends as well to persons politic and incorporate, as to natural persons whatsoever.'"

Neither does the fact that a corporation is engaged in the interstate commerce in any manner abridge the protection and applicable immunities accorded by the amendments. The corporation of which the petitioner was an officer was chartered by a state, and over it the general government has no more control than over an individual citizen of that state. Its power to regulate commerce does not carry with it a right to dispense with the 4th and 5th Amendments, to unreasonably search or seize the papers of an individual or corporation engaged in such commerce, or deprive him or it of any immunity or protection secured by either amendment.

It is true that there is a power of supervision and inspection of the inside workings of a corporation, but that belongs to the creator of the corporation. If a state has chartered it, the power is lodged in the state. If the nation, then in the nation; and it cannot be exercised by any other authority. It is in the nature of the power of visitation.

In Angell & Ames on Corporations, 9th ed., chap. 19, §§ 684, 685, the authors say:

"To render the charters or constitutions, ordinances and by-laws of corporations of perfect obligation, and generally to maintain their peace and good government, these bodies are subject to visitation; or, in other words, to the inspection and control of tribunals recognized by the laws of the land. Civil corporations are visited by the government itself, through the medium of the courts of justice; but the internal affairs of ecclesiastical and eleemosynary corporations are, in general, inspected and controlled by a private visitor. . . .

*"In this country, where there is no in-[87] dividual founder or donor, the legislature are the visitors of all corporations founded by them for public purposes, and may direct judicial proceedings against them for abuse or neglects which, at common law, would cause a forfeiture of their charters."

The matter is discussed in Blackstone's Commentaries, in par. 3, chap. 18, bk. 1, and he says:

"I proceed, therefore, next to inquire, how these corporations may be visited. For corporations being composed of individuals, subject to human frailties, are liable, as well as private persons, to deviate from the end of their institution. And for that reason the law has provided proper persons to visit, inquire into, and correct all irregularities that arise in such corporations, either sole or aggregate and whether ecclesiastical, civil, or eleemosynary."

And in respect to civil corporations he adds, same paragraph and chapter (*782):

"The law having by immemorial usage appointed them to be visited and inspected by the King, their founder, in His Majesty's Court of King's Bench, according to the rules of the common law, they ought not to be visited elsewhere, or by any other authority."

In 2 Kent, Com. *300, the author says: "The visitation of civil corporations is by the government itself, through the medium of the courts of justice."

In Amherst Academy v. Cowls, 6 Pick. 427, 433, 17 Am. Dec. 387, it was held that:

"Without doubt the legislature are the visitors of all corporations founded by them for public purposes, where there is no individual founder or donor, and may direct judicial process against them for abuses or neglects which by common law would cause a forfeiture of their charters."

The right of visitation is for the purpose of control and to see that the corporation keeps within the limits of its powers. It would be strange if a corporation doing business in a dozen states was subject to the [88] visitation of each of those states, and *compelled to regulate its actions according to the judgments—perhaps the conflicting judgments—of the several legislatures. The fact that a state corporation may engage in business which is within the general regulating power of the national government does not give to Congress any right of visitation or of any power to dispense with the immunities and protection of the 4th and 5th Amendments. The national government has jurisdiction over crimes committed within its special territorial limits. Can it dispense in such cases with these immunities and protections? No more can it do so in respect to the acts and conduct of individuals coming within its regulating power. It has the same control over commerce with foreign nations as over that between the states. Boyd v. United States, 116 U. S. 616, 29 L. ed. 746, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 524, arose under the revenue acts, and the applicability of the 4th and 5th Amendments was sustained. In that case is an elaborate opinion by Mr. Justice Bradley, speaking for the court, in which the origin of the 4th and 5th Amendments is discussed, their relationship to each other shown, and the necessity of a constant adherence to the underlying thought of protection expressed in them strenuously insisted upon. I quote his words (p. 635, L. ed. p. 752, Sup. Ct. Rep. p. 535):

"It may be that it [the proceeding in question] is the obnoxious thing in its mildest and least repulsive form; but illegitimate and unconstitutional practices get their first footing in that way; namely, by silent approaches and slight deviations from legal modes of procedure. This can only be obviated by adhering to the rule that constitutional provisions for the security of person and property should be liberally construed. A close and literal construction deprives them of half their efficacy, and leads to gradual depreciation of the right, as if it consisted more in sound than in substance. It is the duty of courts to be watchful for the constitutional rights of the citizens, and against any stealthy encroachments thereon. Their motto should be obsta principiis."

Finally, as the subpœna duces tecum was the initiatory step in the proceedings before the grand jury against this petitioner, *as [89] that is the major fact in those proceedings, and as it is agreed that it is not sustainable, it seems to me that the order adjudicating him in contempt should be set aside, and this notwithstanding that subsequently he improperly refused to answer certain questions.

The case is not parallel to that of an indictment in two counts upon which a general judgment is entered, and one of which counts is held good and the other bad, for a writ of habeas corpus is not a writ of error, and the order to be entered thereon is for a discharge or a remand to custody. If a discharge is ordered, no punishment can be inflicted under the judgment as rendered; and if a new prosecution is instituted containing the good count, a plea of former conviction will be a full defense. But in the case at bar an order for a discharge will have no such result. The habeas corpus statute (Rev. Stat. § 761, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 594) provides that "the court or justice or judge shall proceed in a summary way . . . to dispose of the party as law and justice require." Justice requires that he should not be subjected to the costs of this habeas corpus proceeding, or be punished for contempt, when he was fully justified in disregarding the principal demand made upon him.

The order of the circuit court should be reversed and the case remanded with instructions to discharge the petitioner, leaving to the grand jury the right to initiate new proceedings not subject to the objections to this.

I am authorized to say that the CHIEF JUSTICE concurs in these views.

witness, and he cannot claim the privilege of another person or of the corporation of which he is an officer or employee.

Argued January 4, 5, 1906. Decided March 12, 1906.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York to review an order discharging a writ of habeas corpus to inquire into a commitment for a contempt in refusing to testify before the grand jury and produce the papers and documents called for in a subpœna duces tecum, and remanding the petitioner to the custody of the marshal. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. De Lancey Nicoll argued the cause, and, with Messrs. Junius Parker and John D. Lindsay, filed a brief for appellant.

For their contentions see their brief as as reported in Hale v. Henkel, ante, 652.

Mr. Henry W. Taft argued the cause, and, with Mr. Felix H. Levy and Attorney General Moody, filed a brief for appellee:

Where the question of criminality is not involved, it is clearly settled that an officer of a corporation, having the books of the company in his custody, is bound to produce them in obedience to a subpœna duces tecum.

Wertheim v. Continental R. & Trust Co. 21 Blatchf. 246, 15 Fed. 718.

In determining whether the word "person" in a statute includes a corporation, Mr. Justice Story said that the mischief intended to be reached was to be considered (United States v. Amedy, 11 Wheat. 412, 6 L. ed. 507); and in Beaston v. Farmers' Bank, 12 Pet. 134, 9 L. ed. 1029, it is said that corporations are only to be considered as "persons" when the circumstances in which they are placed are identical with those of natural persons expressly included in such statutes.

All authorities agree that the privilege is personal, and is based upon the consideration of the law for the individual in his capacity as a witness.

Brown v. Walker, 161 U. S. 596, 40 L. ed. 820, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 369, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 644; Best, Ev. 9th ed. p. 113; 3 Taylor, Ev. § 1453; 1 Greenl. Ev. 16th ed. § 469*d*; Com. v. Shaw, 4 Cush. 594, 50 Am. Dec. 813; Phillipps, Ev. 4th Am. ed. p. 935; Starkie, Ev. 10th Am. ed. 4; Wigmore, Ev. § 2263, p. 3123; State v. Wentworth, 65 Me. 234, 20 Am. Rep. 688; Ex parte Reynolds, 15 Cox, C. C. 108; Bartlett v. Lewis, 12 C. B. N. S. 249.

Every consideration that arises from conditions of modern civilization requires that the rule should not be extended further than is necessary to accomplish its original purpose of caring for the personal rights of individuals.

Wigmore, Ev. pp. 3101, 3107.

Courts have refused to permit the privilege to be asserted by an officer or employee in behalf of a corporation of which he is the representative.

New York L. Ins. Co. v. People, 195 Ill. 430, 63 N. E. 264; Wigmore, Ev. § 2259, p. 3115; Re Moser (Mich.) 11 Det. L. N. 593, 101 N. W. 591; Re Peasley, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 333, 44 Fed. 271; United States Exp. Co. v. Henderson, 69 Iowa, 40, 28 N. W. 426; Gibbons v. Waterloo Bridge, 5 Price, 491.

An officer asserting the privilege against incrimination in behalf of a corporation in fact asserts it for the benefit of other persons; and this the law will not permit.

Wigmore, Ev. § 2259; Elliott, Ev. § 1007.

Mr. Justice Brown delivered the opinion of the court:

This case involves many of the questions already passed upon in the opinion in Hale v. Henkel, 201 U. S. 43, ante, 652, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 370, differing from that case, however, in two important particulars: First, in the fact that there was a complaint and charge made on behalf of the United States against the American Tobacco Company and the Imperial Tobacco Company under the so-called Sherman act, and second, that the subpœna pointed out the particular writings sought for (three agreements), giving in each case the date, the names of *the parties, and, in one in- [91] stance, a suggestion of the contents.

The witness McAlister, who was secretary and a director of the American Tobacco Company, refused to answer or produce the documents for practically the same reasons assigned by the appellant Hale; demanding to be advised what the suit or proceeding was and to be furnished with a copy of the proposed indictment. A copy of one of the agreements with three English companies and certified by the Consul General of the United States is contained in the record.

For reasons already partly set forth, we think that the immunity provided by the 5th Amendment against self-incrimination is personal to the witness himself, and that he cannot set up the privilege of another person or of a corporation as an excuse for a refusal to answer; in other words, the privilege is that of the witness himself, and not that of the party on trial. The authorities are practically uniform on this point. Com. v. Shaw, 4 Cush. 594, 50 Am. Dec. 813; State v. Wentworth, 65 Me. 234, 241, 20 Am. Rep. 688; Ex parte Reynolds, 15 Cox, C. C. 108, 115. In New York L. Ins. Co. v. People, 195 Ill. 430, 63 N. E. 264, the privilege was claimed by a corporation, but the agent of an insurance company was permitted to testify in a suit for the recovery of a statutory penalty to facts showing the performance by the corporation of the act prohibited. Indeed, the authorities are numerous to the effect that an officer of a corporation cannot set up the privilege of a corporation as against his testimony or the production of their books.

The questions are the same as those involved in the Hale Case, without the objectionable feature of the subpœna, and the order of the Circuit Court is, therefore, affirmed.

1. Evidence — materiality. — Evidence, whether documentary or oral, sought to be elicited from witnesses summoned in an action brought by the United States to enjoin an alleged conspiracy by manufacturers of paper to suppress competition, in violation of the act of July 2, 1890 (26 Stat. at L. 209, chap. 647, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3200), by creating a general selling and distributing agent, is material, where it would tend to establish the manner in which such agent executed its functions.

2. Contempt—refusal to testify before special examiner—immateriality of evidence no defense.—The immateriality of the evidence sought to be elicited cannot justify the refusal of witnesses to obey the orders of the Federal circuit court, requiring them to answer the questions put to them, and to produce written evidence in their possession, on their examination before a special examiner.

3. Appeal—in contempt proceedings—questions reviewable.—Objections to the materiality of the testimony are not open to consideration on a writ of error sued out by witnesses to review a judgment for contempt, entered against them for disobeying an order to testify.

4. Contempt—refusal to produce documentary evidence — possession and control.—The refusal of corporate officers to obey orders of a Federal circuit court, requiring them to produce certain documentary evidence, on their examination before a special examiner, cannot be justified on the theory that such evidence was not in their possession or under their control, because their possession was not personal, but was that of the corporations.

5. Witnesses—self-incrimination—sufficiency of statutory immunity.—The right of a witness to claim his privilege against self-incrimination, afforded by U. S. Const., 5th Amend., when examined concerning an alleged violation of the antitrust act of July 2, 1890 (26 Stat. at L. 209, chap. 647, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3200), is taken away by the proviso to the act of February 25, 1903 (32 Stat. at L. 904, chap. 755, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1905, p. 602), that no person shall be prosecuted or be subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he may testify or produce evidence in any proceeding, suit, or prosecution under certain named statutes, of which the antitrust act is one, which furnishes a sufficient immunity from prosecution to satisfy the constitutional guaranty, although it may not afford immunity from prosecution in the state courts for the offense disclosed.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Minnesota to review judgments for contempt, entered against witnesses for their refusal to obey orders of that court requiring them to answer the questions put to them, and to produce written evidence in their possession, on their examination before a special examiner. Affirmed.

Statement by Mr. Justice McKenna:

These writs of error submit for review a judgment in contempt entered in the case of the United States v. General Paper Co. described in No. 381 et seq. [See 201 U. S. 117, post, 686, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 356.] The judgment was based upon the disobedience by the plaintiffs in error to orders of the court requiring them to answer certain *questions and to produce certain books, [93] documents, and papers in their examination before the special examiner, in pursuance to a subpœna duces tecum duly issued and served. The orders requiring the plaintiffs in error to answer were made upon petition of the United States, which exhibited the issues in the suit of United States v. General Paper Co., stated the questions asked plaintiffs in error, and the books, documents, and papers required of them.

Plaintiffs in error refused to obey the orders, and the examiner reported their disobedience to the court "for such action as the court might take for the further enforcement of its orders." In defense plaintiffs in error filed separate answers, which respectively alleged that Nelson was the president and manager of the Hennepin Paper Company; Bossard, manager and treasurer of the Itasca Company, and McNair, a director and general manager of the Northwest Paper Company. In other particulars the answers are identical except so far as the relations of plaintiffs in error to their respective corporations made a difference. Plaintiffs in error are also directors of the General Paper Company. We insert the answer of Nelson in the margin.†

[94] *The court required the questions to be answered and the books and documents to be produced, and, being of opinion that the order did not constitute a final decision, refused to allow an appeal on the part of either of the plaintiffs in error or either of *the defendants in the suit, or on the part [95] of all of them jointly.

Plaintiffs in error refused to obey the order of the court, and upon the report of the examiner the judgment under review was *entered fining plaintiffs in error sev- [96] erally $100 "for their said disobedience of the said order, said fines to be paid to the clerk of this court for the use of the United States, as punishment for such contempt," and sentencing them to be imprisoned until *the order of the court requiring them to [97] testify should be complied with.

The questions on the merits in these cases are the same as those on the merits in 381 et seq., just *decided [Alexander v. United States, 201 U. S. 117, post, 686, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 356]. In those cases, however, [98] this court had no jurisdiction and the appeals were dismissed. In the present cases we have jurisdiction (Bessette v. W. B. Conkey Co. 194 U. S. 324, 48 L. ed. 997, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 665), and directly from the circuit court, as questions under the Constitution of the United States are involved.

†Now comes Benjamin F. Nelson and, answering the order to show cause made in the above-entitled matter on the 15th day of September, A. D. 1905, and the petition heretofore filed in said matter by said complainant, upon which said order to show cause was made, alleges and shows unto the court as follows:

That this respondent is a director and the president of Hennepin Paper Company, one of the defendants in the above-entitled matter, and is also the owner and holder of stock in said company of the par value of forty-nine thousand ($49,000.00) dollars and that the books and papers referred to in said order to show cause and in the petition and schedules thereto attached, upon which said order to show cause was made, are the books and papers of said Hennepen Paper Company, and not of this respondent, and are subject to the control of said Hennepin Paper Company, and not of this respondent; that this respondent is also a director of General Paper Company, another of the defendants in the above-entitled matter, and the owner and holder of stock in said General Paper Company of the par value of $2,250; that said Hennepin Paper Company and said General Paper Company have objected and do object, and this respondent has objected and does object, to the production of said books and papers for inspection by counsel for said complainant for the purpose of being offered in evidence in said cause. Said objections are based upon the following reasons:

1. That the materiality of said books and papers in the case mentioned in said order to show cause now pending in said court has not been established so as to authorize a court of equity to order their inspection, production, and introduction in evidence, and that the same are not material, relevant, or competent evidence in said cause; that said books and papers contain matters of importance relating to the business of said Hennepin Paper Company and said General Paper Company in no way bearing upon or touching the issues in said cause, which it would be highly injurious to the business interests of both of said companies to make public, and this respondent submits that he ought not to be required to disclose any portions of said books or papers except on a proper showing that the same are material to said cause to establish some issue therein, and a showing that the same are not privileged for the protection of the defendants above named.

2. That one of the purposes of said complainant in instituting said cause and in making the requests mentioned in said order to show cause for the inspection, production, and introduction as evidence of said books and papers, is to establish and to compel said Hennepin Paper Company and said General Paper Company, and this respondent as such director or officer of each of said defendants, to furnish to said complainant evidence tending to establish that said Hennepin Paper Company and said General Paper Company have been guilty of certain violations of the act of Congress entitled "An Act to Protect Trade and Commerce against Unlawful Restraints and Monopolies," approved July 2, 1890 [26 Stat. at L. 209, chap. 647, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3200], and the acts amendatory thereof or supplemental thereto, and to subject said Hennepin Paper Company and said General Paper Company to the penalties for such violations imposed by said act, and that to compel the production by said Hennepin Paper Company or said General Paper Company, through their officers or otherwise, of said books and papers for inspection and introduction as evidence in said cause, would be contrary to the provisions of the 5th Amendment brought in the circuit court of the United States for the district of Minnesota it is respectively alleged and denied that the defendant corporations, of which plaintiffs in error are officers, had entered into an agreement, combination, and conspiracy to control, regulate, and monopolize not only the manufacture of news prints and other papers, but the distribution and shipment thereof through the middle, southern, and western states, in violation of the antitrust act of July 2, 1890. [26 Stat. at L. 209, chap. 647, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901. p. 3200.] The United States sought to establish by plaintiffs in error the truth of the charge, and the subpœna served upon them was explicit as to what was required of them.

The subpœnas required plaintiffs in error to produce the account books, including the journals, ledgers, and other books kept by or under the control of the companies respectively, of which plaintiff in error were respectively officers, (a) showing the amounts, kinds, and grades of paper manufactured by the respective companies and sold by or through the General Paper Company, and which were shipped since the 5th of July, 1900; (b) the prices, amounts, or credits received for such paper from the paper company between the 5th of July and the present time, including entries showing the manner in which the prices and amounts received by the respective companies for any and all *of its products so sold have been [100] equalized with the prices and amounts received or realized of any and all of the other defendant companies for which the paper company is or has been the exclusive agent; (c) the amounts and proportions of earnings or profits of the paper company, received by the respective companies from and through the paper company, either in the form of rebates, credits, or otherwise.

Second. All contracts, agreements, writings, and account books, including journals, ledgers, and other books, kept by or under the control of the respective companies, showing the agreement, arrangement, or understanding under and pursuant to each, and the manner in which the prices and amounts realized by the respective companies upon the various kinds and grades of paper manufactured by it and sold by and through the paper company, are and have been, since July 5, 1900, equalized, or the profits arising from the sale of such paper distributed or apportioned, as between the respective companies and other defendants to the Constitution of the United States, which provides that no person shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself, and also contrary to the provisions of the 4th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which provides that the right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures shall not be violated.

3. That the alleged acts of said Hennepin Paper Company complained of by said complainant in its said original petition or bill of complaint in said cause, and which said complainant is endeavoring to establish in said cause, would, if committed by said Henuepin Paper Company, be violations of the laws of the state of Minnesota, and would subject said Hennepin Paper Company to forfeiture of its charter and other penalties under said laws; that to compel said Hennepin Paper Company, through this respondent as one of its officers or otherwise, to produce said books and papers for inspection and introduction as evidence in said cause would be to compel it to furnish evidence tending to establish that it has been guilty of such acts, and subject it to the forfeiture of its charter and other penalties aforesaid, contrary to the provisions hereinbefore mentioned of the 4th and 5th Amendments to the Constitution of the United States.

4. That in addition to the matters above set forth, the purpose of the complainant in instituting said cause and in making the requests mentioned in said order to show cause is to obtain from said court a decree enjoining said General Paper Company from carrying on the business for which it was incorporated, and to enjoin the carrying out of, and operation under, certain agency contracts and agreements existing between it and said Hennepin Paper Company, on the alleged ground that said contracts and agreements were made and are in violation of the provisions of said act of Congress; that said contracts and agreements are of great value, not only to said General Paper Company, whose entire business practically rests upon them, but are also of great value to, and constitute valuable property rights in, each of the defendants respectively parties thereto, including the said Hennepin Paper Company, and that such injunction from carrying out said contracts and agreements, and their virtual annulment thereby occasioned, would result in great injury, damage, or loss, not only to said General Paper Company, but also to said Hennepin Paper Company and to this respondent as a stockholder in each of said companies; and that to compel the production by said Hennepin Paper Company or said General Paper Company, or either of them, though this respondent as such director or officer or otherwise, of said books and papers for inspection and introduction as evidence in said cause for the purpose aforesaid, would be contrary not only to the provisions of said 4th and 5th Amendments to the Constitution of the United States, but also contrary to the well-established rule of the common law, as well as of equity jurisprudence, that no person will be compelled to discover any fact, either by producing documents or answering questions, which may subject him, either directly or eventually, to prosecution for a crime, or to a forfeiture or penalty, or anything in the nature of a forfeiture or penalty.

Further answering, this respondent alleges and shows unto this court that all the matters concerning which the questions referred to in said petition and schedules thereto annexed were asked, and which this respondent refused to answer, as stated in said petition, manufacturing and selling through the paper company similar kinds or grades of paper or among all of the defendants manufacturing similar kinds or grades of paper, and then and there to testify and the truth to say, in a certain matter in controversy in said court, between the United States as complainant against the General Paper Company, et al., defendants, on the part of the complainant.

There is no uncertainty, therefore, either in the issue or the means of proof. In other words, the United States charges a conspiracy upon the part of the defendant corporations for the cessation of competition between the manufacturing defendants by creating a general selling and distributing agent, the General Paper Company, which restricts the output of the mills, fixes the prices of their products, determines to whom, and the terms and conditions upon which, such products shall be sold, into what states and places they shall be shipped, and what publishers and customers each mill shall supply. The means of proof of the charge are obviously the conditions of the companies before and after the formation of the paper company, *its organization and [101] the purpose of its organization, the means of its operation, how and by what means it equalizes the output and price of products, and the distribution of the proceeds of their sale, and the relations and accounts between it and the other defendant companies, and their books, accounts, and minutes of proceedings.

came to this respondent's knowledge exclusively as president and a director of said Hennepin Paper Company, or as a director of said General Paper Company, in the conduct of matters intrusted to him as such director or president, and which said companies, from the nature of the case, were compelled to intrust to this respondent as such director or officer, and that said Hennepin Paper Company and said General Paper Company have objected and do object, and this respondent has objected and does object, to said questions and to his being required to answer the same, for reasons similar to those already set forth in respect to the production, inspection, and introduction in evidence of the books and papers above mentioned, that is to say:

1. That the materiality of said questions in the cause above mentioned has not been established so as to authorize a court of equity to order them to be answered, and that the same are not material, relevant, or competent evidence in said cause.

2. That the purpose of said complainant in instituting said cause and in asking said questions is to establish and to compel said Hennepin Paper Company and said General Paper Company, through this respondent as such director or officer, to furnish to said complainant evidence tending to establish that said Hennepin Paper Company and said General Paper Company have been guilty of certain violations of the acts of Congress above referred to, and to subject them to the penalties for such violations imposed by said acts, and that to compel said defendants hereinbefore named, or either of them, through this respondent, to answer said questions, would be contrary to the provisions hereinbefore referred to of said 4th and 5th Amendments to the Constitution of the United States.

3. That the alleged acts of said Hennepin Paper Company complained of by said complainant in its original petition or bill of complaint in said cause, and which said complainant is endeavoring to establish in said cause, would, if committed by it, be violations of the laws of the state of Minnesota, and would subject it to forfeiture of its charter and other penalties under said laws; that to compel it through this respondent to answer the questions aforesaid would be to compel it to furnish evidence tending to establish that it has been guilty of such acts, and subject it to the forfeiture of its charter and other penalties aforesaid, contrary to the provisions hereinbefore referred to of said 4th and 5th Amendments to the Constitution of the United States.

4. That in addition to the matters above set forth, the purpose of the complainant in instituting said cause, and in asking the questions mentioned in said order to show cause, is to obtain a decree enjoining said General Paper Company from carrying on the business for which it was incorporated, and to enjoin the carrying out of and operation under certain agency contracts and agreements existing between it and said Hennepin Paper Company, on the alleged ground that said contracts and agreements were made and are in violation of the provisions of said acts of Congress: that said contracts and agreements are of great value, not only to said General Paper Company, whose entire business practically rests upon them, but are also of great value to, and constitute valuable property rights in, each of the defendants respectively parties thereto, including The Hennepin Paper Company, and that such injunction from carrying out said contracts and agreements, and their virtual annulment thereby occasioned, would result in great injury, damage, and loss, not only to said Hennepin Paper Company or said General Paper Company, and that to compel said Hennepin Paper Company or said General Paper Company, through this respondent, to answer the questions aforesaid in aid of the purposes aforesaid would be contrary, not only to the provisions hereinbefore referred to of said 4th and 5th Amendments to the Constitution of the United States, but also contrary to the well-established rule of the common law as well as of equity jurisprudence, that no person will be compelled to discover any fact, either by producing documents or answering questions, which may subject him, either directly or indirectly, to prosecution for a crime or to a forfeiture or penalty, or anything in the nature of a forfeiture or penalty.

Further answering, this respondent alleges that he ought not to be required to answer the questions or comply with the requests, or produce for inspection by counsel for the complainant, or for the purpose of being offered in evidence in the cause above referred to, the books and papers referred to in said order to show cause and in the petition and schedules thereto annexed, upon which said

The questions were directed to these ends. They were directed to ascertain whether the prices received for the various paper materials were equalized, and whether, during the time the General Paper Company was the selling agent of the materials, there was in existence an arrangement whereby the prices received through the paper company were equalized between the other defendant companies. The questions were put in various ways to show such equalization and the arrangements to equalize, and to show the allowances to each mill, the fixing of definite prices, and the distribution of the balances received among the companies on the basis of their average daily output of the grade of paper inquired about. And there were also questions asked as to whether the board of directors or the executive committee of the paper company fixed the prices of paper to be paid to each of the mills by or through the paper company, and the compensation to be paid to the mills making butchers' fibre paper, because it was less profitable, and other questions as to conversations between gentlemen representing the different mills in regard to the organization of a corporation to act as general selling agent in order to eliminate competition. There were also questions as to whether the books showed the things expressed in the other questions. The objection made to each of the questions before the examiner was that the testimony sought was irrelevant, incompetent, and immaterial, and counsel advised the witnesses not to an-order to show cause was made, not only for the reasons hereinabove set forth, but also for the following reasons, that is to say:

1. That one of the purposes of said complainant in instituting said cause and in seeking to require this respondent to answer the questions and comply with the requests and produce for inspection by counsel for the complainant, and for the purpose of being offered in evidence in said cause, the books and papers aforesaid, is to establish and to compel this respondent to furnish to said complainant evidence tending to establish that he has been guilty of certain violations of the acts of Congress hereinbefore mentioned and referred to, and to subject him to the penalties for such violations imposed by said acts, and that to compel him to answer said questions or comply with said requests, or to produce for inspection or for the purpose of being offered in evidence in said cause, the said books and papers, would be contrary to the provisions hereinbefore referred to of said 4th and 5th Amendments to the Constitution of the United States.

2. That the alleged acts of said Hennepin Paper Company and of said General Paper Company complained of by the complainant in its said original petition or bill of complaint in said cause, and which said complainant is endeavoring to establish in said cause, would, if committed by said defendant companies, involve certain violations of the laws of the state of Minnesota by this respondent, and would subject him to penalties and forfeiture under said laws, and that to compel him to answer the questions or comply with the requirements aforesaid, or to produce for inspection, or for the purpose of being offered in evidence in said cause, the said books and papers, would be to compel him to furnish evidence tending to establish that he has been guilty of such violations of the laws of the state of Minnesota, and to subject him to the penalties and forfeitures aforesaid, contrary to the provisions hereinbefore referred to of said 4th and 5th Amendments to the Constitution of the United States.

3. That one of the purposes of said complainant in instituting said cause and in seeking to require this respondent to answer the questions and comply with the requests, and produce for inspection by counsel for the complainant and for the purpose of being offered in evidence in said cause, the books and papers above referred to, is to establish and compel this respondent to furnish to said complainant evidence tending to establish the allegations of the original petition or bill of complaint in said cause, which, if established, will result in subjecting this respondent to loss or detriment in the nature of a penalty or forfeiture, in that the said Hennepin Paper Company, of which this respondent is a stockholder as aforesaid, will be subjected, under the laws of the state of Minnesota, to the forfeiture of its charter, resulting in the virtual forfeiture of the stock of this respondent in said defendant company, and in the loss and forfeiture to a large extent of the value of the interest of this respondent in said corporation. and in that the contracts made through said General Paper Company as its sales agent by said Hennepin Paper Company under and pursuant to the agency contracts herein referred to between said Hennepin Paper Company and said General Paper Company will be virtually annulled and the property rights of said Hennepin Paper Company in said contracts destroyed; that there are a large number of such contracts outstanding under which large sums of money are due to said Hennepin Paper Company, all of which, as this respondent is advised and believes, will be or may be forfeited and lost to said defendant and to this respondent as a stockholder therein in case the illegal combination alleged in said original petition or bill of complaint is established by the decree or judgment in said cause; and this respondent alleges that to compel him to answer the questions and comply with the requests and produce for inspection and for purpose of being offered in evidence the books and papers referred to in said order to show cause and the petition and schedules aforesaid, and which he has declined to answer and comply with or produce, if material to said cause, would be contrary to the provisions of said 4th and 5th Amendments to the Constitution of the United States. and also contrary to the well-established rule of the common law and of equity jurisprudence. that no person will be compelled to discover any fact or matter which may subject him to forfeiture or penalty or anything in the nature of a forfeiture or penalty.

swer. As to the books and papers, the following is a sample of the proceedings:

Q. Do the books, journals, or ledgers of the Hennepin Paper Company show any agreement or arrangement or understanding under and pursuant to which and the manner in which the prices and amounts realized by the Hennepin Paper Company [102]*upon various grades of paper manufactured by it and sold by or through the defendant the General Paper Company are and have been, since the 5th day of July, 1900, equalized, or the profits arising from the sale of such paper distributed or apportioned, as between the defendants?

Mr. Flanders: All objections renewed, and I give the witness the same advice.

(No answer.)

Q. Do you refuse, Mr. Nelson, to produce the books?

Mr. Flanders: As I said before, you may assume for the purposes of these questions that the books and all the papers called for are present in court; but, on behalf of the Hennepin Paper Company and the witness and the General Paper Company, I decline to submit those to the inspection of the government counsel.

Mr. Kellogg: Or to allow them or any part of them to be put in evidence, Mr. Flanders?

Mr. Flanders: Yes.

Other facts will appear in the opinion.

Mr. James G. Flanders argued the cause, and, with Mr. Charles F. Fawsett, filed a brief for plaintiffs in error:

The plaintiff must show by clear averment the materiality of the documents sought to be disclosed,—a rule which applies not only to bills of discovery, but also to proceedings under the statute to compel the production of books or papers upon or in preparation for trial.

Facts and circumstances must be stated from which the court may determine the question of the materiality and relevancy.

If it be granted that it was within the conceivable powers of Congress, in the circumstances under which the immunity clause was enacted, to make it generally applicable to state as well as to Federal courts, it cannot be said, under a fair construction of the clause, that Congress intended to exercise such extreme power. Being in the nature of an exception to a rule of liability, it should be strictly construed.

The English Constitution and the protection which it gives to witnesses cover all the law which is administered in England.

1 Dan. Ch. Pl. & Pr. 5th Am. ed. p. *563.

The only exception given by the English rule in any degree analogous to that which would exclude the criminal laws of the states from the operation of the constitutional Amendment is that "a defendant cannot refuse to give testimony on the ground that it will expose him to penalties in a foreign country."

1 Dan. Ch. Pl. & Pr. 5th Am. ed. p. *567.

The grounds on which the franchises of corporations may be seized by the state and forfeited consist of a wilful nonfeasance or malfeasance, otherwise described as a wilful nonuser or misuser, of their franchises, in matters affecting the interests or right of the public generally.

5 Thomp. Corp. § 6609.

For a corporation to combine with other corporations and form a trust the object of which is to limit production, maintain prices, and stifle competition, is such a misuser of its franchises as will entitle the state to demand a judgment ousting it of them, where there is a statute prohibiting corporations from entering into such combinations.

The fact that the defendant corporations are engaged in interstate commerce does not remove them from the authority which may be exercised by a state over corporations which it has created; and, apparently, there is no power on earth which can interfere between the state and a corporation deriving its charter from the state, in proceedings to take away its charter.

The forfeiture of property by the annulment of contracts, and the deprivation of the fruits of existing contracts and business relations, is evident. The forfeiture of personal liberty is equally obvious.

A corporation can speak and act only through its proper officers and agents, within the scope of their respective duties. If the officers of a corporation can be compelled to testify against the corporation in a matter involving the forfeiture of the charter, property, and business of the corporation, then corporations are entitled to no protection, either under the Constitution or the common law, against self-crimination or inquisitorial proceedings to forfeit their property.

Messrs. Frank B. Kellogg and James M. Beck argued the cause, and, with Attorney General Moody, filed a brief for defendant in error:

Whether finally admissible or not, the evidence should be given and received before the examiner, inasmuch as all questions of materiality, relevancy, and competency must be left primarily for determination upon final hearing by the United States circuit court for the district of Minnesota, where the cause is pending, and ultimately for decision by this court, when the suit shall be considered here on appeal.

Russell v. McLellan, 3 Woodb. & M. 157, Fed. Cas. No. 12,158.

The acts of the conspirators in furtherance of the combination and conspiracy, as evidenced by the minutes of the General Paper Company, are, under all of the authorities, clearly admissible. If the book had not been produced before the examiner at all, its production could have been compelled, and the use of its contents secured by an order to show cause, supported by a proper affidavit of counsel for the government that the book was material.

Coit v. North Carolina Gold Amalgamating Co. 9 Fed. 577.

All that can be expected is that the books and papers desired shall be accurately designated, and that there should be some showing that they prove to be material evidence.

United States v. Babcock, 3 Dill. 566, Fed. Cas. No. 14,484.

In Coit v. North Carolina Gold Amalgamating Co. supra, it was held that the production of books and papers in possession of the opposite party might be required in equity causes on motion, supported by affidavit averring their materiality.

There is no doubt that, as a witness, a party can be compelled, by a subpœnà duces tecum, to produce books, documents, and papers in his possession in the same manner as any other witness.

In Johnson Steel Street-Rail Co. v. North Branch Steel Co. 48 Fed. 191, the circuit court for the western district of Pennsylvania required a witness, not a party to the suit, to produce certain drawings which seemed to be pertinent to the issue. The notice and motion in Victor G. Bloede Co. v. Joseph Bancroft & Sons Co. 98 Fed. 175, were far more sweeping and general in their terms than the request involved in this application.

Under issues of the character raised in this cause the entire manner of conducting the business of the General Paper Company is competent and material evidence.

Interstate Commerce Commission v. Baird, 194 U. S. 25, 48 L. ed. 860, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 563.

The duty to give testimony is a duty to the state, and not to the parties.

Wigmore, Ev. §§ 2195, 2210.

The claim of privilege can be made solely by the witness himself; the privilege (as the common phrase runs) is purely personal to himself. Whether he chooses to fulfil his duty without objection, or whether he prefers to exercise the exemption which the law concedes to him, is a matter resting entirely between himself and the state (or the court, as its representative). The party against whom the testimony is brought has no right to claim or to urge the exemption on his own behalf.

There can be no distinction between his refusals to answer and his refusals to produce books and papers. The books and documents in a man's possession are as much subject to the calls of justice as are the faculties of speech and memory.

Bull v. Loveland, 10 Pick. 9.

Every act of the General Paper Company, as the form and entity which this combination and conspiracy assumed, is a fit subject for investigation under the issues that have been framed. All of its acts were done by the administrative officers of the selling company at the instance of the duly authorized representatives of the manufacturing corporations, sitting upon its board of directors. They are the acts of the conspirators in continuation of, and in furtherance of, the objects of the conspiracy itself. It is an elementary principle of evidence that, where two or more persons are associated together for some illegal purpose, the acts or declarations of any one or more of them in reference to the common object are admissible against them all.

Evidence concerning meetings preliminary to the organization of the General Paper Company, and declarations made by witnesses during the formation of the combination and conspiracy, were material.

Lincoln v. Claflin, 7 Wall. 132, 19 L. ed. 106.

Where proof of the conspiracy depends upon a vast amount of circumstantial evidence, or a number of isolated and independent facts, it is in the sound discretion of the court to allow the declarations in advance of proof of the conspiracy.

1 Greenl. Ev. 111; State v. Thompson, 69 Conn. 720, 38 Atl. 870; State v. Winner, supra.

In cases of conspiracy, the admissions of the accused conspirators are always a fruitful source of evidence. Only in exceptional cases is the conspiracy shown by direct and positive evidence. The proof is usually indirect and circumstantial, and courts are bound to rely, in large measure, upon the admissions made by the conspirators either during or after the accomplishment of the common purpose.

Under the ancient practice, in actions at common law a party might not compel his opponent to furnish evidence as a witness. His only remedy was by way of a bill of discovery in equity to compel his opponent to disclose facts and documentary evidence material to his case.

Wigmore, Ev. §§ 2217, 2218.

This limitation, however, never existed in equity, and parties could there be freely compelled, either before or after issue joined, to disclose evidence and documents material to the issues.

1 Greenl. Ev. 15th ed. § 361; 1 Dan. Ch. Pl. & Pr. 5th ed. p. 885, note 6; Adams, Eq. 7th ed. p. 36; Wigmore, Ev. §§ 2218, 2219, pp. 3012, 3014–3016.

A party will be compelled to make a disclosure of all facts within his knowledge, or books and documents in his possession, which tend either to establish his opponent's case or to refute the position which he himself takes.

Modern legislation has made the bill of discovery an unnecessary adjunct even in actions at law. Material evidence may now be required of a party in such actions, without resorting to this cumbersome proceeding.

Mr. Justice McKenna, after stating the case as above, delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiffs in error urge three main contentions, which we will consider in their order.

I. That the evidence, documentary and oral, which the witnesses were required to produce, was not shown to be material to plaintiff's case.

1. There are three answers to this contention. (1) The evidence is clearly material. The charge of the bill is that the defendant manufacturing corporations entered into a conspiracy and combination in violation of the act of July 2, 1890, to suppress competition between themselves, and that they accomplished this purpose by organizing the General Paper Company, and gave it certain controlling powers over the output of the mills and the prices and distribution of their products.

Before the application to the court for the orders under review there were certain facts established. It was established that in the fall of 1899 and the spring of 1900 there were preliminary meetings of the parties to ultimately form the paper company, and that it was subsequently formed by those representing the manufacturing companies, who subscribed for the stock. In July, 1900, the corporations, as represented in the paper company, fourteen in all, entered into contracts with it, making it their exclusive selling agent; that each constituent manufacturing company was represented by one of its principal officers upon the board of directors of the paper company, and the number of directors have been increased as other corporations have made the paper company their selling agent. A table of the constituent companies was given and the times the companies became members of the paper company. And it was established that there was an executive committee, comprised *substantial- [112] ly of the same persons who constituted the board of directors, and that the paper company had books and records containing the minutes of the meetings of stockholders, directors, and the executive committee, and that the treasurers and sales agents had presented reports to the stockholders, directors, and executive committee. It was stipulated that all the subscriptions to stock of the paper company were for the benefit of some paper manufacturing company, and in its name, that it was the beneficial owner thereof, and that the dividends declared thereon were its property; that said stock was from time to time allotted to such corporations as made contracts with the paper company, making it their exclusive selling agent, upon the basis of estimated relative productions of paper. A list of the individuals to whom stock was issued, the names of the corporations represented by them, and the days of the issuances of the stock, were given.

The questions were framed to prove the combination charged in the bill and the powers and operation of the General Paper Company and the relations of the other companies to it. What the answers will show we do not know, nor what the books and documents will disclose. The organization of the paper company had a purpose, and whether it was a legal or illegal instrument for competing companies to use we do not have now to determine. By the admissions of the answers the paper company entered into contracts with those companies, became their selling agent, and was entitled to a certain percentage of the sales. Presumably it exercised its powers, made sales and received profits. In all that it did, the manufacturing corporations were interested; they owned its stock, were entitled to its dividends. This we may admit, for argument sake, not prejudging in any way, may be consistent with continued competition between the companies, but it may be otherwise. At any rate, the manner in which the paper company executed its functions may be links in the evidence adduced by the United States, and this is enough to establish the materiality of the evidence.

It must not be overlooked that not only an [113] inspection of the *books was refused, but questions directed to ascertain the contents of the books were objected to, not answered. We have given one illustration; we will give another. Counsel for defendant corporations stated at the examination: "That for the purpose of any question the government counsel see fit to ask, it may be assumed that all the books, papers, and documents" described in the subpœna "are present here in court, and we decline to submit them to the inspection of the government counsel." The following then took place:

Q. State whether those books show the amounts, kinds, or grades of paper manufactured by the defendant Northwest Paper Company and sold by or through the defendant General Paper Company, as the exclusive sales agent of the defendant Northwest Paper Company since the 8th day of April, 1902, or since about the 1st of May, 1902 if that is the date the business commenced.

Same objections by defendants, and the witness given the same advice.

Q. You decline to answer?

A. I decline on advice of attorney.

Q. Do the books also show where the said paper so manufactured was sold and into what states and territories it was shipped since the 8th day of April, 1902, or the 1st day of May, 1902?

Mr. Flanders: I wish to make the same objections, and I give the witness the same advice.

A. Same answer.

And counsel for the United States, not only as to the matters expressed in the foregoing questions, but as to other matters which the bill charged against the companies and which had been inquired about, said that he desired to use the books and offer them in evidence to show such matters. An inspection of the books was refused, and all evidence of their contents withheld.

Necessarily the books contained the information. The paper company was the selling agent of the Northwest Paper Company [114] *and must have kept an account of its sales and into what states the paper of the company was shipped and sold. Such accounts are material and relevant to complainant's case. They may or may not, in connection with other evidence, sustain the charge of the United States, but they are elements in the proof, having tendency enough to sustain the charge to be considered material.

2. The claim of immateriality of the testimony cannot avail plaintiffs against the orders of the circuit court. The procedure before an examiner and his powers are explained in Blease v. Garlington, 92 U. S. 1, 23 L. ed. 521. It is there said: "The examiner, before whom the witnesses are orally examined, is required to note exceptions, but he cannot decide upon their validity. He must take down all the examination in writing, and send it to the court, with the objections noted. So, too, when depositions are taken according to the acts of Congress, or otherwise, under the rules; exceptions to the testimony may be noted by the officer taking the deposition, but he is not permitted to decide upon them; and when the testimony, as reduced to writing by the examiner, or the deposition, is filed in court, further exceptions may be there taken. Thus, both the exceptions and the testimony objected to are all before the court below, and come here upon the appeal as part of the record and proceedings there."

And an application to a court to compel the delivery of testimony in aid of the examination does not change the rule. The testimony is taken to be submitted to the court where the suit is pending, and all questions upon the evidence, its materiality and sufficiency, are to be determined by it, and after it by an appellate court. Even if the trial court permit the examination of witnesses orally in open court upon the hearing in cases in equity, as further said in Blease v. Garlington, the testimony must be taken "down or its substance stated in writing and made part of the record, or it will be entirely disregarded here on an appeal. So, too, if testimony is objected to and ruled out, it must still be sent here with the record, subject to the objection, *or the ruling will not be considered by us." [115] Blease v. Garlington has been applied at circuit in a number of cases.‡

Eschwege, 92 Fed. 721; Fayerweather v. Ritch, 89 Fed. 529; Appleton v. Ecaubert, 45 Fed. 281; Edison Electric Light Co. v. 3. These writs of error are not prosecuted by the parties in the original suit, but by witnesses, to review a judgment of contempt against them for disobeying orders to testify. Being witnesses merely, it is not open to them to make objections to the testimony. The tendency or effect of the testimony on the issues between the parties is no concern of theirs. The basis of their privilege is different from that and entirely personal, as we shall presently see.

II. That the documentary evidence called for was not shown to be in the possession or under the control of the witnesses. This contention is untenable. The ground of it is that the possession of the witnesses was not personal, but was that of the respective corporations of which they were officers. Granting this to be so, and that the witnesses could have set up whatever privileges the corporations had, nevertheless they had the custody (actual possession) of the books, and were summoned from necessity, as representing the corporations. It is hardly necessary to observe that the witnesses had all the possession human beings could have had or can have, and if the objection is to prevail, the books of a corporation can be withdrawn from the reach of compulsory process.

It is as useless as attempting to demonstrate that twice two make four, to say that a corporation can have possession of nothing except by the human beings who are its officers, and it is to them—not the intangi-[116] ble being they represent and act for—*that the law directs its process of subpœna and must procure its evidence.

III. That the evidence, documentary and oral, required to be produced, was in the nature of incriminating evidence, which the witnesses and the defendants are privileged from furnishing to the plaintiff under the provisions of the Federal Constitution and the well-recognized principles of equity procedure.

This contention asserts rights personal to the plaintiffs and rights of the corporation defendants in the suit. The basis of both rights is the protection of the 4th and 5th Amendments to the Constitution of the United States.

The argument submitted is substantially the same as that made by appellants in Hale v. Henkel and McAlister v. Henkel [201 U. S. 43, 90, ante, 652, 671, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 370, 385]. It is insisted that the immunity† given by the act of February 25, 1903, is not as broad as the penalties and forfeitures to which the plaintiffs in error or the corporations of which they are officers will be subjected. If the immunity, it is urged, protects from the penalties of the antitrust act of 1890, it does not protect, nor has Congress the power to protect, from the penalties of the Minnesota laws, which make criminal a combination and conspiracy in restraint of trade, and subject to forfeiture the charters of corporations who become parties to such combination and conspiracy. Minn. Stat. 1894, §§ 6955, 6956, 6962.

The extent of the immunity and its application to corporations was considered in Hale v. Henkel and McAlister v. Henkel, and decided adversely to the contention of plaintiffs in error.

Judgment affirmed.

Argued January 5, 8, 1906. Decided March 12, 1906.

APPEALS from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Wisconsin to review certain orders of that court. directing witnesses to answer questions put to them, and produce written evidence in their possession, on their examination before a special examiner. Dismissed for lack of any final judgment.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. James G. Flanders argued the cause, and, with Mr. Charles Fawsett, filed a brief for appellants.

Mr. William Brace also filed a brief for appellants.

Messrs. Frank B. Kellogg and James M. Beek argued the cause, and, with Attorney General Moody, filed a brief for appellee.

For contentions of these counsel, see their briefs as reported in Nelson v. United States, ante, 673.

[118] *Mr. Justice McKenna delivered the opinion of the court:

At the very beginning we encounter a question of jurisdiction. Are the orders of which the appellants complain appealable? The orders direct the appellants respectively to appear before Robert F. Taylor, special examiner in the case, at the time and place to be designated, and direct each of them to "answer each and every question put to them respectively by the counsel for the complainant, the United States of America," and to produce before such commissioner certain books, papers, records, documents, reports, and contracts, "for the purpose of their respective examination in said cause, and for use in evidence of the complaint of the United States of America in said examination." And it is ordered that the complainant's counsel shall have the right to inspect the said books, etc., and to introduce them or any of them in evidence; but, except as necessary for such purposes, the books, etc., to remain in the custody of the appellants.

A brief statement of the proceedings is all that is necessary. The United States, by its proper officers brought suit in the circuit court of the United States for the district of Minnesota against the General Paper Company and twenty-three other corporations, defendants, under and pursuant to the provisions of the act of Congress of July 2, 1890, entitled "An Act to Protect Trade and Commerce against Unlawful Restraints and Monopolies." [26 Stat. at L. 209, chap. 647, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3200.] It is alleged in the bill that the defendants, other than the General Paper Company and the Manufacturers' Paper Company, were engaged in the manufacture of manilla and fibre papers in active competition with one another, and that they entered into an agreement, combination, and conspiracy to control, regulate, and monopolize, not only the manufacture of news print, manilla, fibre, and other papers, but also the distribution and shipment thereof among and throughout the middle, southern, and western states. The General Paper Company was the means employed to execute the combination and conspiracy. That company is a corporation organized, the bill alleges, by *the other de- [119] fendants, under the laws of the state of Wisconsin, with a capital stock of $100,000, divided into one thousand shares, which were distributed among and owned and held by the other defendants in proportions based upon the average daily output of the mills of each defendant. It is authorized to become at its principal place of business the sales agent of the products of the defendants' mills in the state of Wisconsin and elsewhere. Absolute power is conferred upon it to control and restrict the output of the mills, fix the price of their products, and determine to whom and the terms and conditions upon which such products shall be sold, into what states and places they shall be shipped, and what publishers and customers each mill shall supply.

The Manufacturers' Paper Company, it is alleged, is a New York corporation, with its principal place of business in Chicago, and, from about the year 1897 to 1902, acted as the sales agent of various manufacturers of paper for the sale of news print and other papers; that in 1902 it became a party to the combination and conspiracy alleged in the bill, and agreed with the General Paper Company not to compete with it in certain territories.

It is admitted that, prior to the formation of the General Paper Company, the other defendants, except the Manufacturers' Paper Company, were in active competition. The formation of the General Paper Company is also admitted, and that it became, by contract with the defendants who manufacture paper, their selling agent. The defendants deny, however, a purpose to violate the act of July 2, 1890. The violation of that law is the issue in the case, and the bill prays an injunction against the defendants and their officers from doing the acts or executing the purpose charged against them.

In trial of the issue thus made the circuit court appointed Robert S. Taylor special examiner, with authority to hear and take testimony within and without the district of Minnesota, and made an order fixing the time to take the testimony for the United States the 16th of May, 1905, at the 120] city of Milwaukee, *state of Wisconsin. The order was duly served on the counsel of the respective parties. Thereupon the United States petitioned the circuit court for an order directing the clerk of the circuit court to issue a subpœna duces tecum. The subpœna was duly issued and served on the appellants as individuals and as officers of certain of the defendant companies. They appeared before the examiner in obedience to the subpœna, but, under the advice of counsel, they refused to permit the use of books or certain parts of them, and refused to answer certain questions put to them, the ground of this action being the immateriality and irrelevancy of the evidence sought to be adduced. The United States then presented a petition to the United States circuit court for the district of Wisconsin, which recited the issues in the case, and the statement of the questions asked, and the parts of the books and documents sought to be used. To this petition the appellants filed separate answers.

The answers may be regarded for our present purpose as identical. They allege the immateriality of the evidence and that its materiality should be established as a condition precedent to its production; that they are officers of the companies, and as such officers, the custodians of the books, papers, and documents, and that the same are of interest and value to the company in its business, and the company forbids their production; that the United States seeks evidence to convict the company and the individual appellants of violations of the act of July 2, 1890, to annul the contracts and agreements of the company, and subject it and the other appellants to the penalties prescribed in that act, and to compel the company and the other appellants to furnish evidence against themselves, contrary to the provisions of the 5th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which provides that no person shall be a witness against himself; also contrary to the 4th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, which provides that the right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures shall not be violated. It is also said that the alleged 121] acts of the *paper company complained of in the original petition of the United States, and which the United States is endeavoring to establish, would, if committed by the company, be violations of the laws of Wisconsin, and would subject the company to forfeiture of its charter and other penalties under said laws, and to compel it, through its officers, to produce the books and documents sought would be to compel it to furnish evidence tending to establish that it has violated the law of the state, and such purpose is contrary to the provisions of the 4th and 5th Amendments of the Constitution of the United States.

As we have said, the court entered orders requiring the appellants to answer the questions put to them and to produce the books, papers, and documents requested. Appeals were allowed to this court. To justify the appeals, appellants contend that the orders of the circuit court constitute practically independent proceedings and amount to final judgments. To sustain the contention, Interstate Commerce Commission v. Brimson, 154 U. S. 447, 38 L. ed. 1047, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 545, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1125, and Interstate Commerce Commission v. Baird, 194 U. S. 25, 48 L. ed. 860, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 563, are cited.

Those cases rested on statutory provisions which do not apply to the proceedings at bar, and, while there may be resemblances to the latter, there are also differences. In a certain sense finality can be asserted of the orders under review; so, in a certain sense, finality can be asserted of any order of a court. And such an order may coerce a witness, leaving him no alternative but to obey or be punished. It may have the effect and the same characteristic of finality as the orders under review, but from such a ruling it will not be contended there is an appeal. Let the court go farther, and punish the witness for contempt of its order,—then arrives a right of review; and this is adequate for his protection without unduly impeding the progress of the case. Why should greater rights be given a witness to justify his contumacy when summoned before an examiner than when summoned before a court? Testimony, at times, must be taken out of court. In instances like those in the case at bar the officer who takes the testimony, having no power to *issue process, is given [122] the aid of the clerk of a court of the United States; having no power to enforce obedience to the process or to command testimony, he is given the aid of the judge of the court whose clerk issued the process, and if there be disobedience of the process, or refusal to testify or to produce documents, such judge may "proceed to enforce obedience . . . or punish the disobedience in like manner as any court of the United States may proceed in case of disobedience to like process issued by such court." Rev. Stat. §§ 868, 869, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, pp. 664, 665. This power to punish being exercised, the matter becomes personal to the witness and a judgment as to him. Prior to that the proceedings are interlocutory in the original suit. This is clearly pointed out by Circuit Judge Van Devanter, disallowing an appeal from an order like those under review, in the case of Nelson v. United States [201 U. S. 92, ante, 673, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 358], error to the circuit court of the United States for the district of Minnesota. The learned judge said:

"I am of opinion that the mere direction of the court to the witnesses to answer the questions put to them and to produce the written evidence in their possession is not a final decision; that it more appropriately is an interlocutory ruling or order in the principal suit, and that if the witnesses refuse to comply with it and the court then exercises its authority either to punish them or to coerce them into compliance, that will give rise to another case or cases to which the witnesses will be parties on the one hand, and the government, as a sovereign vindicating the dignity and authority of one of its courts, will be a party on the other hand. I have no doubt that a judgment adverse to the witnesses in that proceeding or case will be a final decision, and will be subject to review by writ of error, but not by appeal. My opinion is also that the parties to the principal suit cannot appeal or obtain a writ of error from that decision."

This court having no jurisdiction, the appeals must be dismissed, and it is so ordered.

E. J. MURPHY, Warden of the Illinois State Penitentiary at Joliet.

1. Habeas corpus—as substitute for writ of error.—A writ of habeas corpus cannot perform the function of a writ of error.

2. Habeas corpus—Federal interference with state administration of criminal law.—Federal courts have no power to interfere by habeas corpus with the imprisonment of a person under a judgment of conviction of a crime in a state court, if that court had jurisdiction to try the case, and jurisdiction over the person of the accused, and did not lose such jurisdiction during the trial.

3. Habeas corpus—in Federal courts.—A person convicted of murder in a state court will not be released on habeas corpus by the Federal courts, on the theory that jurisdiction over the subject-matter and the person of the accused was lost by the failure of the trial court to have the testimony in the case read or repeated to the accused, who was unable, because of his almost total deafness, to hear the evidence.

4. Constitutional law—due process of law—criminal procedure.—The failure of the trial court, in a criminal case, to see that the testimony is read or repeated to the accused, who, by reason of his almost total deafness, is unable to hear the evidence, does not infringe the prohibition of U. S. Const., 14th Amend., against the deprivation of liberty without due process of law.

Argued February 26, 27, 1906. Decided March 12, 1906.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Illinois to review an order denying an application for a writ of habeas corpus on behalf of a person imprisoned under a judgment of conviction of murder, entered by the Circuit Court of Winnebago County, in that state. Affirmed.

Statement by Mr. Justice Peckham:

The appellant was indicted in the circuit court of Winnebago county, in the state of Illinois, for the crime of murder. He was tried at the January term of that court, held in 1905, found guilty, and sentenced to the penitentiary for his natural life. He made an application to the circuit court of Cook county for a writ of habeas corpus, after judgment upon the verdict had been entered, and that court denied the writ. He then made a like application to the supreme court of the state of Illinois, which was denied. The appellant says that he was unable to obtain a writ of error in the state court, because, as he avers, it would cost between $700 and $800 to print the record, and that he was absolutely penniless, except that he had a pension of some $24 a month. Hence he was unable to obtain any relief in the state courts.

Subsequently the appellant applied by written petition to the United States circuit court for the northern district of Illinois, eastern division, for the same writ, to be directed to the warden of the Illinois state penitentiary, where the petitioner was con-[124] fined *under the judgment entered upon the verdict of guilty upon the trial of the indictment. The appellant alleged in his petition the foregoing facts, and also, among other things, that he was not guilty of the crime of which he was indicted and had been convicted. He further stated and described the circumstances in which the killing was done, and said that he had been set upon on a dark night by some one unknown to him, who came upon him from behind and grasped him by the neck and almost broke it as he ran him about in the dark; that his neck was very badly hurt in the struggle and marks were left upon it visible for days thereafter. In the struggle the person was killed and the petitioner was subsequently convicted of his murder. The petitioner is a veteran of the Civil War, and lost his hearing in the line of his duty as a soldier, and is now between sixty and seventy years of age. He is so deaf that he can only hear when a person speaks into the mouthpiece of his ear trumpet, close to his ear.

He alleged in his petition that, upon the trial of the case, he did not hear one single word of the examination of the jurors, either by the state's attorney or by his own counsel; that he did not hear the names of the jurors nor their business, and could not confer intelligently with his counsel as to the advisability of acceptance or rejection of a juror, and, as a matter of fact, he was not consulted and did not know the facts elicited by the examination of the jurors before acceptance; that if he had known the facts as they occurred he would have counseled the rejection of certain jurors on account of their relationship to other people; that he did not hear or have communicated to him, in any way, the evidence of the witnesses on the trial of his case, and that he was unable to suggest to his counsel any questions for their examination or cross-examination during the trial, and that the substance of their evidence was not communicated to him, and he did not know what it was until he saw some partial reports of it in the newspapers, when it was too late to suggest to his counsel proper cross-questions; that the first thing communicated to him after the begin-[125] ning of the *trial, which lasted about two weeks, was the verdict; he was in the court room, with his ear trumpet, but was unable to hear the verdict, and did not know what the verdict was until the clerk of the court wrote it upon a piece of paper and gave it to him.

He was present in the court room during the motion for a new trial, but did not hear a word that was said by either counsel, and the only thing communicated to him was when he was called to the bar to be sentenced.

The record shows that after the motion for a new trial had been made, the court said: "On reviewing the entire case I am disposed to say that the motion for a new trial be overruled." Continuing, the court said:

It is regretted in one sense that the defendant, on account of his infirmity, is unable to know clearly what has been done. He should be informed, I suppose, of the fact that his motion for a new trial has been overruled. Mr. Sheriff, will you bring Mr. Felts forward? I wish you would say to Mr. Felts that his motion for a new trial has been overruled.

The Sheriff: The court wishes me to tell you that motion for a new trial is overruled. Do you understand?

Felts: I understand; yes.

The Court: You may ask him if he has anything to say why sentence of the court should not now be pronounced.

The Sheriff: Have you anything to say why the sentence of the court should not be pronounced?

Felts: False swearing is all I got to say.

Court: Well, under the circumstances, of course, it is practically impossible for me to say anything to this defendant.

(Here follows the sentence of the court), which sentence was transmitted to the defendant by the sheriff through a tube.

The record shows that the appellant was himself examined as a witness on his trial and had the benefit of counsel, who appeared for and defended him upon such trial.

He contended before the Federal circuit court, on his application *for the writ of [126] habeas corpus, that, on account of the manner in which he was tried, his constitutional rights had been denied him, and that his conviction was without due process of law within the meaning of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and that he was entitled, therefore, to be discharged from imprisonment under the judgment. He also urged that the same was void, as being rendered without jurisdiction, on account of the violation of his constitutional rights. The circuit court denied the application for the writ, and from the order denying the same the appellant has appealed to this court.

Mr. William E. Mason argued the cause and filed a brief for appellant:

By the Constitution of the state as well as by the Federal Constitution, the common-law right to a trial by jury in criminal cases is guaranteed; and all trials for criminal offenses should be conducted according to the course of the common law.

Harris v. People, 128 Ill. 585, 15 Am. St. Rep. 153, 21 N. E. 563.

There can be no trial unless the defendant is permitted to know and understand the nature and purpose of the trial, and hear, or have communicated to him in some proper way, the evidence of witnesses, examination of jurors, and all of the details of that trial.

At no time or place was the relator permitted to defend himself in person, and the failure to communicate to him the details of the trial as it proceeded was a denial of that right under the Constitution.

The accused should not only be within the walls of the courthouse, but should be present where the trial is conducted, that he may see and be seen, hear and be heard, under such regulations as the law has established.

Brown v. State, 38 Tex. 485.

It is a humane principle, applicable to criminal cases, and especially when life is in question, to consider that the prisoner is standing on all of his rights, waiving nothing on the score of irregularity.

People v. M'Kay, 18 Johns. 212.

In Harris v. People, supra, the defendant, charged with a felony, entered a plea of not guilty, and consented to a waiving of a jury and trial by the court. She was tried and convicted by the court. The supreme court held that the trial by the judge was nugatory and void, and that, in the absence of a jury, the court had no jurisdiction, and that the defendant could not confirm jurisdiction by consenting.

If any fundamental right is denied, the person has not been tried by due process of law, and the proceedings are null and void.

Ex parte Ulrich, 42 Fed. 587.

If the accused was absent during any of the proceedings, the judgment was void; and even though the prisoner's counsel was present and did not object, and did not call the attention of the court to the fact that the prisoner was absent, that was not a waiver of the rights of the prisoner to be present.

Maurer v. People, 43 N. Y. 1; Andrews v. State, 2 Sneed, 550; Re Nielsen, 131 U. S. 183, 33 L. ed. 120, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 672.

It is essential to the protection of one whose life or liberty is involved in the prosecution for felony, that he shall be personally present at the trial; that is, at every stage of the trial when his substantial rights may be affected by the proceedings against him.

Hopt v. Utah, 110 U. S. 579, 28 L. ed. 265, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 202.

Even though the court had, at the beginning of the trial, full and complete jurisdiction of the offense and the person, yet, when the court deprived the prisoner of any constitutional right, it lost jurisdiction, and the judgment was void.

Re Nielsen, supra.

Mr. Harry B. North argued the cause, and, with Messrs. William H. Stead and Edgar Eldredge, filed a brief for appellee:

It has been too frequently decided to be now open to question, that a writ of habeas corpus cannot be made use of to perform the functions of a writ of error or an appeal.

There is no law or justice in giving to a prisoner relief under habeas corpus that is equivalent to an acquittal, when, on writ of error, he could only have secured relief from that portion of the sentence which was void.

United States v. Pridgeon, supra.

Mere errors or irregularities, however gross, in the judgment, or the proceedings upon which the judgment was founded, will not be sufficient to obtain release on writ of habeas corpus.

Having acquired complete jurisdiction to hear, determine, and adjudicate in reference to the subject-matter before it, the court did not, nor could it, lose that jurisdiction by any error that may have been subsequently committed; for error intervening after the judgment attached, the judgment must be reversed in a direct proceeding, on appeal or writ or error; but that cannot be urged in a collateral suit.

Mr. Harry B. North also filed a separate brief for appellee:

Habeas corpus is not a proper writ to correct errors or irregularities, even though a constitutional right is involved, if the court had jurisdiction to try the case.

Ex parte Harding, 120 U. S. 782, 30 L. ed. 824, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 780; Kohl v. Lehlback, 160 U. S. 293, 40 L. ed. 432, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 304; Church, Habeas Corpus, 2d ed. § 364.

Law, in its regular course of administration through courts of justice, is due process of law; and, when secured by the law of the state, the constitutional requirement is satisfied. Due process is secured by laws operating on all alike.

Maxwell v. Dow, 176 U. S. 581, 44 L. ed. 597, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 448, 494; Bergemann v. Backer, 157 U. S. 655, 39 L. ed. 845, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 727.

Mr. Justice Peckham, after making the foregoing statement, delivered the opinion of the court:

The uncontradicted facts are that this unfortunate man has been convicted of the crime of murder and sentenced to imprisonment for life, although he did not hear a word of the evidence that was given upon his trial, because of his almost total deafness, his inability to hear being such that it required a person to speak through his ear trumpet, close to his ear, in order that such person should be heard by him.

*Counsel for the appellant has cited in his [129] brief cases regarding the mode of procedure which has been sometimes adopted where, from the condition of mind of the individual to be tried, it was doubtful if he were able to understand or comprehend the proceedings of the trial, and it may well be that such a method might properly have been adopted in this case. But upon this writ the question for our determination is simply one of jurisdiction. If that were not lacking at the time of the trial, and if it continued all through, then the application for the writ was properly denied by the circuit court, and its order must be affirmed. The writ cannot perform the function of a writ of error. Ex parte Bigelow, 113 U. S. 328, 20 L. ed. 1005, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 542; Re Lennan, 166 U. S. 548, 552, 41 L. ed. 1110, 1112, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 658; Re Eckart, 166 U. S. 481, 41 L. ed. 1085, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 638.

In this case the state court had jurisdiction both of the subject-matter and of the person upon the trial of the accused, and such jurisdiction was not lost during his trial, but continued to its end, and it had jurisdiction to direct the judgment which was entered, and to have the same executed. If there were any irregularities in the trial of the appellant, because of the failure of the court to see to it that the testimony in the case was repeated to him through the ear trumpet which he had with him, it was at most an error, which did not take away from the court its jurisdiction over the subject-matter and over the person of the accused. The appellant was not deprived of his liberty without due process of law by the manner in which he was tried, so as to violate the provisions of the 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution. That amendment, it has been said by this court, "did not radically change the whole theory of the relations of the state and Federal governments to each other, and of both governments to the people." Re Kemmler, 136 U. S. 436, 448, 34 L. ed. 519, 524, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 930; Brown v. New Jersey, 175 U. S. 172, 175, 44 L. ed. 119, 120, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 77.

We are unable to see how jurisdiction was lost in this case by the manner of trial. The accused was compos mentis. No claim to the contrary is made. He knew he was being tried on account of the killing of the deceased. He had counsel, and understood the fact that he was on trial on the indict-[130] ment mentioned, *but he did not hear the evidence. He made no objection, asked for nothing, and permitted his counsel to take his own course. We see no loss of jurisdiction in all this and no absence of due process of law. It is to be regretted that the testimony was not read or repeated to him. But that omission did not affect the jurisdiction of the court.

Upon the point that the failure to have repeated to the appellant the testimony given on the trial caused the court to lose jurisdiction, the case of Re Nielsen, 131 U. S. 176, 33 L. ed. 118, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 672, is cited by appellant. We think it plain that the case does not substantiate the contention. The sentence imposed in this case was held by this court to have been beyond the jurisdiction of the trial court to pronounce, because it was against the express provisions of the Constitution, which bounds and limits all jurisdiction; but we are entirely clear that in this case the trial was so conducted that there was not at any time any lack of jurisdiction in the court, and that the most that can be urged is that there might have been an error committed by the trial court in omitting to have the evidence repeated to the appellant as it was given by the witnesses at the trial, even though no demand of the kind was made by petitioner or his counsel.

Although the conviction and punishment of the appellant under the facts appearing on this record may seem to be somewhat hard, yet this court has no jurisdiction to grant the relief asked for.

The order of the Circuit Court refusing the writ was right, and is affirmed.

v.
JAMES W. MERCER, Sheriff of Bergen County, New Jersey.

1. Habeas corpus—as substitute for writ of error.—A writ of habeas corpus cannot perform the function of a writ of error.

2. Habeas corpus — Federal interference with state administration of criminal law.—Federal courts have no power to interfere by habeas corpus with the imprisonment of a person under a judgment of conviction of a crime in a state court, if that court had jurisdiction to try the case, and jurisdiction over the person of the accused, and did not lose such jurisdiction during the trial.

3. Habeas corpus—in Federal courts.—The Federal courts will not release, on habeas corpus, a person convicted of murder in the first degree in a state court, on the theory that that court lost its jurisdiction to proceed in the trial because it charged the jury, in accordance with the admission of counsel for the accused, that the only question for their consideration was the degree of murder of which the accused was guilty.

Argued February 27, 1906. Decided March 12, 1906.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of New Jersey to review an order refusing an application for a writ of habeas corpus on behalf of a person imprisoned under conviction of murder in the first degree, entered in the Bergen County Court of Oyer and Terminer, in that state. Affirmed.

Statement by Mr. Justice Peckham:

The appellant has appealed from an order of the United States circuit court for the district of New Jersey, refusing her application for a writ of habeas corpus.

In her application for the writ, appellant stated that she had been indicted in the Bergen county court of oyer and terminer, in the state of New Jersey, in April, 1904, for the murder of one Rosa Salza, and that she had been convicted on the trial of such indictment by a jury, and sentenced to be hanged on the 19th day of May, 1904. She averred that she had been convicted without authority of law, and that her conviction was null and void, because the question of her guilt or innocence of murder was not entertained by the court or submitted to the jury, as the law of New Jersey expressly requires in all cases where parties are indicted for murder, but, on the contrary, she averred that evidence was taken in said court in said proceedings on her trial merely to determine the degree of her guilt; that her counsel, assigned by the court to represent [132]*her in said proceedings, had so stated in a petition in her behalf, made to the court of pardons of the state of New Jersey. She further said that it was stated by her counsel, in that same petition, that she had pleaded guilty when she was arraigned, but that, under the direction of the court, a plea of not guilty was entered so that evidence might be taken for the purpose of determining the degree of guilt. This averment she denied. The petitioner claimed that the proceedings were wholly unwarranted by the law of New Jersey; and that the court and her counsel proceeded under the impression that § 68 of the act for the punishment of crimes, approved March 27, 1874, which provided that "if a person indicted for murder should be convicted by confession in open court, the court should proceed by examining witnesses to determine the degree of the crime," was then in existence, whereas she said the act had been repealed in 1893, and the present law passed, which provides, "if, upon arraignment, such plea of guilty shall be offered, it shall be disregarded and a plea of not guilty entered, and a jury impaneled shall try the case in manner aforesaid." The petitioner urged in her petition that by the proceedings adopted upon her trial she was deprived of all benefit of the presumption of innocence and of reasonable doubt to which she was entitled by law, and that the questions of self-defense and manslaughter, fairly raised by her testimony, were excluded from the consideration of the jury, and the question submitted to them was limited by the court simply as to whether she was guilty of murder in the first degree or not, and the benefit of reasonable doubt was confined to that point.

A writ of error was sued out by the petitioner and her case was brought before the court of errors and appeals, the highest court of the state of New Jersey, for the purpose of review, and, after a hearing, that court refused a new trial. The case is reported in 71 N. J. L. 552, 60 Atl. 177.

It appears from the record herein that upon the trial proof was given that the petitioner stabbed the deceased with a knife a great many times in the neck and breast, [133]killing her instantly. *Counsel who had been assigned to defend the petitioner called her as a witness, and she admitted that she stabbed the deceased and killed her. She said that the deceased had a child in her arms at the time, and that the petitioner said to her that she did not want to raise any trouble, and told her to put the child away, but that the deceased had the knife in her hand, right behind her dress, and that when petitioner saw that she had the knife and that the deceased was going to stab her, petitioner took the knife and grabbed the deceased by the hair, and before deceased stabbed her she took the knife away from her and stabbed the deceased.

Upon opening for the defense her counsel said as follows:

"This defendant, when arraigned in open court, made confession of the commission of this crime, and you, gentlemen of the jury, from the evidence that has been produced on the part of the state, and that which shall be offered on the part of the defense, will simply have to determine what the degree of guilt shall be; your verdict will be either that she is guilty of the taking of the life of this woman, Mrs. Salza, with malice aforethought, premeditated, which would mean a verdict of murder in the first degree, or your verdict will be murder in the second degree; so that I find myself in a very peculiar position. It is one of those cases around which—the circumstances being such—that we stand, as it were, with only the defendant to testify. After you have heard her testimony, and possibly one or two witnesses in connection therewith, the case will then be given to you for you to determine whether this woman shall forfeit her life for the act which she committed on March 10th, last, or whether she shall suffer the penalty which the law will inflict by reason of a verdict of murder in the second degree."

After that the evidence was given on the part of the defense, and the defendant was called as a witness, and admitted the killing.

Mr. James M. Trimble argued the cause and filed a brief for appellant:

A mere inquiry to determine the degree of crime is not a trial.

People v. Noll, 20 Cal. 164.

The writ of habeas corpus cannot be used as a mere writ of error. But to deny a prisoner a constitutional right is not mere error in law, and, where the record presents such a case, the party is entitled to be discharged from imprisonment.

Re Nielsen, 131 U. S. 184, 33 L. ed. 120, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 672.

When the judge in this case limited the exercise of reasonable doubt to the first degree of murder, exclusively, he prevented the jury from considering, even in theory, the possibility of acquittal, and deprived, without sanction of law, the proceeding of its most important and characteristic feature as a criminal trial. This is not mere error. This is arbitrary authority; and it matters not how plain the evidence may be, the court is not thereby justified in assuming a disputed fact.

Wells, Questions of Law & Fact, chap. 10, § 466.

These proceedings do not constitute a trial in the constitutional sense; no verdict of a jury can condone it; here is a denial of fundamental right.

Caldwell v. Texas, 137 U. S. 697, 34 L. ed. 818, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 224.

Mr. Robert H. McCarter argued the cause and filed a brief for appellee:

The permission accorded by U. S. Rev. Stat. § 753 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 592), to Federal judges to issue writs of habeas corpus in all cases of this kind, does not justify the circuit court, or this court, on review of its action, to consider questions as on writ of error or appeal.

S. 314, 36 L. ed. 986, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 105.

Mr. Justice Peckham, after making the foregoing statement, delivered the opinion of the court:

In this case, as in that of Felts v. Murphy, decided this day [201 U. S. 123, ante, 689, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 366], the question arises on an appeal from an order of the circuit court of the United States for the district of New Jersey, refusing appellant's petition for a writ of habeas corpus. Our power to interfere in cases of this nature is limited entirely to the question of jurisdiction. If the state court had jurisdiction to try the case, and had jurisdiction over the person of the accused, and never lost such jurisdiction, the Federal circuit court was right in denying the application of petitioner for a writ, and its order must be affirmed. A writ of this nature cannot perform the function of a writ of error. We again cite the authorities referred to in the Felts Case: Ex parte Bigelow, 113 U. S. 328, 28 L. ed. 1005, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 542; Re Lennon, 166 U. S. 548, 552, 41 L. ed. 1110, 1112, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 658; Re Eckart, 166 U. S. 481, 41 L. ed. 1085, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 638.

The contention of the counsel for the petitioner is that the proceedings upon the trial, which resulted in appellant's sentence to death, did not amount to a trial at common law, or a proceeding authorized by any statute. That it was a mere inquiry to determine the degree of murder of which defendant was guilty, and hence she has never had a trial by due process of law, and the action of the state court was without jurisdiction. A perusal of the charge of the court to the jury shows that the whole case was presented to the jury upon the evidence that was produced in court. Upon all the evidence given the court stated to the jury that there was no evidence to show that the defendant killed the deceased in her necessary self-defense, and the court instructed the jury that it would not be justified in acquitting the defendant on the ground of self-defense. The court further said that there was no question *of man- [139] slaughter in the case, and that, not only as a necessary conclusion from the evidence, but upon the admitted facts in the case, the defendant was guilty of the crime of murder, and the only question left for the consideration of the jury was whether it was murder in the first degree or second degree. The court gave an extended explanation as to what constituted murder in the first degree and what constituted murder in the second degree, and stated that the defendant was guilty of murder in the second degree, unless the evidence satisfied the jury beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant intended to take the life of deceased, and that the intent was carried into execution deliberately, wilfully, and with premeditation. Finally, the court submitted to the jury the case, and instructed it to consider all the evidence according to the recollection of the jury, and giving to the evidence such weight as it possessed on the mind of the jury. The court stated it was the duty of the jury to determine whether the defendant intended to kill the deceased, and carried out that purpose wilfully, deliberately, and with premeditation. If she did, she was guilty of murder in the first degree, and it was the duty of the jury to say so. If not, then, on the admitted facts, she was guilty of murder in the second degree, and it was the duty of the jury to say that by its verdict. The jury found the petitioner guilty of murder in the first degree.

The charge of the court was the subject of review by the court of last resort of the state of New Jersey, and it was held by that court to be without error. Upon the record in this case there can, in our judgment, be no possible doubt that the petitioner has had a valid trial by a court having jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the person of the accused, and that there was no loss of jurisdiction over either at any time during the trial. What effect was to be given by the court to the admission of counsel (above set forth) was a question of law for the court to decide, and the charge of the court did not oust it of jurisdiction to pro-[140] ceed in the trial of the case. *This is to us so plain a proposition that it is unnecessary to enlarge upon it.

Having no power to review on this writ any other question than that of the jurisdiction of the court in the trial and sentence pronounced upon the verdict of guilty, and concluding that there was the necessary jurisdiction the order of the Circuit Court refusing the writ of habeas corpus is affirmed.

v.
LUDLOW MANUFACTURING COMPANY and Ludlow Cordage Company.

1. Constitutional law—due process of law—flowage of upper lands.—The due process of law guaranteed by U. S. Const., 14th Amend., is not denied an upper riparian owner by the provisions of Mass. Pub. Stat. chap. 190, giving mill owners the right to flowage to develop water power, where adequate compensation is secured to the upper owner for the resulting injury to his lands.

2. Constitutional law—due process of law—flowage of upper lands—compensation.—Compensation to an upper riparian proprietor for the damages sustained by reason of the erection of a dam by a lower mill owner, under the authority of Mass. Pub. Stat., chap. 190, must be deemed sufficiently secured to satisfy the due process of law clause of the 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution by the provisions of that statute for the recovery of the damages sustained within three years by the person whose land is "overflowed or otherwise injured" by such dam, together with an annual compensation for future damages, or, in lieu therof, a gross sum, both to be computed by the jury, and for the bringing of a new complaint if dissatisfaction exists over the amount of such annual compensation,—especially since the state court has held that no easement or title is gained in or over the upper lands, and has recognized the right to injunctive relief if other remedies prove ineffectual.

IN ERROR to the Superior Court of the State of Massachusetts for the County of Suffolk, in that state, to review a judgment entered pursuant to an order of the Supreme Judicial Court of that state, directing the dismissal of a bill to restrain the flooding of the land of an upper riparian owner as the result of the erection of a dam under the authority of the Massachusetts mill act. Modified by directing that the bill be dismissed without prejudice, or retained until plaintiff's rights shall be determined in the proceedings for damages which have been instituted, and as modified, affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Boyd B. Jones argued the cause, and, with Messrs. Charles L. Gardner and John J. Winn, filed a brief for plaintiff in error:

A refusal or failure to consider a Federal question is equivalent to a decision against the Federal right involved therein.

If it appears from the record, by clear and necessary intendment, that the Federal question must have been directly involved, so that the state court could not have given judgment without deciding it, that will be sufficient to give jurisdiction.

In Massachusetts a river above the ebb and flow of the tide is a non-navigable river, and a riparian proprietor thereon owns to the thread of the stream, subject to the right of the public to pass in boats if the river be in fact boatable, and, like other property, subject to a constitutional exercise of the police powers of the state.

A riparian owner has a private right that the waters of a non-navigable stream shall not be polluted by others so as to interfere with his reasonable use of the same for proper purposes, and for an infringement of that right he has a remedy at law and equity.

Merrifield v. Lombard, Merrifield v. Worcester, Dwight Printing Co. v. Boston, Washburn & M. Mfg. Co. v. Worcester, and Sprague v. Dorr, supra.

A riparian proprietor has a right to have the waters of a stream flow to him without an unreasonable diversion, and can maintain an action of tort for damages occasioned by a violation of such right, or a bill in equity to restrain it.

Newhall v. Ireson, 8 Cush. 595, 54 Am. E. 574; Lexington Print Works v. Canton, 171 Mass. 414, 50 N. E. 931.

A riparian proprietor has a private right to use the natural fall of the stream as it passes through his land for hydraulic purposes, and may maintain an action of tort for damages, or a bill in equity to enjoin the continuance of the obstruction to the flow, or may enter upon the premises of the wrongdoer and abate the nuisance.

The difference between the private property right of the riparian proprietor to use the natural fall of the stream for power, and his right as one of the public to use the stream for boating, is clearly shown in—

Blood v. Nashua & L. R. Corp. 2 Gray, 137, 61 Am. Dec. 444. See also Blackwell v. Old Colony R. Co. 122 Mass. 1.

A distinction exists between the common-law rights of a riparian proprietor and his rights under the mill act.

Whether an interference with property rights is a taking of property within the due process of law clause of the 14th Amendment is a Federal, and not a local, question.

Flowing the land of another under the authority of a mill act or other statute so as to deprive the owner of riparian rights, or so as to exclude him from the beneficial use of the land itself, or taking the right so to flow by such authority, is a taking of property within the due process of law clause of the 14th Amendment, entitling the owner to compensation.

A right taken is to be paid for without regard to the time when or the extent to which the taker may see fit to exercise it.

Newton v. Perry, 163 Mass. 319, 39 N. E. 1032; Imbescheid v. Old Colony R. Co. 171 Mass. 209, 50 N. E. 609.

The Massachusetts rule that the right to erect and maintain a dam to raise water for working a mill does not give to the mill owner any right to the land flowed, or take away any right from the landowner, because the latter may embank his land, and thus stop any flowage of it, or, if he chooses, he may collect of the mill owner damages in gross or annually for the flowage (Turner v. Nye, 154 Mass. 579, 14 L.R.A. 487, 28 N. E. 1048; Lowell v. Boston, 111 Mass. 454, 15 Am. Rep. 39; Williams v. Nelson, 23 Pick. 141, 34 Am. Dec. 45), is opposed to the decisions of this court, violates the 14th Amendment, and is generally condemned.

Lewis, Em. Dom. §§ 182, 183.

It overlooks the fact that the embankment by the landowner to prevent the flooding by the mill owner produces, at the former's expense, the identical results to be avoided; and eminent judges of the supreme court of Massachusetts have refused to assent to it.

Kenison v. Arlington, 144 Mass. 456, 11 N. E. 705; Turner v. Nye, supra; Isele v. Arlington Five Cents Sav. Bank, 135 Mass. 142.

The mill act authorizes depriving a person of property without due process of law within the meaning of the 14th Amendment, because, as interpreted by the state court, it authorizes the taking of the property of another without notice to the owner thereof, by acts of occupation, like the making of the excavation in the present case, so unintelligible and ambiguous as utterly to fail to indicate how much of the property of the owner was or is to be taken, or even that any of his property is to be injuriously affected.

Adequate provision for making just compensation to the owner of property taken is required by the due process of law clause of the 14th Amendment.

Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Chicago, 166 U. S. 226, 241, 41 L. ed. 979, 986, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 581; Williams v. Parker, 188 U. S. 491, 47 L. ed. 559, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 440; Mt. Hope Cemetery v. Boston, 158 Mass. 509, 35 Am. St. Rep. 515, 33 N. E. 695.

If adequate provision for payment of compensation be made, possession of property or enjoyment of right taken may be had before such payment.

Cherokee Nation v. Southern Kansas R. Co. 135 U. S. 641, 34 L. ed. 295, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 965; Backus v. Fort Street Union Depot Co. 169 U. S. 557, 42 L. ed. 853, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 445; Sweet v. Rechel, 159 U. S. 380, 40 L. ed. 188, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 43; Williams v. Parker, supra.

But the owner is entitled to reasonable, certain, and adequate provisions for obtaining compensation before his occupancy is disturbed.

Cherokee Nation v. Southern Kansas R. Co. 135 U. S. 641, 659, 34 L. ed. 295, 303, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 965.

In other words, the due process of law prescribed by the 14th Amendment requires compensation to be made or secured to the owner.

Norwood v. Baker, 172 U. S. 269, 277, 43 L. ed. 443, 447, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 187.

A provision that compensation shall be paid by an individual or business corporation, but affording merely a right of action to obtain it, does not satisfy the constitutional requirement.

Atty. Gen. v. Old Colony R. Co. 160 Mass. 62, 22 L.R.A. 112, 35 N. E. 252; Ash v. Cummings, 50 N. H. 591; Steinhart v. Superior Court, 137 Cal. 575, 59 L.R.A. 404, 92 Am. A provision that compensation shall be paid by the state, county, or city of permanent solvency, supported, as it is, by public faith and credit, and not liable to go up and down like that of an individual, is security within the constitutional requirement.

Williams v. Parker, 188 U. S. 491, 504, 47 L. ed. 559, 563, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 440; Smeaton v. Martin, 57 Wis. 364, 15 N. W. 403; Great Falls Mfg. Co. v. Garland, 25 Fed. 521; Cooley, Const. Lim. 7th ed. p. 816.

It is not sufficient that the provisions for compensation are such that it will probably be paid.

Connecticut River R. Co. v. Franklin County, 127 Mass. 50, 34 Am. Rep. 338.

The compensation must be either ascertained and paid to him (the owner) before his property is thus appropriated, or an appropriate remedy must be provided and upon an adequate fund.

Bloodgood v. Mohawk & H. R. R. Co. 18 Wend. 9, 31 Am. Dec. 313; Powers v. Bears, supra; Lewis, Em. Dom. § 459.

The intimations of this court are fully in accord with the decisions that the responsibility of a private person or corporation is not an adequate fund.

The Massachusetts mill act violates the 14th Amendment because it denies the owner of vacant land any compensation whatever for the loss—caused by flowing, under the authority of said act—of that portion of its market value arising from its adaptability for mill purposes.

This mill act is also unconstitutional because, under its provision, one riparian owner is authorized, by an act of occupation of his land, thereby to acquire the right to flow the land of an upper proprietor, and, at a later date, to abandon such taking without flowing and without liability to the upper proprietor for damages resulting from such taking, and because it does not give the owner of property taken a right to compensation simultaneous with the taking, but makes such right dependent upon the future volition of the taker.

Thompson v. Moore, 2 Allen, 350; Eames v. New England Worsted Co. 11 Met. 570; Storm v. Manchaug Co. 13 Allen, 10; Palmer Co. v. Ferrill, 17 Pick. 58; Fuller v. Chicopee Mfg. Co. 16 Gray, 46; Re Wall Street, 17 Barb. 617; Portland v. Lee Sam, 7 Or. 397; Forster v. Scott, 136 N. Y. 577, 18 L. R.A. 543, 32 N. E. 976; Driver v. Western Union R. Co. 171 Mass. 209, 50 N. E. 609.

This mill act also violates the due process of law clause of the 14th Amendment because it authorizes the flowing of the land of another, and his consequent exclusion from the use thereof for the time between the flowing and the filing and recording f the verdict, usually a period of at least two years, without first requiring the payment of, or any security by attachment or otherwise for, the damages caused during that period.

Wight v. Barnstable Sav. Bank, 123 Mass. 183; Hamilton v. Farrar, 131 Mass. 572; McNally v. Smith, 12 Allen, 455; Fuller v. Chicopee Mfg. Co. supra; Ash v. Cummings, 50 N. H. 591.

The constitutional validity of a law is to be tested, not by what has been done under it, but by what may, by its authority, be done.

Stuart v. Palmer, 74 N. Y. 183, 30 Am. Rep. 289; Montana Co. v. St. Louis Min. & Mill Co. 152 U. S. 160, 170, 38 L. ed. 398, 400, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 506; Dexter v. Boston, 176 Mass. 247, 79 Am. St. Rep. 306, 57 N. E. 379; White v. Gove, 183 Mass. 333, 67 N. E. 359.

The mill act also violates the due process of law clause of the 14th Amendment because it fails to require the payment in advance of damages accruing after the date of such verdict, or to provide any certain and definite fund out of which such damages shall be paid.

Hunt v. Whitney, 4 Met. 603; Leland v. Woorbury, 4 Cush. 245; Dean v. Colt, 99 Mass. 486.

Cases to the effect that an interference with the rights of a landowner which forces him either to have his lands flowed by a lower owner or to incur the expense of building an embankment, and thereby flow it to the same extent, is not a taking, are opposed to the decisions of this court. Eminent judges of the supreme court of Massachusetts have refused to subscribe to this doctrine, and it is generally condemned by courts of other jurisdictions as well as by learned authors.

Turner v. Nye, 154 Mass. 579, 14 L.R.A. 487, 28 N. E. 1048; Kenison v. Arlington, 144 Mass. 456, 11 N. E. 705; Isele v. *Arlington Five Cents Sav. The state, in the exercise of the police powers, may prohibit, without compensation to the owner, any use of property injurious to the health, morals, or safety of the community; but it cannot, even in such case, take such property without adequate provision for compensation, and much less can it, without compensation, deprive an owner of the right to the beneficial enjoyment of his property for general purposes, in order that another person may use such property for a single purpose.

Cole v. LaGrange, 113 U. S. 1, 28 L. ed. 896, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 416; Fallbrook Irrig. District v. Bradley, 164 U. S. 112, 41 L. ed. 369, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 56; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Nebraska, 164 U. S. 403, 41 L. ed. 489, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 130; Cary Library v. Bliss, 151 Mass. 364, 7 L.R.A. 765, 25 N. E. 902.

The case at bar is readily distinguishable from the irrigation and drainage cases, in which one of many owners in severalty of a large tract of property is compelled to pay his just share of the expense of improving the entire tract, when such improvement would otherwise be impracticable. Such regulation of the rights of ownership is based upon considerations of public welfare.

Fallbrook Irrig. District v. Bradley, supra; Wurts v. Hoagland, 114 U. S. 606, 29 L. ed. 229, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1086.

It is likewise distinguishable from those cases in which, where a general condition has made it almost essential to the growth of a state that landowners should have the right to cross the lands of other owners to obtain a supply of water necessary to the use of the land, a statute authorizing them to do so has been upheld.

Clark v. Nash, 198 U. S. 361, 49 L. ed. 1085, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 676.

In Head v. Amoskeag Mfg. Co. 113 U. S. 9, 28 L. ed. 889, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 441, this court sustained a mill act which, as is most fully set forth in Ash v. Cummings, 50 N. H. 591, required an adjudication of public utility, prepayment of damages or security for such payment, and which prohibited the erection of a dam affecting any mill on the same stream. The language of this court in the opinion is significant: "The statute does not authorize new mills to be erected to the detriment of existing mills and mill privileges. And by providing for an assessment of full compensation to the owners of lands flowed, it avoids the difficulty which arose in the case of Pumpelly v. Green Bay & M. Canal Co. supra."

A statute which deprives a mill owner of the right to develop a natural water power on his land does affect his mill.

Elting Woolen Co. v. Williams, 36 Conn. 310; Occum Co. v. A. & W. Sprague Mfg. Co. 35 Conn. 496.

In considering the constitutionality of the Massachusetts mill act, present conditions may well be held to render a statute unconstitutional which, many years before, under entirely different conditions, might have been held to be constitutional; just as the conditions in one state may support a statute which, in a different state, under different conditions, would clearly be invalid.

Stowell v. Flagg, 11 Mass. 364.

The following cases are opposed to the view that flowing, under such a mill act as the one in question, can be upheld as a taking for a public use or for the public welfare:

Ryerson v. Brown, 35 Mich. 333, 24 Am. Rep. 564; Berrien Springs Water Power Co. v. Berrien Circuit Judge, 133 Mich. 48, 103 Am. St. Rep. 438, 94 N. W. 379; Tyler v. Beacher, 44 Vt. 648, 8 Am. Rep. 398; Avery v. Vermont Electric Co. 75 Vt. 235, 59 L.R.A. 817, 98 Am. St. Rep. 818, 54 Atl. 179; Gaylord v. Sanitary District, 204 Ill. 576, 63 L.R.A. 582, 98 Am. St. Rep. 235, 68 N. The following cases contain an intimation that, if it were a new question, mill acts would be held to be unconstitutional:

Jordan v. Woodward, 40 Me. 317; Fleming v. Hull, 73 Iowa, 598, 35 N. W. 673; Harding v. Funk, 8 Kan. 315; Miller v. Troost, 14 Minn. 365, Gil. 282; Fisher v. Horicon Iron & Mfg. Co. 10 Wis. 351; Atty. Gen. v. Eau Claire, 37 Wis. 400; Murdock v. Stickney, 8 Cush. 113.

By the 14th Amendment the validity of the constitutions and statutes of the states then or thereafter existing were made subject to the test of the due process of law clause of the 14th Amendment, as interpreted by the Supreme Court of the United States.

While peculiar local conditions may exist in one state which give a public character to a use by one person of the land of another, and justify a statute in that state which would be clearly unconstitutional if enacted under dissimilar conditions (Clark v. Nash and Wurts v. Hoagland, supra), yet the 14th Amendment protects the property rights of the citizens of the United States in every state by prohibiting the taking of the same for private purposes, and by requiring an adequate provision for the payment of full compensation to owners deprived of property rights either by the exercise of the right of eminent domain or of the police powers. This court, therefore, in dealing with the case at bar, is unaffected by considerations of contemporaneous construction and acquiescence which have led different state courts to diverse conclusions.

Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Chicago, supra.

A mill act authorizing an interference with private property rights by flowing without prepayment of compensation, or security for such payment, cannot, in the Federal sense, be a violation of the 14th Amendment if enacted in New Hampshire, and cannot be in accord with that Amendment if enacted in Massachusetts.

Ash v. Cummings, 50 N. H. 591; Otis Co. v. Ludlow Mfg. Co. 186 Mass. 89, 104 Am. St. Rep. 563, 70 N. E. 1009.

Neither can a mill act enacted in Michigan be a violation of the 14th amendment because of recent enactment, and a compliance with it in Massachusetts because of ancient origin.

Ryerson v. Brown, Berrien Springs Water Power Co. v. Berrien Circuit Judge, Otis Co. v. Ludlow Mfg. Co. and Murdock v. Stickney, supra.

Nor can a Massachusetts statute be held constitutional in spite of the ambiguity in the act of taking, and a Maine act unconstitutional by reason of the same ambiguity.

Otis Co. v. Ludlow Mfg. Co. supra; Hamor v. Bar Harbor Water Co. 78 Me. 127, 3 Atl. 40.

Neither, under the 14th Amendment, can a given use under similar conditions be upheld as a public one, for the public welfare, in Massachusetts, and as a strictly private one in Vermont.

Otis Co. v. Ludlow Mfg. Co. and Avery v. Vermont Electric Co. supra.

A decision that the mill act in question is unconstitutional will not seriously affect vested interests.

Title to the water powers has been fixed by purchase, user, and acceptance of damages.

Lewis, Em. Dom. § 181.

Messrs. James B. Carroll and William H. Brooks argued the cause, and, with Mr. Walter S. Robinson, filed a brief for defendants in error:

When the parties have been heard in the regular course of judicial proceedings, an erroneous decision of a state court does not deprive the unsuccessful party of his property without due process of law, within the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States.

Walker v. Sauvinet, 92 U. S. 90, 23 L. ed. 678.

The plaintiff below had the benefit of a full and fair trial in the several courts of its own state, whose jurisdiction was invoked by itself. In those courts its rights were measured, not by laws made to affect it individually, but by general provisions of law, applicable to all those in like condition.

Marchant v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 153 U. S. 380, 38 L. ed. 751, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 894.

If the statute under which the rights of the water owners are governed provides a tribunal for the hearing of all questions involved, and provides for the assessment of damages, then there is due process of law, as required by the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States. And the regulation of the respective rights of the mill owners under that statute is a local question.

Castillo v. McConnico, 168 U. S. 674, 42 L. ed. 622, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 229.

The plaintiff elected to proceed under the statute, and, by so doing, waived its right to contest the constitutionality of the law whose aid it invoked. By proceeding under the particular statute, it acquiesced in its validity.

Hale v. Lewis, 181 U. S. 473, 45 L. ed. 959, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 677; Electric Co. v. Dow, 166 U. S. 489, 41 L. ed. 1088, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 645; Eustis v. Bolles, 150 U. S. 361, 37 L. ed. 1111, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 131; Pitkin v. Springfield, 112 Mass. 509; Baker v. Braman, 6 Hill, 47, 40 Am. Dec. 387; Dewhurst v. Allegheny, 95 Pa. 437.

A party who seeks in the state court to litigate rights, and is given an opportunity to do so, cannot raise a Federal question simply because he is unsuccessful.

Remington Paper Co. v. Watson, 173 U. S. 443, 43 L. ed. 762, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 456; Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. p. 214; Bigelow, Estoppel, p. 689.

The plaintiff, by its pleadings, took two inconsistent positions before the courts of Massachusetts, —one, that the courts of that state should take jurisdiction over the action for the purpose of construing certain sections of the statute, and the other, that the state courts were without jurisdiction under the statute, unless they construed these sections in a certain way. And the plaintiff thereby is precluded from raising the question of the violation of the Federal Constitution.

Amy v. Manning, 144 Mass. 153, 10 N. E. 737; Washburn v. Great Western Ins. Co 114 Mass. 175.

A plaintiff in a bill in equity cannot rest his claim to relief on inconsistent titles. He cannot at the same time claim relief upon the assumption that a certain law is both valid and invalid. The position of the plaintiff in this case is analogous to the position of a plaintiff who, in the same bill in equity, asserts a will to be valid, in order to claim a benefit thereunder, or invalid, in order that he may be also benefited.

Wright v. Wilkin, 4 De G. & J. 141.

If, in the opinion of the Supreme Court, the state court could have rendered judgment upon grounds not involving a Federal question, then the Supreme Court will not take jurisdiction.

Klinger v. Missouri, 13 Wall. 257, 20 L. ed. 635; Jenkins v. Loewenthal, 110 U. S. 222, 28 L. ed. 129, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 638; Chouteau v. Gibson, 111 U. S. 200, 28 L.

ed. 400, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 340; DeSaussure v. Gaillard, 127 U. S. 216, 32 L. ed. 125, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1053; Hammond v. Johnston, 142 U. S. 73, 35 L. ed. 941, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 141.

No Federal question was raised by the plaintiff's suggestion that a construction contrary to that claimed by it would be unconstitutional.

Jurisdiction is not conferred upon the Federal courts by a statement that plaintiff intends to rely upon a statute of the state, and that the statute, construed in a certain way, violates the Federal Constitution.

Boston & M. Consol. Copper & S. Min. Co. v. Montana Ore Purchasing Co. 188 U. S. 632, 639, 47 L. ed. 626, 632, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 434; Tennessee v. Union & Planters' Bank, supra; Arkansas v. Kansas & T. Coal Co. 183 U. S. 185, 46 L. ed. 144, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 47; Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. McGraw, 188 U. S. 291, 310, 47 L. ed. 480, 485, 63 L.R.A. 33, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 375.

And if we assume that the supreme judicial court of Massachusetts passed upon the Federal question and decided it adversely to the plaintiff, this does not change the rule, if the Federal question was unnecessary for the decision.

The court did not pass upon any Federal question. The only question of this kind which the court even mentioned was the question of damages, and this question did not arise in the present case, and the court so stated in its opinion.

The court was considering the question of the supposed conflict of the statute with the Massachusetts Constitution, and made no reference to any conflict between the statute and the Constitution of the United States.

Miller v. Cornwall R. Co. 168 U. S. 131, 42 L. ed. 409, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 34; Kipley v. Illinois, 170 U. S. 182, 42 L. ed. 998, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 550.

The plaintiff raised merely a moot question.

The validity of the mill acts has been assumed by the highest court of the state for more than one hundred years without dispute.

This being the construction of these statutes by the highest court of the state, such construction is conclusive on the Federal Supreme Court on a writ of error to the state court.

Manigault v. Springs, 199 U. S. 473, ante, 274, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 127.

Mr. Justice Holmes delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a bill in equity to restrain the defendants in error from flooding the plaintiff's land by means of a dam erected under the Massachusetts mill act. The injunction is asked on alternative grounds,—either that the mill act does not authorize the dam, or that, if it does, then it is contrary to the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States. The case was tried in the superior court and reported to the supreme judicial court, which held that the statute authorized the dam and was valid, and ordered the bill be dismissed. 186 Mass. 89, 104 Am. St. Rep. 563, 70 N. E. 1009. A decree was entered in accordance with the rescript, and the case then was brought here. The claim under the Constitution was dis-[151] tinctly set up *in the bill, and was insisted on at every stage. The court could not have decided as it did without overruling that claim, so that the jurisdiction of this court is clear, although it was denied.

The dam in question is built across the Chicopee river, a non-navigable stream, at Red Bridge. It was begun, in pursuance of a long previous determination, on August 3, 1899, and was completed within a reasonable time. The plaintiff owned a mill and dam, more than two miles above, and land below its dam on the two sides of the water course, down to within about 2 miles from the principal defendant's dam. On April 4, 1900, the plaintiff determined to build a dam near its lower boundary, and began the work of construction on August 11 of the same year. This dam was completed before, although it was begun after, the defendants', and will be rendered nearly or wholly useless by the back flow from the defendants' structure. The plaintiff's original dam and mill will not be interfered with. The supreme judicial court decided that, under the statute then in force (Pub. Stat. chap. 190, § 2), the principal defendant, hereinafter called the defendant, acquired the prior right, and that the statute was constitutional. It postponed the consideration of the plaintiff's rights in reference to damages, but decided that the provision for compensation was adequate to satisfy whatever rights the plaintiff might have.

The only question which it is necessary for us to consider is whether the act as construed violates the 14th Amendment. General objections to mill acts as taking property for private use or on other grounds have been disposed of by Head v. Amoskeag Mfg. Co. 113 U. S. 9. 28 L. ed. 889, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 441. See further, Clark v. Nash, 198 U. S. 361, 49 L. ed. 1085, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 676; Strickley v. Highland Boy Gold Min. Co. 200 U. S. 527, ante, 581, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 301. Such acts have been in force in Massachusetts ever since an act of 1714, chap. 15, 1 Prov. Laws, 729. The practice sanctioned by them would seem, from the recitals of that act, to have been still older. It may have begun with grist mills and may have had its justification in the public needs which exempted from military watchings [152] *and wardings one miller to each grist mill (act of 1693, chap. 3, § 13, 1 Prov. Laws, 130); and in the public duties which were expressed in the act of 1728, chap, 6, § 3, 1 Prov. Laws, 497. But, at all events, the liability of streams to this kind of appropriation and use has become so familiar a conception in New England, where water power plays as large a part as mines in Utah, that it would not be very extravagant to say that it enters as an incident into the nature of property in streams, as there understood.

However, the liability of upper land to be flowed is not a liability to be flowed without payment. The principal objection made to the law is that it makes no adequate provision for payment, if it is construed as it has been construed by the state court. There has been no substantial change in the form of this provision for the better part of a century. It reads: "A person whose land is overflowed or otherwise injured by such dam, may obtain compensation therefor upon his complaint before the superior court for the county where the land or any part thereof lies; but no compensation shall be awarded for damage sustained more than three years before the institution of the complaint." Pub. Stat. chap. 190, § 4. The jury is to take into consideration damage to other land as well as the damage to the land overflowed (§ 14). It is to assess the damages sustained within three years (§ 16), and to determine what sum, to be paid annually, would be reasonable compensation for the damages that may be occasioned thereafter, and also a sum in gross for all damages from the use of the dam in the manner fixed by it (§ 18), the jury having power to regulate the height of the dam (§ 17). The complainant is given an election to take the gross sum, in which case the owner of the dam loses all benefit of the act after three months until he pays. §§ 19, 20. Otherwise the complainant has an action for the annual compensation and a lien on the dam and lands used with it. §§ 21 et seq. And, finally, if dissatisfied with the amount of the annual compensation, he may bring a new complaint. § 30.

*In considering whether these provisions [153] are sufficient, it is important to know exactly what the upper owner loses by the dam. The state court lays it down that there is no taking under the right of eminent domain. 186 Mass. 95, 104 Am. St. Rep. 563, 70 N. E. 1009. We assume this to mean what often has been said with regard to the mill acts, that under them no easement or title of any kind is gained in or over the upper land, and that the water could be diked out, Storm v. Manchaug Co. 13 Allen, 10, 13; Lowell v. Boston, 111 Mass. 454, 466, 15 Am. Rep. 39; although the language has not been uniform, and it seems to have been held otherwise when the damages are paid in gross. Isele v. Arlington Five Cents Sav. Bank, 135 Mass. 142. Taking the law to be as stated by the court, it would follow that only the damage physically suffered is to be paid for. When a title is taken, for instance, to the waters of a stream, it is held that the whole value of the title must be paid, although a considerable use may be left in fact to the party aggrieved. Howe v. Weymouth, 148 Mass. 605, 20 N. E. 316; Imbescheid v. Old Colony R. Co. 171 Mass. 209, 50 N. E. 609. Flowage under the mill acts seems to be regarded as presenting the converse case. As no title is gained to have the water on the upper land, the dam owner pays only for the harm actually done from time to time. If this is so, somewhat less elaborate provisions might be justified than could be sustained when the title is lost. So far as security goes, looking to the reasonable probabilities in such cases, it would seem to be sufficient. We must bear in mind, as we presume the state court meant to suggest by its citation of the case of Brickett v. Haverhill Aqueduct Co. 142 Mass. 394, 397, 8 N. E. 119, that,—as was said there in words that need but little change,—if other remedies proved ineffectual, the "court would, by proceedings in equity, restrain the defendant from a further use of the water, and, if necessary, order the removal of the dam." In other words, the right to an injunction, if necessary, is taken into account in Massachusetts, in deciding whether the security for payment is sufficient, even when there

Again, we cannot wholly neglect the long settled law and common understanding of a particular state in considering the plaintiff's rights. We are bound to be very cautious in coming to the conclusion that the 14th Amendment has upset what thus has been established and accepted for a long time. Even the incidents of ownership may be cut down by the peculiar laws and usages of a state. Eldridge v. Trezevant, 160 U. S. 452, 466, 40 L. ed. 490, 498, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 345. For a century the remedy given by the statute has been supposed to be sufficient, and in 1832 it was decided to be so under a somewhat similar statute, which was held to create a servitude. Boston & R. Mill Corp. v. Newman, 12 Pick. 467, 23 Am. Dec. 622. We are not prepared to pronounce the statute void on the ground that the security for payment is not enough.

But it is argued that not all the serious damage which is or may be suffered is compensated. It is said that only damages caused by flowing can be recovered. But the cases cited only show that damages regarded as too remote on general principles are disallowed (Fuller v. Chicopee Mfg. Co. 16 Gray, 46), or that, not being within the protection of the mill acts, they are to be recovered by an action at common law (Eames v. New England Worsted Co. 11 Met. 570). And the statute now expressly provides for a "person whose land is overflowed or otherwise injured" (§ 4), and that the jury *shall take into consideration[155] any damage occasioned to other land as well as that to the land overflowed (§ 14). A graver doubt is raised by another argument. It is decided that the prior right is gained by the dam first begun, provided it is completed and put in operation within a reasonable time. If, as in the present case, the upper owner builds a dam in the meantime, it may be held that he is entitled to no compensation for its being rendered useless, even if he builds without notice of the earlier appropriation, as well might happen. On the other hand if he refrains from using his land as he desires, he may be denied compensation for being deprived of the use of his land. We do not perceive why the latter result should follow. As to the former, it may be held that, notwithstanding the priority of the lower owner, the upper owner has a right to improve his land until it actually is flowed. Otherwise the former might have it in his power to keep the latter in suspense for a year or two, and then abandon his dam. Because the plaintiff was too late to prohibit the defendant's dam, it does not follow that it may not be entitled to all the damages which it suffers when the flowing takes place. That it would be entitled to them perhaps may be inferred from Baird v. Wells, 22 Pick. 312, decided under a different statute, but still applicable so far as this principle is concerned. See further, Storm v. Manchaug Co. 13 Allen, 10, 15; Edwards v. Bruorton, 184 Mass. 529, 532, 69 N. E. 328.

The state court has confined itself to a general declaration that the act is valid, and has not expressed itself definitely upon these points. Yet our opinion upon the constitutional question may depend upon its interpretation of the statute in a case which could not be brought here. Obviously, it would be unjust that the plaintiff should be concluded upon a doubtful construction assumed by us which the state court hereafter may not adopt. Therefore it seems to us proper that this bill should be dismissed without prejudice, or retained until the plaintiff's rights shall have been determined in the proceedings for damages under the statutes, which it is admitted have been [156] *brought. The objection to the act on the ground of want of notice does not impress us except in its bearing upon the point just mentioned. The right of the lower owner only becomes complete when the land is flowed, and as, even then, it is not a right to maintain the water upon the plaintiff's land, but merely a right to maintain the dam, subject to paying for the harm actually done, we see nothing to complain of in that regard.

Decree modified and affirmed.

Argued February 19, 1906. Decided March 19, 1906.

PETITION for a writ of mandamus to require the judges of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit to take jurisdiction of the cross appeal taken by complainants from a decree of the Circuit Court for the Southern District of New York in a patent infringement suit, which, in addition to granting an injunction as to the claims of the patent held to be infringed, and sending the cause to a master for an accounting, dismissed the bill as to the claims held invalid and those found not to be infringed. Rule discharged and application denied.

Statement by Mr. Justice Brewer:

In March, 1903, the petitioners filed their bill in the circuit *court of the United [157] States for the southern district of New York against the New England Enameling Company, to restrain the further infringement by that company of letters patent of the United States, No. 527,361, for improvements in enameling metal ware, and to recover damages for past infringement. After answer and proofs, the case came on for hearing, and on July 8, 1905, a decree was entered, reciting that nine of the twelve claims in the patent were good and valid, that three were invalid and void by reason of the fact that the patentee was not the original or first inventor or discoverer, that five of the nine valid claims had been infringed by the defendant, but the remaining four had not been. As to the claims held invalid and those found to have been not infringed, it was ordered that the bill of complaint be dismissed. As to the remaining five claims,—those held to be infringed,—it was ordered that the plaintiffs recover the gains, profits, savings, and advantages which the defendant had derived by reason of the infringement, and that the case be referred to a master to report the amount thereof, and also that an injunction issue against further infringement. On August 1, 1905, the defendant appealed from said decree to the court of appeals and filed its assignment of errors. On August 8 the plaintiffs also appealed to the circuit court of appeals and assigned as errors the rulings in the decree adverse to them. On January 3, 1906, this cross appeal of the plaintiffs was dismissed by the court of appeals, on the ground that it had no jurisdiction thereof. Thereupon the plaintiffs filed in this court this petition for a writ of mandamus, commanding the judges of the circuit court of appeals to take jurisdiction of said cross appeal, and to dispose of it simultaneously with the appeal of the defendant.

Mr. Louis Marshall argued the cause, and, with Messrs. Arthur v. Briesen and Walter D. Edmonds, filed a brief for petitioners.

Mr. Robert N. Kenyon argued the cause, and, with Messrs. Walter F. Rogers and Jacob Steinhardt, filed a brief for respondents.

Mr. Justice Brewer delivered the opinion of the court:

The decree entered by the circuit court was interlocutory, and not final. Barnard v. Gibson, 7 How. 650, 12 L. ed. 857; Humiston v. Stainthorp, 2 Wall. 106, 17 L. ed. 905, and cases cited in note; Estey v. Burdett, 109 U. S. 633, 637, 27 L. ed. 1058, 1059, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 531; McGourkey v. Toledo & O. C. R. Co. 146 U. S. 536, 36 L. ed. 1079, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 170 (in this case is a full discussion of the differences between an interlocutory and a final decree); Hohorst v. Hamburg-American Packet Co. 148 U. S. 262, 37 L. ed. 443, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 590; Smith v. Vulcan Iron Works, 165 U. S. 518, 41 L. ed. 810, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 407.

Plaintiffs brought one suit upon a single patent. The findings of the circuit court that three of the twelve claims were invalid and that the remaining nine were valid, but that four of them had not been infringed by the defendant, did not break this one suit into twelve. They were a guide to the master in his ascertainment of the damages, and indicated the scope of the final decree.

In the Federal courts no appeal can, as a general rule, be taken, except from a final decree. As said by Mr. Chief Justice Taney in Forgay v. Conrad, 6 How. 201, 205, 12 L. ed. 404, 406:

"In this respect the practice of the United States chancery courts differs from the English practice. For appeals to the House of Lords may be taken from an interlocutory [161] order of *the Chancellor, which decides a right of property in dispute. . . . But the case is otherwise in the courts of the United States, where the right to appeal is by law limited to final decrees." See also McLish v. Roff, 141 U. S. 661, 665, 35 L. ed. 893, 894, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 118.

In the latter case this was held persuasive against extending the right of review given by § 5 of the circuit court of appeals act of March 3, 1891 (26 Stat. at L. 826, chap. 517, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 547), to other cases than those in which there was a final judgment or decree, although the word "final" is omitted in some of the clauses of the section.

By § 7 of that act, however, an appeal was provided from certain interlocutory orders or decrees. That section has been twice amended. 28 Stat. at L. 666, chap. 96; 31 Stat. at L. 660, chap. 803; U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 550. As it now stands it reads:

"Sec. 7. That where, upon a hearing in equity in a district court or in a circuit court, or by a judge thereof in vacation, an injunction shall be granted or continued or a receiver appointed, by an interlocutory order or decree, in a cause in which an appeal from a final decree may be taken, under the provisions of this act, to the circuit court of appeals, an appeal may be taken from such interlocutory order or decree granting or continuing such injunction or appointing such receiver to the circuit court of appeals: Provided, That the appeal must be taken within thirty days from the entry of such order or decree, and it shall take precedence in the appellate court; and the proceedings in other respects in the court below shall not be stayed unless otherwise ordered by that court, or by the appellate court or a judge thereof, during the pendency of such appeal: Provided, further, That the court below may, in its discretion, require, as a condition of the appeal, an additional bond."

It will be noticed that the appeal is allowed from an interlocutory order or decree granting or continuing an injunction, that it must be taken within thirty days, that it is given precedence in the appellate court, that the other proceedings in the lower court are not to be stayed, and that the lower *court may [162] require an additional bond. Obviously that which is contemplated is a review of the interlocutory order, and of that only. It was not intended that the cause as a whole should be transferred to the appellate court prior to the final decree. The case, except for the hearing on the appeal from the interlocutory order, is to proceed in the lower court as though no such appeal had been taken, unless otherwise specially ordered. It may be true, as alleged by petitioners, that "it is of the utmost importance to all of the parties in said cause that there shall be the speediest possible adjudication by the United States circuit court of appeals as to the validity of all of the claims of the aforesaid letters patent which are the subject-matter thereof." But it was not intended by this section to give to patent or other cases in which interlocutory decrees or orders were made any precedence. It is generally true that it is of importance to litigants that their cases be disposed of promptly, but other cases have the same right to early hearing. And the purpose of Congress in this legislation was that there be an immediate review of the interlocutory proceedings, and not an advancement generally over other litigation.

Petitioners rely mainly on Smith v. Vulcan Iron Works, 165 U. S. 518, 41 L. ed. 810, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 407. In that case it was held that when an appeal is taken from an interlocutory order granting or continuing an injunction, the whole of the order is taken up, and the appellate court may (if, upon an examination of the record, as thus presented, it is satisfied that the bill is entirely destitute of equity) direct a dismissal, and is not limited to a mere reversal of the order granting or continuing the injunction. Take an ordinary patent case. If an injunction is granted by an interlocutory order and the order is taken on appeal to the circuit court of appeals, and that court is of opinion that the patent is, on its face, absolutely void, it would be a waste of time and an unnecessary continuance of litigation to simply enter an order setting aside the injunction and remanding the case for further proceedings. The direct and [163] obvious way is to order *a dismissal of the case, and thus end the litigation. And such is the scope of the opinion in that case. After noticing the general rule that appeals will not lie until after final decree, and that an order or decree in a patent case granting an injunction and sending the cause to a master for accounting is interlocutory only, and therefore not reviewable on appeal before the final decree in the case, it referred to the provision of § 7, and said (p. 525, L. ed. p. 812, Sup. Ct. Rep. p. 410):

"The manifest intent of this provision, read in the light of the previous practice in the courts of the United States, contrasted with the practice in courts of equity of the highest authority elsewhere, appears to this court to have been, not only to permit the defendant to obtain immediate relief from an injunction, the continuance of which throughout the progress of the cause might seriously affect his interests, but also to save both parties from the expense of further litigation, should the appellate court be of opinion that the plaintiff was not entitled to an injunction because his bill had no equity to support it."

But nowhere in the opinion is it intimated that the plaintiff was entitled to take any cross appeal or to obtain a final decree in the appellate court. This view of the scope of § 7 was reaffirmed in Mast, F. & Co. v. Stover Mfg. Co. 177 U. S. 485, 494, 495, 44 L. ed. 856, 860, 861, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 708.

It is suggested that, as to the claims held to be invalid and those held to be valid, but not infringed, the bill was dismissed; that thus, in fact, a final decree was entered which entitled the plaintiff to an appeal. Forgay v. Conrad, 6 How. 201, 205, 12 L. ed. 404, 406, and Hill v. Chicago & E. R. Co. 140 U. S. 52, 35 L. ed. 331, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 690, are cited as authorities. In both these cases there were several defendants and the decrees were adjudged final only in respect to certain of the defendants. In the first the circuit court passed a decree declaring sundry deeds to be fraudulent and void and directing the lands and slaves therein mentioned to be delivered up to the complainant, and also directing one of the defendants named in the decree to pay him $11,000, and "that the complainant *do have [164] execution for the several matters aforesaid, in conformity with law and the practice prescribed by the rules of the Supreme Court of the United States." The court refused to dismiss the appeal, holding that, while the decree was not final in the strict technical sense of the term, yet, in view of the effect of the orders entered, and the fact that unless review was granted at once there might be irreparable injury, the decree must be regarded as final to that extent. At the same time it criticised the terms of the decree, said that the final orders should have been delayed until the master's report was received, and added, after its comments upon the procedure below (p. 206, L. ed. p. 406):

"These remarks are not made for the purpose of censuring the learned judge by whom this decree was pronounced, but in order to call the attention of the circuit courts to an inconvenient practice into which some of them have sometimes fallen, and which is regarded by this court as altogether inconsistent with the objects and policy of the acts of Congress in relation to appeals, and at the same time needlessly burdensome and expensive to the parties concerned, and calculated, by successive appeals, to produce great and unreasonable delays in suits in chancery. For it may well happen that, when the accounts are taken and reported by the master, this case may again come here upon exceptions to his report, allowed or disallowed by the circuit court, and thus two appeals made necessary, when the matters in dispute could more conveniently and speedily and with less expense have been decided in one."

In the subsequent case of Beebe v. Russell, 19 How. 283, 15 L. ed. 668, in which the rule in reference to the finality of decrees was further considered, it was said, in explanation of the decision in the Forgay Case (p. 287, L. ed. p. 669):

"In Forgay's Case, it [the question] was made upon the decree given by the court below, and it was adjudged by this court to be final to give this court jurisdiction of it. But it was so, upon the ground that the whole merits of the controversy between the parties had been determined, that exe- [165] *cution had been awarded, and that the case had been referred to the master merely for the purpose of adjusting the accounts. The fact is, the order of the court in that case for referring it to a master was peculiar, making it doubtful, if it could in any way control or qualify the antecedent decree of the court upon the whole merits of the controversy, or modify it in any way, except upon a petition for a rehearing."

In Hill v. Chicago & E. R. Co. 140 U. S. 52, 35 L. ed. 331, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 690, there had been an order of dismissal in favor of some of defendants, together with a reference to a master of a separable controversy between the plaintiff and other parties, and the court observed (p. 54, L. ed. p. 332, Sup. Ct. Rep. p. 691):

"But there was no adjudication as to the payment of the amount to be ascertained by the master; that remained unsettled. It was, however, a severable matter from the other subjects of controversy, and did not affect their determination. The fact that it was not disposed of did not change the finality of the decree as to the defendants against whom the bill was dismissed: that amount, or to whom made payable, did not concern them. They were no longer parties to the suit for any purpose. The appeal from the subsequent decree did not reinstate them. All the merits of the controversy pending between them and the complainant were disposed of, and could not be again reopened except on appeal from that decree. As to the other parties, it remained to ascertain the amount of one item and to determine as to its payment."

But, as held in Hohorst v. Hamburg-American Packet Co. 148 U. S. 262, 37 L. ed. 443, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 590, that rule does not apply to cases where the liability of the defendants is alleged to be joint; and, therefore, cannot to a case in which there is but a single defendant.

The rule is discharged, and the application for a writ of mandamus is denied.

A. LESCHEN & SONS ROPE COMPANY, Appt.,
v.
BRODERICK & BASCOM ROPE COMPANY.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 166–172.)

Trademark — registration — indefiniteness of description.—The description of a trademark for wire rope as "a red or other distinctively colored streak applied to or woven in a wire rope" is too indefinite to be the subject of registration under the act of March 3, 1881 (21 Stat. at L. 502, chap. 138, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3401), as a trademark.

Argued March 1, 1906. Decided March 19, 1906.

APPEAL from the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit to review a decree affirming a decree of the Circuit Court for the Eastern District of Missouri, sustaining a demurrer to, and dismissing, a bill to restrain the infringement of an alleged trademark for wire rope. Affirmed.

See same case below, 67 C. C. A. 418, 134 Fed. 571.

Statement by Mr. Justice Brown:

This was a bill in equity brought in the circuit court for the eastern district of Missouri by the appellant, a Missouri corporation, against the appellee, another Missouri corporation, for the infringement of a trademark for wire rope, registered under the act of Congress of March 3, 1881 (21 Stat. at L. 502, chap. 138, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3401).

The bill alleged that the plaintiff, the A. Leschen & Sons Rope Company, in 1888 had "adopted for its use as a trademark for its highest and best grade of wire rope, a strand of a different color from the other strands of the rope, the said trademark then and now being effected by your orator by painting one of the strands of the rope so as to make it distinctly unlike the other strands of the rope;" that it had continuously used the trademark to the present day; that it had been extensively advertised; that its sale had been very great, and that the company had obtained, December 4, 1900, a registration of such trademark in the office of the Commissioner of Patents.

The bill further averred that early in the year 1900 the defendant company "commenced to paint one of the strands of its wire rope so as to make it of a distinctly different color from the other strands of the rope;" that on October 31, 1900, it applied to the Commissioner of Patents for a registration; that the Commissioner declared an interference with the plaintiff, upon which [168] proofs were taken, the case fully argued, and plaintiff was declared to be the first to adopt the trademark; that notwithstanding this, defendant continued its unlawful use of this trademark with the intent to defraud plaintiff, to deceive the public, and to take unfair advantage of the demand for plaintiff's wire ropes, and that said mark is being used by said defendant to make sales of rope upon the strength of plaintiff's reputation. The bill further alleged the use of the trademark by both parties in commerce between the United States and foreign countries.

Defendant demurred on the ground that the trademark set up in the bill was not a lawful and valid trademark. The demurrer was sustained, the bill dismissed (123 Fed. 149), and the decree of the circuit court affirmed by the circuit court of appeals. 67 C. C. A. 418, 134 Fed. 571.

Mr. Melville Church argued the cause, and, with Messrs. Hervey S. Knight, J. C. Jones, and George H. Knight, filed a brief for appellant.

No counsel appeared for appellee.

Mr. Justice Brown delivered the opinion of the court:

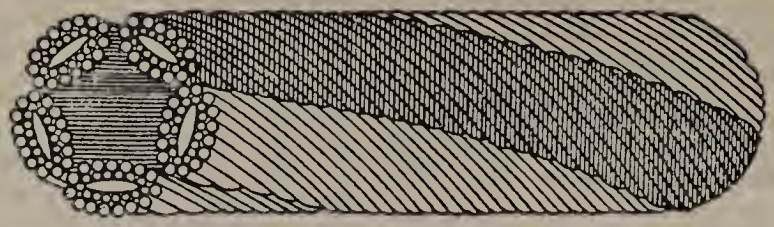
As both parties are citizens of the state of Missouri, the jurisdiction of the circuit court can only be sustained upon the theory that the case is one arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States.

By an act of Congress of July 8, 1870 (16 Stat. at L. 198–210, § 77, chap. 230), to revise the statutes relating to patents and copyrights (Rev. Stat. § 4937), permission was given citizens of the United States and some others, "who are entitled to the exclusive use of any lawful trademark, or who intend to adopt and use any trademark for exclusive use within the United States," to obtain registration of such trademark in the Patent Office; and by act of August 14, 1876 (19 Stat. at L. 141, chap. 274), a punishment was provided for a fraudulent use of such trademarks by others. But in the Trademark Cases, 100 U. S. 82, 25 L. ed. 550, this legislation was declared to be unconstitutional, upon the ground that it was intended to embrace all commerce, including that between citizens of the same state; and it was held that, if the power of Congress extended to the registration of trademarks at all, it must be limited to their use in commerce with foreign nations and between the several states and with the Indian tribes.

Apparently in consequence of this decision, Congress, by act of March 3, 1881 (21 Stat. at L. 502, chap. 138, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3401), passed a new act, declaring that the "owners of trademarks used in commerce with foreign nations, or with the Indian tribes, provided such owners shall *be[170] domiciled in the United States, or located in any foreign country, or tribes, which by treaty, convention, or law affords similar privileges to citizens of the United States, may obtain registration of such trademarks . . . by causing to be recorded in the Patent Office a statement specifying name, domicil, location, and citizenship of the party applying; . . . a description of the trademark itself with facsimiles thereof, and a statement of the mode in which the same is applied and affixed to goods," etc.



The registration of the trademark in question contains the following description:

"The trademark consists of a red or other distinctively colored streak applied to or woven in a wire rope. The color of the streak may be varied at will, so long as it is distinctive from the color and body of the rope.

"The essential feature of the trademark is the streak of distinctive color produced in or applied to a wire rope.

"This mark is usually applied by painting one strand of the wire rope a distinctive color, usually red."

It is true that the drawing annexed to the registration, a copy of which is here given, as well as the exhibits furnished, show one of the strands colored red; and if the trademark were restricted to a strand thus colored, perhaps it might be sustained; but the description of a colored streak, which would be answered by a streak of any color painted spirally with the strand, longitudinally across the strands, or by a circular streak around the rope, was held by both courts, and we think properly, too indefinite to be the subject of a valid trademark. Certainly a trademark could not be [171] claimed of a rope, the entire *surface of which was colored; and if color be made the essential feature, it should be so defined, or connected with some symbol or design, that other manufacturers may know what they may safely do. Upon the plaintiff's theory, a wire rope containing a streak of any description or of any color would be an infringement, and a manufacturer honestly desiring to distinguish his wire rope from that of the plaintiff's by difference in color might, by adopting a white streak running along the length of the rope across the strands, find himself an infringer, when his real object may have been to obtain a mark which would distinguish his manufacture from that of the plaintiff's. Even if it were conceded that a person might claim a wire rope colored red or white, or any other color, it would clearly be too broad to embrace all colors. So, although it might be possible to claim the imprint of a colored figure on a wire rope, the figure should be so described that other manufacturers would know how to avoid it. If the trademark be a colored streak, it should be, at least, described, and a statement of the mode in which the same is applied and affixed to the rope; and a trademark which may be infringed by a streak of any color, however applied, is manifestly too broad.

It would not aid plaintiff's case even if it were shown that it made use of a colored strand, and that defendant made use of a strand similarly colored, since the trademark must stand or fall in its entirety, and if the description therein be too broad, it cannot be sustained by showing that defendant imitated its color and its method of applying it. Perhaps, however, the defendant might be liable under a bill framed upon the theory that it was endeavoring to dispose of its goods as those of the plaintiff.

Whether mere color can constitute a valid trademark may admit of doubt. Doubtless it may, if it be impressed in a particular design, as a circle, square, triangle, a cross, or a star. But the authorities do not go farther than this. In the case of Re Hanson's Trademark, L. R. 37 Ch. Div. 112, in which a trademark was claimed for a red, white, and blue label, in imitation *of the French [172] tri-color, for French coffee, it was held not entitled to registration under the English statute, which requires a trademark to be distinctive in order to be valid. The court remarked as follows:

"It is the plain intention of the act that, where the distinction of the mark depends upon color, that will not do. You may register a mark, which is otherwise distinctive, in color, and that gives you the right to use it in any color you like; but you can not register a mark of which the only distinction is the use of a color, because practically, under the terms of the act, that would give you a monopoly of all the colors of the rainbow."

It is unnecessary to express an opinion whether, if the trademark had been restricted to a strand of rope distinctively colored, it would have been valid. As already observed, the claim is much broader than this. Nor can we assume jurisdiction of this case as one wherein the defendant had made use of plaintiff's device for the purpose of defrauding the plaintiff and palming off its goods upon the public as of the plaintiff's manufacture. Our jurisdiction depends solely upon the question whether plaintiff has a registered trademark, valid under the act of Congress, and, for the reasons above given, we think it has not.

Affirmed.

*ST. LOUIS DRESSED BEEF & PROVI- [173] SION COMPANY

v.

MARYLAND CASUALTY COMPANY.

Insurance—employer's liability—effect of compromise of suit.—The amount paid by an employer in the prudent settlement of suits against it, founded on the negligence of an employee, may be recovered from the insurer against loss because of such negligence, who had denied all liability, and refused to defend the suits, as provided in the policy, although such policy contains a condition against compromising any claim without the written consent of the insurer, and provides that no action shall lie against the insurer as respects any loss under the policy unless it shall be brought by the assured himself, to reimburse him for loss actually sustained and paid by him in satisfaction of a judgment after trial of the issue.

Argued March 7, 1906. Decided March 19, 1906.

ON A CERTIFICATE from the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit, presenting questions respecting a right to recover, under a policy insuring an employer against loss because of the negligence of an employee, the amount paid in a compromise, in violation of the conditions of the policy, of suits brought against the insured, founded on such negligenee, where the insurer had denied all liability, and refused to defend the suits, as provided in the policy. Answered by upholding the right of recovery.

Statement by Mr. Justice Holmes:

This case was brought here on the following certificate:

"The judgment which the writ of error challenges sustained a demurrer to the petition and dismissed the action. The plaintiff in its petition alleged the existence of these faets: The plaintiff is a corporation of the state of Missouri, and the defendant is a corporation of the state of Maryland. On June 16, 1900, the defendant, in consideration of the payment of $168, issued to the plaintiff a policy which contained these provisions: 'In consideration of the application for this policy, a copy of which is hereto attaehed and which is made [174] part *of this contract, and of one hundred sixty-eight dollars ($168) premium, Maryland Casualty Company, of Baltimore, Maryland (hereinafter called "the company"), does hereby agree to indemnify St. Louis Dressed Beef & Provision Company of St. Louis, county of——, state of Missouri, hereinafter called "the assured," for the term of one year, beginning on the 5th day of July, 1900, at noon, and ending on the 5th day of July, 1901, at noon, standard time, at the place where this policy has been countersigned, against loss from common-law or statutory liability for damages on account of bodily injuries, fatal or non-fatal, accidentally suffered by any person or persons, and caused through the negligence of the assured, by means of the horses or vehicles in his services, and the use thereof, as described in the application, and while in the charge of the assured or his employees. Provided, however, that:

" 'A. The company's liability for an accident resulting in injuries to, or in the death of, one person, is limited to five thousand dollars ($5,000) and subject to the same limit for each person; the total liability for any one accident resulting in injuries to, or in the death of, any number of persons is limited to ten thousand dollars ($10,000).

" 'This insurance is subject to the following conditions, which are to be eonstrued as conditions precedent of this contract:

" '1. The assured, upon the oeeurrence of an accident, shall give immediate notice thereof in writing, with full particulars, to the home office of any elaim which may be made on account of such accident.

" '2. If thereafter any suit is brought against the assured to enforce a claim for damages on account of an accident covered by this policy, immediate notice thereof shall be given to the company, and the company will defend against such proceeding, in the name and on behalf of the assured, or settle the same at its own cost, unless it shall elect to pay the assured the indemnity provided for in clause "A" of special agreements, as limited therein.

*" '3. The assured shall not settle any [175] claim, exeept at his own cost, nor incur any expense, nor interfere in any negotiation for settlement or in any legal proceeding, without the consent of the company, previously given in writing, but he may provide at the time of the aceident such immediate surgical relief as is imperative. The assured, when requested by the company, shall aid in securing information and evidenee, and in effeeting settlements, and in case the company calls for the attendance of any employee or employees as witnesses at inquests and in suits, the assured will secure his or their attendance, making no charge for his or their loss of time.'

" '8. No action shall lie against the company as respects any loss under this policy unless it shall be brought by the assured himself to reimburse him for loss actually sustained and paid by him in satisfaction of a judgment after trial of the issue. No such action shall lie unless brought within the period within whieh a claimant might sue the assured for damages unless, at the expiry of such period, there is such an action pending against the assured, in which case an action may be brought against the company by the assured within thirty days after final judgment has been rendered and satisfied as above. In no case except that of minors shall any action lie against the company after the expiration of six years from the date of the given injuries or death. The company does not prejudice by this clause any defenses to such action which it may be entitled to make under this policy.

"'This policy shall only cover losses sustained by and liability for any claims against the assured as a result of the risk specified in the contract or contracts hereto attached, and is issued and accepted upon the condition that all the provisions printed on the slip or slips attached to this policy are accepted and shall be fulfilled by the assured as part of this contract as fully as if they were recited at length over the signatures hereto affixed.'

"The portion of the policy hereinbefore quoted, commencing with the words 'against [176]loss from common-law or statutory *liability' and ending with the words 'entitled to make under this policy,' at the close of paragraph numbered 8, were printed on the slip attached to the policy.

"On May 25, 1901, the plaintiff became liable for damages on account of bodily injuries accidentally suffered by Mrs. Nellie Heideman, and caused through the negligence of the plaintiff by means of a horse and vehicle in its service and the use thereof, as described in the application for the policy, and while in charge of one John Berry, who was one of the plaintiff's employees. The plaintiff immediately gave the defendant notice of the accident and of the fact that Nellie Heideman made a claim against the plaintiff for damages on account of the bodily injuries she had suffered from the accident, and that Henry Heideman, her husband, also made a claim for damages against it on account of the loss of the services of his wife and of the expenses of physicians and nurses which resulted to him from her bodily injuries. On August 16, 1901, the defendant notified the plaintiff that it denied that it was liable to it on account of the damages resulting from the accident under its policy because, as it alleged, the driver of the plaintiff's wagon was not an employee of the plaintiff, but the fact was that this driver was an employee of the plaintiff, and the accident and the damages were covered by the policy. On November 23, 1901, Nellie Heideman sued the plaintiff for $10,000 damages on account of the bodily injuries to her caused by the negligence of the plaintiff's driver and by the accident, and Henry Heideman brought an action against it for $3,000 damages, which he alleged he sustained from the same cause. On November 29, 1901, the plaintiff in writing notified the defendant of the commencement of these suits, and requested it to undertake the defense of said suits as its said policy provides it would do. But the defendant declined to undertake the defense, upon the alleged ground that its policy did not cover the accident or the claims, while the fact was that it covered both. The injuries to Mrs. Heideman were, among others, the breaking of her right hip-joint socket bone, were serious and permanent, and *the plaintiff was liable for dam- [177]ages in each of the suits. It feared heavy judgments if the actions were permitted to proceed to trial. Thereupon, on April 15, 1902, it compromised the suits, and paid Mrs. Heideman $2,000 damages and her husband $500 damages on account of the injuries caused by the accident and the negligence of its driver.

"The petition also contained the following averments: 'The plaintiff served on defendant a written notice, notifying it of the terms of settlement offered by said Nellie Heideman and Henry Heideman for the injuries sustained and damages suffered by them respectively, as aforesaid, and that plaintiff proposed to accept said settlements and pay said amounts, and to hold defendant responsible for such payment under its aforesaid policy; that defendant interposed no objection to said proposed settlements, relying upon its said disclaimer of any liability under said policy by reason of its alleged claim that the driver of said wagon was not in the employ of the plaintiff herein; and that said defendant, by reason of the said denial and disclaimer of any liability, waived all the conditions of the said policy as herein set forth. Plaintiff further states that by reason of defendant's failure and refusal to defend said actions brought by Nellie Heideman and Henry Heideman against plaintiff, and by reason of the waiver aforesaid, it was obliged to and did defend said actions and employed counsel for that purpose, at an expense of two hundred and fifty dollars ($250.00), and that said employment of counsel was reasonably necessary, and that said sum of $250.00 is the reasonable value of said services so performed.'

"And the circuit court of appeals for the eighth circuit further certifies that the following questions of law are presented by the assignment of errors in this case, that their decision is indispensable to a decision of this case, and that to the end that this court may properly decide the issues of law presented it desires the instruction of the Supreme Court of the United States upon the following questions:

"1. Did the denial of all liability by the assurer and its refusal *to defend the suits [178]in the name and on behalf of the assured, as provided by paragraph 2 of the policy, constitute such a breach of the contract on its part that it released the assured from its agreement in paragraph 3, that it would not settle any claim except at its own cost without the consent of the assurer, previously given in writing, and from the provision of paragraph 8, that no action should lie against the assurer as respects any loss unless for loss actually sustained and paid by the assured in satisfaction of a judgment after trial of the issue?

"2. Were the provisions of paragraphs 3 and 8 of the policy, that the assured should not settle any claim except at its own cost, without the consent of the assurer, previously given in writing, and that no action should lie against the assurer as respects any loss under the policy unless brought by the assured to reimburse it for loss actually sustained and paid by it in satisfaction of a judgment after trial of the issue, waived by the assurer's denial of liability under the policy, and by its failure and refusal to defend the suits against the assured, according to the provision in paragraph 2?

"3. Did the compromise by the assured of the suits against it after the assurer denied liability and refused to defend them, and the payment by the assured of the damages claimed of it pursuant to the compromise, without the consent of the assurer and without the rendition of a judgment or a trial of the issues, prevent the assured from seeuring any recovery of the assurer upon the policy on aecount of the negligence, accident, and injuries described?

"4. Considering the terms of the policy, is the right of the assurer to insist upon the condition of paragraph 8 respecting the rendition of judgment after trial and its satisfaction by the assured dependent upon the assurer's defense of the action against the assured, according to the provision in paragraph 2?

"5. Considering the terms of the policy, is the assurer's denial of liability under the policy a waiver of the condition in paragraph 8 respecting the rendition of judgment after trial and its satisfaction by the assured?

[179] *"6. Under the terms of the policy, may the liability of the assured to the injured person and the extent of that liability be litigated in the first instance in an action between the assured and the assurer, where the assurer has denied its liability under the policy, and has refused to defend an action brought against the assured by the injured person?"

Mr. Ford W. Thompson argued the cause, and, with Messrs. William B. Thompson and Ralph Crews, filed a brief for the St. Louis Dressed Beef & Provision Company:

This contract of insurance is one in whieh the insurer agreed not only to indemnify against loss or damage, but also to indemnify the assured against liability for loss or damages.

Fenton v. Fidelity & C. Co. 36 Or. 283, 48 L.R.A. 770, 56 Pac. 1096; American Surety Co. v. Pauly, 170 U. S. 133, 42 L. ed. 977, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 552; Hoven v. Employers' Liability Assur. Corp. 93 Wis. 201, 32 L.R.A. 388, 67 N. W. 46.

A judgment against an indemnitee, after notice to the insurer to defend suit, is conclusive of the amount and liability.

16 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 180, note 4; Showers v. Wadsworth, 81 Cal. 270, 22 Pac. 663.

Such a judgment, without any notice to an indemnitor, is presumptive evidence of liability and its amount only.

16 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 180, note 5; Kansas City, M. & B. R. Co. v. Southern R. News Co. 151 Mo. 373, 45 L.R.A. 380, 74 Am. St. Rep. 545, 52 S. W. 205; Laing v. Hanson (Tex. Civ. App.) 36 S. W. 116.

The provision for the judgment and its payment is of the same nature and effect as the provision in fire insurance policies for a determination of amount and liability by arbitration, and that such arbitration shall be a condition precedent to any right of action in law or in equity to recover for such loss. Such contracts are valid and binding as long as the indemnitor proceeds in accordance with them, and does not deny its liability.

Hamilton v. Liverpool & L. & G. Ins. Co. 136 U. S. 242, 252, 34 L. ed. 419, 422, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 945.

But they are ineffective and are waived when the insurer denies all liability.

Wainer v. Milford Mut. F. Ins. Co. 153 Mass. 335, 11 L.R.A. 598, 26 N. E. 877; Savage v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 12 Mont. 458, 33 Am. St. Rep. 591, 31 Pac. 66; Pencil v. Home Ins. Co. 3 Wash. 485, 28 Pac. 1031.

A denial of all liability waives the provision that no action can be maintained until sixty days after proofs of loss, and makes it available immediately.

Tayloe v. Merchants' F. Ins. Co. 9 How. 390, 403, 13 L. ed. 187, 192; California Ins. Co. v. Gracey, 15 Colo. 70, 22 Am. St. Rep. 376, 24 Pac. 577; 4 Joyce, Ins. § 3211.

A denial of liability waives the provision requiring proof of loss by fire, and avoids the provision that no action shall be maintained until sueh proofs have been furnished.

Knickerbocker L. Ins. Co. v. Pendleton, 112 U. S. 696, 710, 28 L. ed. 866, 870, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 314; 4 Joyce, Ins. § 3257.

The provision in a policy that no suit or action against this company for recovery of any claim for loss by virtue of this policy shall be sustained in any court of law or chancery unless award of loss by arbitration, as herein provided for, shall have been first returned, is waived by a denial of all liability, and an action is then at once maintainable.

Bailey v. Ætna Ins. Co. 77 Wis. 336, 46 N. W. 440.

The general rule is that arbitration, appraisal, and all other acts which are made conditions precedent to an action upon a contract of insurance, are waived by a denial of all liability.

Beach, Ins. § 1244.

Messrs. George Weems Williams and Frank Gosnell argued the cause and filed a brief for the Maryland Casualty Company:

In contracts of indemnity, where the obligation is to perform some specific thing or to save the obligee from a charge or liability, it seems the contract is broken when there is a failure to do the specific act, or when such charge or liability is incurred.

But where the obligation is that the party indemnified shall not sustain damage or molestation by reason of the acts or omissions of another, or by reason of any liability incurred through such acts or omissions, there is no breach until actual damage is sustained.

And, in such cases, a judgment recovered against the party indemnified on account of the acts or neglect of another for which he is answerable, without payment of the judgment, or some part thereof, does not entitle him to sustain an action against the indemnitors.

Frye v. Bath Gas & Electric Co. 97 Me. 241, 59 L.R.A. 444, 94 Am. St. Rep. 500, 54 Atl. 395; Travelers Ins. Co. v. Moses, 63 N. J. Eq. 260, 92 Am. St. Rep. 663, 49 Atl. 720; Finley v. United States Casualty Co. 113 Tenn. 592, 83 S. W. 2; Cushman v. Carbondale Fuel Co. 122 Iowa, 656, 98 N. W. 509; O'Connell v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 187 Mass. 272, 72 N. E. 979; Munro v. Maryland Casualty Co. 96 N. Y. Supp. 705; Henderson v. Maryland Casualty Co. 29 Pa. Super. Ct. 398; Connolly v. Bolster, 187 Mass. 266, 72 N. E. 981.

The policy should be construed as though entered into between individuals.

An elementary remark or two will do something toward answering these questions. The form of the declaration does not appear, but we may suppose a count upon the casualty company's refusal to defend the suit against the plaintiff. If the defendant's contention is right, that breach made it impossible for the plaintiff to entitle itself to the payment promised in the policy according to its terms. But the defendant could not set *itself free by so[181] simple a device. In general, when one party, by his fault, prevents the other party to a contract from entitling himself to a benefit under it according to its terms, the former is liable for the value of that benefit, less the value or cost of what the plaintiff would have had to do to get it. In this case the plaintiff had nothing more to do or to pay after it had been compelled to satisfy the claim against it. And therefore on general principles, it would be entitled to demand the whole amount which the jury might find that it would have received had the contract been performed. Hinckley v. Pittsburgh Bessemer Steel Co. 121 U. S. 264, 30 L. ed. 967, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 875.

It is suggested, to be sure, that the plaintiff should have defended the suit against it. But not only was that not one of the plaintiff's undertakings, but it was expressly forbidden to the plaintiff by the contract, as no doubt the defendant would have pointed out had that course been taken. Moreover, the defendant, by its refusal, cut at the very root of the mutual obligation, and put an end to its right to demand further compliance with the supposed term of the contract on the other side. The only concern of the plaintiff was to establish reasonable ground for believing that if the defendant had not broken its contract it would have been called on to make a payment to the plaintiff, and how much that payment would have been.

Looking at the substance of the matter, it makes no practical difference, no difference in the amount of the defendant's liability, whether we say that the defendant, by its conduct, made performance of the conditions by the plaintiff impossible, and therefore was chargeable for the sum which it would have had to pay if those conditions had been performed, or answer, in the language of the questions, that performance of the conditions was waived. The sole difference would be in the form of the declaration. In either case the plaintiff would declare upon the policy, only the breaches assigned would not be the same. In the former, the breach would be the refusal to defend; in the latter, the refusal to pay. If it is necessary to consider *the question in[182] a technical aspect, we think that the plaintiff was entitled to treat the contract as on foot, notwithstanding the defendant's act, and go on with it cy-près. Under the circumstances it could not comply literally with the words, and was justified in doing the best thing that could be done for the interest of both. The defendant, by its abdication, put the plaintiff in its place, with all its rights. To limit its liability as if its only promise was to pay a loss paid upon a judgment is to neglect the meaning and purpose of the reference to a judgment, and even the words of the promise. The promise in form is to indemnify against loss by certain kinds of liability. The judgment contemplated in the condition is a judgment in a suit defended by the defendant in case it elects not to settle. The substance of the promise is to pay a loss which the plaintiff shall have been compelled to pay, after such precautions and with such safeguards as the defendant may insist upon. It saw fit to insist upon none.

We assume that the settlement was reasonable, and that the plaintiff could not expect to escape at less cost by defending the suits. If this were otherwise, no doubt the defendant would profit by the fact. The defendant did not agree to repay a gratuity, or more than fairly could be said to have been paid upon compulsion. But a sum paid in the prudent settlement of a suit is paid under the compulsion of the suit as truly as if it were paid upon execution.

But there is another aspect of the eighth condition of the slip which requires a few words more. It is said that this condition expressly contemplates a breach of contract by the company, and defines the plaintiff's rights in that case. The words "no action shall lie against the company as respects any loss under this policy unless," etc., certainly do contemplate a case in court in which the company may turn out to be in the wrong, and therefore technically guilty of a breach of contract. But notwithstanding the contrary suggestion in Sanders v. Frankfort Marine, Acci. & Plate Glass Ins. Co. 72 N. H. 485, 498, 499, 101 Am. St. Rep. 688, 57 Atl. 655, we think that the only [183] breach which that condition has *in view is a refusal by the company to pay after the decision in a case of which it has taken charge, when, notwithstanding the judgment, it conceives itself to have a defense. The action referred to is an action for money alleged to be due under the policy. Contracts rarely provide in detail for their nonperformance. It would be stretching the words quoted to a significance equally hurtful to both parties, and probably equally absent from the minds of both, to read them as having within their scope an initial repudiation of liability by the defendant, and a requirement that, in that event, the plaintiff should be bound to try the case against itself, although it should be plain that by a compromise it could reduce its claim on the defendant as well as its own loss.

If there is anything in the doubt whether the defendant, by assuming the defense of the original suit, would not lose its right to deny that the policy applied, even if it purported to save that right, it does not change our opinion. The requirement of a trial and judgment would not accomplish the object suggested, to make collusion impossible. The objections to thus hampering the dominus litis have been touched upon, and there would be presented the anomaly, if not the monstrosity, of a party attempting to provide by contract that if he should do what, by general principles of contract, forfeited his right to make further requirements of the other side, his conduct, on the contrary, should impose new obligations on the other side. If the defendant kept its contract, it would defend the suit, and the plaintiff would have no duties. If it refused to do as it had promised, we cannot think that it was entitled to complain that the plaintiff did not do it, when the interest of both was the other way. Before a policy should be construed to have such an extraordinary effect honesty requires that the assured should be notified of his duties in unmistakable words.

We answer the first, second, fourth, and fifth questions in the affirmative, the third in the negative, and the sixth in the affirmative, so far as the question is warranted by the facts set forth. It will be so certified.

2. Mines—lode location—amendment.—An amended relocation of a mining claim, made after the land has reverted to the public domain, cannot cure the defect in the original relocation arising out of the fact that the land was not then subject to entry, where intervening rights in favor of a third person have been created.

3. Mines—lode location—reversion to public domain—relocation.—The south end of a lode mining claim, separated from the rest of the claim by a patented placer claim, did not revert to and become part of the public domain, and, as such, subject to relocation, until the claimant elected to retain and patent the north end of the claim, although such election was not made within the sixty days given for that purpose by the Land Department in refusing a patent for the entire claim because divided by the placer claim, but was deferred until after the unsuccessful termination in the Land Department of a contest with the placer claimant, begun after the decision refusing the patent.

4. Mines—lode location—reversion to public domain—relocation.—An election to retain the north end of a lode mining claim, separated from the rest of the claim by a patented placer claim, made after the unsuccessful termination in the Land Department of a contest with the placer claimant, begun after a patent for the entire claim was refused because divided by the placer claim, took effect eo instanti as an abandonment of the south end of such claim, which became at once subject to relocation, although the entry as to such tract had not then been formally canceled.

5. Public lands—decision of Land Department—collateral attack.—Rulings of the Land Department as to the tract covered by a lode mining claim are as free from collateral attack where final entry has been made as though patent had issued.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Colorado to review a judgment which, reversing the judgments of the District Court of Teller County, in that state, held that the south end of a lode mining claim reverted to the public domain and became subject to relocation when the claimant elected to retain the north end of the claim, after patent for the entire claim had been refused and the Land Department had decided a contest with a placer claimant against the contention of a known vein in the placer conflict. Affirmed.

Statement by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller:

Brown applied for patent on a mining claim, known as the Scorpion, and Gurney adversed this application as the owner and claimant of the Hobson's Choice, as did Small, *also, as the owner and claimant of [185] the P. G. claim. Thereafter each brought suit in support of his adverse claim in the district court of Teller county, Colorado. The cases were tried together on an agreed statement of facts. This showed that the Scorpion, Hobson's Choice, and P. G. locations covered substantially the same tract of ground, and were all made in compliance with law, with the exception repeated in connection with each of said locations: "Provided, however, that it is not admitted that at the time of said location the ground embraced in said location was a part of the vacant and unappropriated public domain."

It appeared that prior to May 28, 1895, a mining lode location called the Kohnyo was owned by the Cripple Creek Mining Company, which claim was divided into two noncontiguous tracts by the Mt. Rosa placer claim. The north end of the Kohnyo, comprising 500 feet of the claim, was where the discovery of mineral was made, and it also contained a discovery shaft and the other workings and improvements of the claim. The south end, being 700 feet in length, did not show mineral, and was without development work of any kind.

The following diagram illustrates the situation:

The local land office permitted the claimant of the Kohnyo to enter the two tracts as one claim, but the Department ultimately refused to issue a patent for such tracts, basing the refusal upon the ground that two portions of a lode mining claim, separated by a patented placer, could not be included within one patent. The land office gave the applicant, however, the privilege to apply for a patent upon either of [186] *the segregated tracts, and directed that, in default of an election or appeal by the claimant within sixty days from the date of the order, the entry of that portion of the claim lying south of the Mt. Rosa claim should be canceled without further notice. This decision was rendered May 28, 1895, and no appeal was taken from it; but the claimant of the Kohnyo instituted proceedings against the claimant of the Mt. Rosa placer, the purpose of which was to secure title to the vein of the Kohnyo, which, it was claimed, passed through the portion of the placer claim which conflicted with the Kohnyo location. These proceedings were prosecuted before the Land Department, with the result that on May 7, 1898, a decision was rendered against the Kohnyo claimant's contention of a known vein in the placer conflict.

June 14, 1898, the claimant of the Kohnyo filed in the land office a written instrument, dated June 10, by which it elected to retain and patent the north end of the Kohnyo claim, and in which it also waived any right to further question or review the decision of the Secretary of the Interior of May 7, 1898, affirming the decision of May 28, 1895.

July 15, 1898, the Commissioner of the General Land Office canceled the entry of the Kohnyo claim as to that portion south of the Mt. Rosa placer.

May 13, 1898, Brown located this 700 feet as the Scorpion lode claim. June 23, 1898, Gurney located the same premises as the Hobson's Choice lode claim, and July 16, 1898, Small located the same ground as the P. G. lode claim. July 15 and 16, 1898, the claimant of the Scorpion filed amended and second amended certificates.

On these facts, judgment was rendered for defendant in each case, from which plaintiffs appealed to the supreme court of the state. That court reversed the judgment in Gurney v. Brown, and entered judgment that Gurney recover the premises included in the Hobson's Choice location, and for costs; and reversed the judgment in Small v. Brown, and entered judgment "that neither party has established any right to [187] the *premises in controversy," and for costs. The opinion is reported in 32 Colo. 472, 77 Pac. 357.

Mr. William C. Prentiss argued the cause, and, with Messrs. Charles F. Potter and Horace F. Clark, filed a brief for for Brown:

No brief was filed for Small.

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the opinion of the court:

The question in these cases, which was intended to be, and was passed upon, is when, in respect of the three locations, did the premises in controversy become subject to location?

In the state supreme court, counsel for Brown contended that the judgments below must be affirmed because the agreed facts failed to identify the premises in dispute as part of the Kohnyo claim; did not establish the validity of that location; and did not affirmatively show that the premises, when located *as the Scorpion, were not part [190] of the unappropriated public domain.

But the supreme court applied the rule that where the existence of certain facts is assumed in the trial court and the trial proceeds, without objection, on that assumption, and the case is decided in reliance thereon, neither party will be heard in the court of review to question there, for the first time, the existence of the facts, and especially not where the alleged omissions might have been supplied if called to the attention of the trial court. And properly applied it, for the identity of the ground in controversy and the validity of the original Kohnyo location were conceded by both parties; and, indeed, counsel really does not deny them as matters of fact, but simply objects that the stipulation did not include them. Moreover, we think the stipulation and exhibits attached containing the various proceedings before the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Secretary of the Interior establish the validity of the Kohnyo location. According to that record, the Kohnyo claim had passed to final entry; this entry had been recognized by the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Secretary; the question litigated in the Land Department for something like three years, as to the knowledge of the placer applicant at the time of his application for patent of the existence of the Kohnyo vein in the placer ground, had been decided adversely to the Kohnyo claim; the Kohnyo claimant had thereupon accepted this decision, acquiesced therein, and availed himself of the privilege extended by the Commissioner's decision of May 28, 1895, and elected to retain the northerly tract of the Kohnyo claim, which amounted to a relinquishment of the southerly tract, and the entry as to that tract was thereafter formally canceled.

It may be added also that in adverse proceedings each party is practically a plaintiff and must show his title. Jackson v. Roby, 109 U. S. 440, 27 L. ed. 990, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 301; Perego v. Dodge, 163 U. S. 160, 167, 41 L. ed. 113, 118, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 971. By the act of Congress of March 3, 1881 (21 Stat. at L. 505, chap. 140, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1431), it was provided that if, in an [191] adverse suit, "title to the ground *in controversy shall not be established by either party, the jury shall so find, and judgment shall be entered according to the verdict." Under that act it is held that before the applicant for a patent can have judgment, he must prove his claim of title to the ground. The object of the statute was, as we said in Perego v. Dodge, supra, to provide, in the case of a total failure of proof of title, for an adjudication "that neither party was entitled to the property, so that the applicant could not go forward with the proceedings in the land office simply because the adverse claimant had failed to make out his case, if he had also failed." 2 Lindley, Mines, § 763, and cases cited.

Of course it is essential that at the date of a location the ground located on should be part of the public domain, and in the present case the specific question affirmatively raised was whether the ground in controversy was a part of the public domain at the time of the respective contested locations.

It seems to us that when the Scorpion locator attempted to make that location he conceded the validity of the Kohnyo location and the segregation by that location from the public domain of the southerly portion of that claim, but assumed that the decision of the Secretary of May 7, 1898, operated to restore that tract to the public domain as of that date, since he relocated it on May 13, and on the following 15th of July filed an amended location. But the filing of the latter certificate did not cure the defect arising from the fact that the discovery shaft of the Scorpion was upon ground covered by the Kohnyo's claim, and the filing of the amended certificate could not perfect the Scorpion location in view of the previous location of the Hobson's Choice, which created intervening rights in favor of a third person.

The stipulation of facts was evidently prepared in respect of the inquiry concerning the date at which the ground in controversy reverted to and became a part of the public domain, and that embraced the question whether that resulted from the decision of the Secretary of May 7, 1898; or from *the filing by the Kohnyo claimant of [192] its election to retain the northerly tract and relinquish the other, June 14, 1898; or upon the formal cancelation of the entry, July 15, 1898.

Nevertheless, it is further contended that the proceedings in the Land Department between May 28, 1895, and May 7, 1898, did not suspend the operation of the decision of the Commissioner of May 28, 1895, and since by that order the Kohnyo's applicant was required to make its election within sixty days from that date, as to which end of the claim it would retain and patent, in default of which election the entry of the southerly portion became canceled, and the Kohnyo's claimant did not make such election until June, 1898, that the entry became canceled as to the ground in controversy at the expiration of sixty days from May 28, 1895, and thereupon the tract reverted to the public domain. The Land Department ruled otherwise. It treated the order of May 28, 1895, as suspended during the intermediate period, while the proceedings as to the knowledge of the placer claimant of the existence of the Kohnyo lode were pending. Manifestly because, if it was known by the placer applicant at the time of application for the patent that the Kohnyo vein extended through the placer ground, then the vein did not pass by the patent, and the Kohnyo's claimant might be entitled to patent both ends of its claims, embracing the vein and a strip through the placer location.

And when on July 15, 1898, the Department canceled the Kohnyo entry as to the tract in controversy, it was declared that: "In view of the fact that no motion for a review of the departmental decision of May 7, 1898, affirming the decision of this office of May 28, 1895, was filed within the time prescribed by the rules of practice, the decision last mentioned became final, and it now devolves upon this office to execute the same."

The election, then, by the Kohnyo claimant, filed in the land office June 14, 1898, was an abandonment of the south 700 feet of the Kohnyo claim, which took effect eo instanti. Lindley, Mines, §§ 642–644; Derry [193] v. Ross, 5 Colo. 295, 300. *This was voluntarily done, and took effect notwithstanding the receiver's receipt had not been formally canceled. The order of cancelation of July 15 simply recorded a pre-existing fact, and did not change the effect of the previous abandonment. By reason of that abandonment, the southerly tract, for the first time, reverted to and became a part of the public domain. And as the Hobson's Choice was the first location of the ground made after such abandonment, it follows that it was valid, and that its owner was entitled to a decision in its favor.

We again state the dates of the respective locations. The Scorpion was located May 13, 1898. The Hobson's Choice was located June 23, 1898. The location of the P. G. was July 16. Thus it is seen that the Scorpion was attempted to be located at a time when the premises were not subject to location; that the Hobson's Choice was located when the premises had reverted to the public domain; and that the location of the P. G. was after that date.

We have accepted the rulings of the Land Department that the Kohnyo location covered the southerly as well as the northerly end of that claim. Such was the decision of May 28, 1895, and that of the Secretary of the Interior of May 7, 1898, and the formal cancelation of July 15, 1898. In this separate distinct proceeding counsel cannot challenge these rulings. The attack is collateral and cannot be entertained. Steel v. St. Louis Smelting & Ref. Co. 106 U. S. 447, 27 L. ed. 226, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 389; St. Louis Smelting Co. v. Kemp, 104 U. S. 636, 26 L. ed. 875. True, those decisions refer to instances where the patent had issued, but the principle of freedom from collateral attack is equally applicable where final entry has been made. The final certificate issued by the receiver after the submission of final proof and payment of the purchase price, where such is required, has been repeatedly held to be for many purposes the equivalent of a patent. We are advised in argument that the patent was issued, but it is objected that though such may be the fact, it is not so stated in the facts agreed.

The cancelation of the entry of the 700 feet did *not rest on any defect in the origi- [194] nal location. On the contrary, the Land Department held the proceedings sufficient to entitle the Kohnyo's claimant to proceed to patent for this particular tract if he should so elect. It was only when the Kohnyo claimant abandoned that tract by making his election that he waived his right to patent it, and permitted the receiver's receipt to be canceled to that extent.

That cancelation did not itself operate to restore the southerly tract to the public domain, which had already taken place by the action of the Kohnyo claimant in compliance with the judgment of the Land Department.

We concur in the conclusions of the Supreme Court of Colorado, and the judgments are affirmed.

It is enough, however, if the person invoking this appellate jurisdiction was actually made a party before decree, either by an express order of the court to that effect, or by acting or being treated as such. Ct. Rep. 405; Williams v. Morgan, 111 U. S. 684, 28 L. ed. 559, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 638.

All the parties against whom a joint judgment or decree has been rendered must join in the writ of error or appeal (Hampton v. Rouse, 13 Wall. 187, 20 L. ed. 593; Wilson v. Life & F. Ins. Co. 12 Pet. 140, 9 L. ed. 1032; Owings v. Kincannon, 7 Pet. 399, 8 L. ed. 727; Williams v. Bank of United States, 11 Wheat. 414, 6 L. ed. 508; Clifton v. Sheldon, 23 How. 481, 16 L. ed. 429), unless there have been a summons and severance (Shannon v. Cavazos, 131 U. S. lxxi. Appx. and 15 L. ed. 929; Mussina v. Cavazos, 20 How. 280, 15 L. ed. 878; Estis v. Trabue, 128 U. S. 225, 32 L. ed. 437, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 58; Mason v. United States, 136 U. S. 581, 34 L. ed. 545, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1062), or some equivalent proceeding (Inglehart v. Stansbury, 151 U. S. 68, 38 L. ed. 76, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 237; Hardee v. Wilson, 146 U. S. 179, 36 L. ed. 933, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 39; Hanrick v. Patrick, 119 U. S. 156, 30 L. ed. 396, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 147; Feibelman v. Packard, 108 U. S. 14, 27 L. ed. 634, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 138; Simpson v. Greeley, 20 Wall. 152, 22 L. ed. 338; Beardsley v. Arkansas & L. R. Co. 158 U. S. 123, 39 L. ed. 919, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 786; Masterson v. Herndon [Masterson v. Howard] 10 Wall. 416, 19 L. ed. 953; Downing v. McCartney, 131 U. S. xcviii. Appx. and 19 L. ed. 757; O'Dowd v. Russell, 14 Wall. 402, 20 L. ed. 857).

But, as Mr. Chief Justice Fuller points out in AMADEO V. NORTHERN ASSUR. CO., parties whose legal interests will not be affected by the success or failure of the appellate proceedings need not join therein. Hanrick v. Patrick, supra; Forgay v. Conrad, 6 How. 201, 12 L. ed. 404; Brewster v. Wakefield, 22 How. 118, 16 L. ed. 301; Gilfillan v. McKee, 159 U. S. 303, 40 L. ed. 161, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 6; City Nat. Bank v. Hunter, 129 U. S. 557, 32 L. ed. 752, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 346; Germain v. Mason, 12 Wall. 259, 20 L. ed. 392; Cox v. United States, 6 Pet. 172, 8 L. ed. 359; Norwich & W. R. Co. v. Johnson, 15 Wall. 8, 21 L. ed. 118; Basket v. Hassell, 107 U. S. 602, 27 L. ed. 500, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 415.

The death of either party after judgment and while a writ of error or appeal is pending does not abate the suit, but his representatives may voluntarily become parties or may be compelled to do so. Green v. Watkins, 6 Wheat. 261, 5 L. ed. 256; Noonan v. Bradley, 12 Wall. 121, 20 L. ed. 279; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Turrill, 110 U. S. 301, 28 L. ed. 154, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 5.

The proceeding will abate, however, if appearance on behalf of such representatives be not seasonably made after the suggestion of death (Phillips v. Preston, 11 How. 294, 13 L. ed. 702) unless steps have previously been taken by the adverse party to compel an appearance (U. S. Supreme Court Rule 10; Barribeau v. Brant, 17 How. 43, 15 L. ed. 34).

The old rule that the death or retirement

Rico to review three several judgments of that court in favor of defendant in actions on policies of fire insurance. Reversed on the authority of Royal Ins. Co. v. Miller, 199 U. S. 353, ante, 226, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 46, and remanded for further proceedings.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Fritz v. Briesen argued the cause, and, with Mr. Charles M. Boerman, filed a brief for plaintiffs in error.

Mr. Frederic D. McKenney argued the cause, and, with Messrs. Francis H. Dexter and John Spalding Flannery, filed a brief for defendants in error.

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the opinion of the court:

In No. 199 the action was commenced April 21, 1903, by Antonio José Amadeo, as sole plaintiff, to recover from the Northern Assurance Company damages in the sum of $10,000 on a certain fire insurance policy issued on property in Porto Rico. The policy was dated December 21, 1884, and insured plaintiff against loss by fire for one year from that date. The loss was alleged to have occurred February 7, 1885.

Defendant filed several pleas, and, among others, that "the alleged cause of action did not accrue within fifteen years before this suit," and that prior to the institution of the suit the policy and its proceeds had been duly sold and transferred by plaintiff "to the firm of Pastor Márquez & Company, who are the only persons entitled to sue herein."

*Plaintiff demurred to both these pleas, [198] but subsequently, by leave of court, amended his declaration by adding to the caption, after the name Amadeo, the words "for the use of and together with Pastor Marquez Company, in liquidation," and by inserting in the body of the declaration the following: "And plaintiff avers that about the month of August, 1885, the said policy was assigned to the Pastor Marquez Company, which is a company in liquidation and of which Pedro Salazar is liquidator."

Thereafter plaintiff's demurrer to defendant's pleas of prescription was overruled by the court, and plaintiff excepted, and subsequently replied that the prescription pleaded had been interrupted "extrajudicially." To that replication defendant interposed a demurrer, which was sustained by the court. Plaintiffs thereupon declined to plead further and the court entered judgment, January 12, 1904, as follows: "And of a Federal official pending a writ of error sued out in a suit in relation to the discharge of his official duties abated the proceeding (United States ex rel. Warden v. Chandler, 122 U. S. 643, Appx. 30 L. ed. 1244; United States v. Boutwell, 17 Wall. 604, 21 L. ed. 721; United States ex rel. Bernardin v. Butterworth, 169 U. S. 600, 42 L. ed. 873, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 441) is superseded by statute (Caledonian Coal Co. v. Baker [New Mexico ex rel. Caledonian Coal Co. v. Baker] 196 U. S. 432, 49 L. ed. 540, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 375).

Under this statute (act Feb. 8, 1899, 30 Stat. at L. 822, chap. 121, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 697), authorizing substitutions in actions of this character when necessary to obtain a settlement of the questions involved, the court held, in the case last above cited, that the successor in office of a judge of a territorial court might be substituted on an appeal to the Federal Supreme Court from a final judgment denying mandamus to compel his predecessor to take jurisdiction of an action attempted to be brought in his court.

Only those can be substituted upon the death of a party pending an appeal who succeed to the interest which he had. Hence, where a party after suit brought conveyed his interest to another, and, after appeal, died, such other cannot be substituted in his place on the appeal. Barribeau v. Brant, supra.

On an appeal from a decree against all of the defendants below jointly, the appeal, after the death of one of the appellants, may proceed at the suit of the survivors, under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 956, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 697, providing that, upon the death of one or more of the parties, if the cause of action survives to the surviving plaintiffs or against the surviving defendants, the writ or action shall not be abated, but, upon the suggestion of the death, the action shall proceed at the suit of the surviving plaintiff or plaintiffs against the surviving defendant or defendants. Moses v. Wooster, 115 U. S. 285, 29 L. ed. 391, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 38.

So, where one of three parties plaintiff below dies after the writ of error is sued out to review a judgment against them, and the cause of action survives, it is not necessary to make the heirs and representatives of the deceased parties to such writ. M'Kinney v. Carroll, 12 Pet. 66, 9 L. ed. 1002.

Whenever either party to a final judgment or decree of a circuit court dies before the time for invoking the appellate jurisdiction has expired, a formal revivor is, by the express terms of the act of March 3, 1875 (18 Stat. at L. 470, § 9, chap. 137, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 508), made unnecessary. His representative may file a certified copy of his appointment, and thereupon may take his appeal or sue out his writ of error as the decedent might have done. If the decedent was the successful party, notice shall be given to his representatives, as in the case of the death of a party after appeal taken or writ of error brought.

Where four years have elapsed after an appeal without giving the notice prescribed by this section, and there has been no voluntary appearance, it is too late to cure the defect. Dolan v. Jennings, 139 U. S. 385, 35 L. ed. 217, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 584.

Where a writ of error is sought on behalf of a deceased party, the motion to revive, if necessary, should be made in the court below, and not in the Federal Supreme Court. McClane v. Boon, 6 Wall. 244, 18 L. ed. 835.

Where the suit cannot be revived in the court below because the deceased party has it is therefore adjudged by the court that issue is found in favor of the defendant, and that the plaintiffs recover nothing herein, and that the defendant go hence with judgment for cost against the plaintiffs." It now appears that plaintiff Amadeo died intestate May 14, 1904. September 20, 1904, application was made for the allowance of a writ of error from this court to review the judgment, which was allowed September 21, 1904. On December 20, 1904, an appeal bond in the sum of $500, wherein Pastor Marquez & Company was named as principal and Lucas Amadeo and Felix Salazar as sureties, was filed in the clerk's office of the district court, but the bond did not bear the approval of the judge. The bond was entitled "Antonio José Amadeo and Pastor Marquez & Company vs. Northern Assurance Company;" recited that "whereas the above-named plaintiffs have sued out a writ of error to the Supreme Court," etc., and was conditioned that "the above-named plaintiffs shall prosecute said writ to effect," etc. It was signed "Pastor Marquez & Com. en Liquid. E. Salazar, Lucas Amadeo, Felipe Salazar." The writ of error, which is dated December 31, 1904, bears the allowance of the district judge, who *also signed the citation under that[199] date. The writ of error and the citation described "Antonio José Amadeo for the use of and together with the Pastor Marquez Company, in liquidation," as plaintiffs in error. The writ of error asserts that the error complained of wrought damage to "said Antonio José Amadeo for the use of and together with the Pastor Marquez Company in liquidation." The transcript of record was docketed in this court March 15, 1905.

In No. 200, the action was brought by Antonio José Amadeo alone, upon two policies of insurance against the Royal Insurance Company, April 21, 1903. The policies of insurance were dated September 15 and December 21, 1884, respectively, and insured plaintiff against loss and damage for one year from their respective dates. The loss as alleged occurred February 7, 1885. Defendant, among other defenses, pleaded prescription of fifteen years and transfer by plaintiff, prior to the institution of the suit, of the policies and all interest therein. To these pleas plaintiff at first demurred, but subsequently, with leave of the court, amended his declaration as follows: In the title, after the name of the plaintiff, by adding no representative within the jurisdiction of the court which rendered final judgment, and there exists a proper representative in some other state or territory, provision is made by U. S. Supreme Court Rule 15 for writ of error or appeal, and for bringing in such representative as a party.

Where a decree is pronounced against an executor as defendant, and, before an appeal is prayed, the executor is removed and an administrator de bonis non with the will annexed is appointed, an appeal cannot be taken until the administrator is made a party to the suit in the court below. Taylor v. Savage, 1 How. 282, 11 L. ed. 132, 2 How. 395, 11 L. ed. 313.

Where a receiver has taken an appeal in the name of his predecessor from a decree entered after a change in the receivership, and he has become surety on the appeal bond, he may be substituted in the Federal Supreme Court upon motion, under the power of amendment authorized by U. S. Rev. Stat. § 954, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 696, without prejudice to the proceeding had; and a motion to dismiss will be denied. Bowden v. Johnson (Adams v. Johnson) 107 U. S. 251, 27 L. ed. 386, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 246.

In the above case the court said that its action was similar to that taken in Gates v. Goodloe, 101 U. S. 612, 25 L. ed. 895, where an assignee in bankruptcy was substituted as plaintiff in error for the original plaintiffs in error, who had sued out the writ after receiving their discharge in bankruptcy.

An assignee in bankruptcy might have been substituted for the bankrupt as appellant in the Federal Supreme Court, under the provision of the bankruptcy law authorizing such assignee to prosecute and defend in his own name all suits pending at the time of the adjudication of bankruptcy, in which the bankrupt is a party, in the same manner and with like effect as they may have been prosecuted or defended by the bankrupt. Herndon v. Howard, 9 Wall. 664, 19 L. ed. 809.

So, where a writ of error sued out by the judgment debtor, who had obtained a discharge in bankruptcy after the suit was instituted, was dismissed because of his lack of interest in the suit, the court said the assignee in bankruptcy might be substituted on an application to reinstate the cause, made during the term, were it not for the fact that no jurisdictional question was contained in the record. Knox v. Exchange Bank, 12 Wall. 379, 20 L. ed. 414.

Such substitution was refused in United States v. Peck, 102 U. S. 64, 26 L. ed. 46, where the assignee had lain by a long time and allowed the case to go on in the other's name, at his expense, and under his management, or that of the creditors for whose use he was prosecuting the case.

An assignee in bankruptcy will not be substituted as a party to a writ of error to review a judgment rendered against the defendant after his adjudication in bankruptcy, since the bankrupt may prosecute such writ in his own name, and the assignee, if any of the questions involved may effect the bankrupt estate, will be heard on such questions by his counsel when the case comes up for argument. Hill v. Harding, 131 U. S. cc. Appx. and 26 L. ed. 310.

For a more extended discussion of these questions as well as all other questions relating to the Practice and procedure governing the transfer of causes to the Federal Supreme Court on writ of error or appeal, see note to Wedding v. Meyler, 66 L.R.A. 833.

the following words, "for the use of and together with the Pastor Marquez Company in liquidation,' and by adding in the body of the declaration the following: "And plaintiff avers that on or about August, 1885, the said policy was assigned to the Pastor Marquez Company, which is a company in liquidation and of which Pedro Salazar is liquidator." Plaintiff's demurrer to defendant's pleas of prescription having been overruled and exception thereto noted, plaintiff replied that the prescription had been interrupted "by extrajudicial demand;" to which replication defendant interposed a demurrer, which was sustained. And plaintiff having refused to plead further to defendant's pleas of prescription, and "failing to offer proofs as to the other issues made and tendered," judgment was, on the 15th day of January, 1904, entered for defendant as follows: "That the plaintiffs herein, Antonio José Amadeo, for himself and for the use and benefit of the firm [200] of Pastor *Marquez & Company, and Pedro Salazar as liquidating partner of the said Pastor Marquez & Company, take nothing by either of their said suits, and that the defendants go hence without day and recover of and from the said plaintiffs all costs in this behalf incurred or expended, for which execution may issue." Petition for allowance of writ of error was filed September 20, 1904, and allowed the next day. An appeal bond entitled "José Antonio Amadeo and Pastor Marquez & Company vs. Royal Insurance Company" was "filed and approved Dec. 20th, 1904," but the copy of the bond in the transcript of record does not show the approval of the district judge. This bond was signed by "Pastor Marquez & Co. en liqui., E. Salazar, Felipe Salazar, Lucas Amadeo," Pastor Marquez & Company being described as principal and Lucas Amadeo and Felipe Salazar as sureties. The writ of error and citation were as in case No. 199. Record filed March 15, 1905.

No. 201 was a consolidation of two similar actions, and the course of procedure was like that in Nos. 199 and 200. The judgment was rendered January 15, 1904, in favor of defendant and against "Frederico Amadeo, for himself and for the use and benefit of the firm of Pastor Marquez & Company, and Pedro Salazar as liquidating partner of the said Pastor Marquez & Company."

The appeal bond was filed December 20, 1904, and was signed by "Pastor Marquez & Company, in liquidation, E. Salazar, Felipe Salazar, and Lucas Amadeo;" and did not bear the approval of the district judge. The record was filed March 15, 1905.

The sureties on each of the appeal bonds in Nos. 199, 200, and 201 made affidavit as to their responsibility before the clerk of the district court, and acknowledged the execution of the bonds before him.

It was admitted at the bar that, on the merits, these judgments must be reversed. Royal Ins. Co. v. Miller, 199 U. S. 353, ante, 226, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 46.

But it is insisted that the writs of error in Nos. 199 and 200 *should be dismissed [201] because Antonio José Amadeo died after judgment, and before the writs of error were sued out, and the Pastor Marquez Company, if otherwise competent, could not prosecute the writs until after notice to the succession of the deceased. And further, that as it appeared that Pastor Marquez Company was in liquidation, the writs of error as well as the actions could only be prosecuted in the name of the liquidator, which was denied to be the fact here. And that the writ of error in No. 201 should be dismissed on the latter ground as well as because of want of summons and severance.

Antonio José Amadeo was dead when the writs of error issued in Nos. 199 and 200, and it is contended that the writs cannot be maintained because the actions had not been revived below, the death was not suggested on the record, and no notice of intention to take out the writs was given to his succession. Defendant, however, pleaded, among other defenses, that Amadeo had no interest in the cause of action, because the policies and their proceeds had been duly sold and transferred to Pastor Marquez & Company, who were alone entitled to sue. And thereafter the complaints were amended, as previously stated. For the purposes of these motions to dismiss, defendant in error cannot be permitted in this court to assert that Amadeo was other than a nominal plaintiff, and the cases fall within the principle, occasionally applicable, that parties having no legal interest in maintaining or reversing a judgment or decree are not necessary parties to a writ of error or appeal. Basket v. Hassell, 107 U. S. 602, 27 L. ed. 500, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 415; Germain v. Mason, 12 Wall. 259, 20 L. ed. 392; Forgay v. Conrad, 6 How. 201, 12 L. ed. 404.

And although these records are much confused and very carelessly made up, we think that it may be properly held that the effect of the amendments was to bring the liquidator into court with the liquidating company, and, at all events, that, in view of defendants' pleas, the amendments thereupon, and the want of objection below in respect of the liquidator, that objection should not now be entertained in defeat of our jurisdiction. These considerations control the disposition of No. 201.

*As to the suggested irregularities in the [202] appeal bonds, they do not render the writs of error void, and we do not feel called on to enter any orders in regard to them, as these cases must go back for further proceedings.

Judgments reversed and causes remanded for further proceedings in conformity with law.

STATE OF WISCONSIN, Complainant,
v.
ETHAN ALLEN HITCHCOCK, Secretary of the Interior

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 202–215.)

Public lands — school lands — Indian right of occupancy.—The state of Wisconsin has not, by reason of the cession for school purposes in the enabling act of August 6, 1846 (9 Stat. at L. 57, chap. 89), of the 16th section in every township, not sold or otherwise disposed of, any such interest, present or prospective, in the several 16th sections of the lands ceded to the United States by the Chippewa Indians in the treaty of March 23, 1843 (7 Stat. at L. 592), where those Indians have not surrendered the right of occupancy reserved therein, as entities that state to interfere with the administration, by the Interior Department, for the benefit of the Indians, of such sections of the land so ceded as were subsequently included within the tracts set aside as a part of the Bad River or La Pointe, and the Flambeau reservations.

[No. 12, Original.]

Argued February 21, 1906. Decided April 2, 1906.

ORIGINAL BILL in equity to enjoin the Secretary of the Interior from interfering with the use, possession, or enjoyment by the state of Wisconsin of certain lands embraced within the Bad River or La Pointe and the Flambeau reservations. Dismissed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. T. W. Spence argued the cause, and, with Mr. L. M. Sturdevant, filed a brief for complainant:

The privilege of temporary Indian occupancy was destroyed and terminated by the mere act of admitting the state into the Union.

Ward v. Race Horse, 163 U. S. 504, 41 L. ed. 244, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1076.

Beecher v. Wetherby, 95 U. S. 524, 24 L. ed. 441.

The obligation of the United States respecting relief invoked is sufficient to enable it to maintain an action to revoke a patent, and no reason is apparent why the same rule should not apply to a state.

Mr. A. C. Campbell argued the cause, and, with Mr. Frank L. Campbell, filed a brief for defendant:

The words of an Indian treaty are to be construed as they were understood by the Indians, and not to their prejudice.

The grant describes and is confined to public lands. Lands are not public unless they are subject to sale or other disposal under the general land laws. They are not subject to sale and disposal under such laws if, at the date of the grant, they are burdened with an Indian right of occupancy. Nor are they public lands, as the term is understood, until surveyed into townships and designated by sections.

Mr. Justice Harlan delivered the opinion of the court:

The state of Wisconsin seeks by this suit to enjoin the defendant, as Secretary of the Interior, from interfering, in anywise, with its use, possession, or enjoyment of certain lands, embraced within the present La Pointe or Bad River and the Flambeau Indian reservations in that state.

[203] *The state traces its title back to the act of Congress of August 6th, 1846, authorizing the people of Wisconsin territory to form a state constitution, and providing for the admission of such state into the Union. 9 Stat. at L. 56, chap. 89.

The defendant, Hitchcock, as Secretary of the Interior, demurred to the bill upon the ground, among others, that it did not appear that the state was entitled to the relief asked.

The general question is whether the state has such interest, present or prospective, in the lands in dispute, as to preclude their being administered by the Secretary of the Interior for the benefit of certain Indians.

The case, as presented by the record and by official documents of which judicial notice may be taken, is as follows:

On the 23d day of March, 1843, by a treaty between the United States and the Chippewa Indians of "the Mississippi and Lake Superior," the latter ceded to the United States all the country embraced within a specified boundary, including the lands here in controversy. The second and third articles of that treaty provided: "Art. 2. The Indians stipulate for the right of hunting on the ceded territory, with the other usual privileges of occupancy, until required to remove by the President of the United States, and that the laws of the United States shall be continued in force, in respect to their trade and intercourse with the whites, until otherwise ordered by Congress. Art. 3. It is agreed by the parties to this treaty that whenever the Indians shall be required to remove from the ceded district, all the unceded lands belonging to the Indians of Fond du Lac, Sandy Lake, and Mississippi bands shall be the common property and home of all the Indians party to this treaty." [7 Stat. at L. 592.] In consideration of the above cession the United States (art. 4) engaged to pay the Indians annually for twenty-five years certain sums; and this consideration for the ceded lands was paid by the United States. Revision of Indian Treaties, 217.

By an act of Congress approved August 6th, 1846, the people of the then territory of Wisconsin were authorized to form a constitution *and state government for the pur- [204] pose of being admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original states in all respects whatsoever, with certain specified boundaries. The 7th section of that act was as follows: "That the following propositions are hereby submitted to the convention which shall assemble for the purpose of forming a constitution for the state of Wisconsin, for acceptance or rejection; and if accepted by said convention, and ratified by an article in said constitution, they shall be obligatory on the United States: First. That section numbered sixteen, in every township of the public lands in said state, and, where such section has been sold or otherwise disposed of, other lands equivalent thereto, and as contiguous as may be, shall be granted to said state for the use of schools. . . ." 9 Stat. at L. 57, chap. 89.

The conditions prescribed by the enabling act of 1846 were duly accepted by Wisconsin, and that territory was admitted into the Union as a state by an act of Congress approved May 29th, 1848. 2 Charters and Constitutions, 2029; 9 Stat. at L. 233, chap. 50.

By a treaty made and concluded September 30th, 1854, between the United States and the Chippewa Indians of Lake Superior and the Mississippi, and which treaty was proclaimed January 29th, 1855 (10 Stat. at L. 1109), the Chippewas of Lake Superior ceded to the United States the lands heretofore owned by them in common with the Chippewas of the Mississippi within the present boundary of Minnesota and lying east of a certain boundary. The Chippewas of the Mississippi assented to that cession and agreed that the whole amount of the consideration money for the country ceded as above should be paid to the Chippewas of Lake Superior, the latter relinquishing to the Chippewas of the Mississippi all their interest in and claims to the lands theretofore owned by them in common, lying west of the above boundary line.

The lands described in the first article of the treaty of 1854 are within the present state of Minnesota, and constitute no part of the land embraced in the treaty of 1843.

By the second article of that treaty the United States agreed, *among other things, [205] to set apart and withhold from sale certain lands for the use of the La Pointe band and such other Indians as might settle with them. For the other Wisconsin bands, a tract of land was to be set apart and withheld from sale, "lying about Lac du Flambeau, and another tract on Lac Court Oreilles, each equal in extent to three townships, the boundaries of which shall be hereafter agreed upon or fixed under the direction of the President." The lands described in that article of the treaty of 1854 to be set apart and withheld from sale "for the La Pointe band" and "for the other Wisconsin bands" were part of the lands ceded to the United States by the treaty of 1843.

The third article of the treaty was in these words: "Article 3. The United States will define the boundaries of these reserved tracts, whenever it may be necessary, by actual survey, and the President may, from time to time, at his discretion, cause the whole to be surveyed, and may assign to each head of a family or single person over twenty-one years of age eighty acres of land for his or their separate use; and he may at his discretion, as fast as the occupants become capable of transacting their own affairs, issue patent therefor to such occupants, with such restrictions of the power of alienation as he may see fit to impose. And he may also, at his discretion, make rules and regulations respecting the disposition of the lands in case of the death of the head of a family or single person occupying the same, or in case of its abandonment by them. And he may also assign other lands in exchange for mineral lands, if any such are found in the tracts herein set apart. And he may also make such changes in the boundaries of such reserved tracts or otherwise as shall be necessary to prevent interference with any vested rights. All necessary roads, highways, and railroads, the lines of which may run through any of the reserved tracts, shall have the right of way through the same, compensation being made therefor as in other cases."

The bill alleges: "That under the enabling [206] act of Congress *aforesaid, and under the state Constitution, and under and in view of the cession of their lands by said Chippewa Indians, contained in said treaty of 1843, all of the lands surveyed and to be surveyed as sections 16 of the various townships within the territory covered by said treaty vested in the state of Wisconsin, and said state of Wisconsin has at all times heretofore, since its admission to the Union, claimed a right to the fee of all lands in sections 16 in the several townships within said reservations, and, since the sectional survey thereof by the United States, has claimed the actual fee in said sections, and has exercised dominion and ownership over the same, and has issued sundry and divers patents to divers persons and corporations for portions thereof, sundry of which persons and corporations, grantees of the state as aforesaid, have also exercised acts of ownership thereof, and have paid taxes and made improvements thereon, and have cut and hauled timber therefrom until forbidden by orders of the defendant, Ethan Allen Hitchcock, as Secretary of the Interior of the United States, as hereinafter more particularly mentioned; that patents for all of said sections 16 within said La Pointe reservation have heretofore been issued by said state to divers parties, and patents upon about fourteen forties of said sections 16 within said Lac du Flambeau reservation have been issued by said state to divers parties, and there still remain about twenty-nine forties in said sections 16 within said Lac du Flambeau reservation, the title to which is still in and claimed by said state. That under the treaty of 1854, aforesaid, and in carrying out its provisions, the said Secretary of the Interior has proceeded, through the United States Indian Department, to allot from time to time to the various members of said tribes of La Pointe bands of Indians and to various members of the Wisconsin bands on said Lac du Flambeau reservation 80 acres per capita of lands within said reservations, and has caused patents therefor to be issued to the members of said tribes as individuals, and such members have become full citizens of the United States, and have terminated their tribal relations, and have ceased to *occupy any material part of [207] said reservation in common. That the lands within said reservation, exclusive of the lands in section 16, are sufficient to secure 80 acres to each individual Indian who has hitherto appeared and claimed a right to an allotment. That no allotment has hitherto been allowed to any member of said tribes of Indians of any land embraced within any of said sections 16. That beginning about the year 1899, and from thence hitherto, the defendant, Ethan Allen Hitchcock, as Secretary of the Interior, and the Commissioner of the Indian Office of the United States, and divers agents and servants under them, have set up on behalf of said La Pointe and other bands of Indians, or the members thereof, a claim of interest or title in and to sections 16 aforesaid in the reservation townships aforesaid, paramount and adverse to the title of the state of Wisconsin, and have claimed and continue to claim that said sections 16 are still held by the United States in trust for said Indians to the same extent as other lands in said reserved townships, and have forbidden purchasers of such lands holding patents from the state to enter or make improvements or cut any timber thereon, and have thereby cast a cloud upon the title of the state and its grantees to said lands, and have interfered with, and are continuing to interfere with, the use and enjoyment of the same by the owners thereof. . . . That by chap. 95 of the laws of the state of Wisconsin for the year 1903, approved April 20th, 1903, the attorney general of the state of Wisconsin was duly authorized to institute proceedings in this court under the provisions of the act of Congress passed March 2d, 1901 [31 Stat. at L. 950, chap. 808, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1384], and hereinbefore referred to, to determine the rights of said state to what are commonly known as school lands, within any reservation or Indian cession within said state, where any Indian tribe claims any right to or interest in said lands, or to the disposition thereof by the United States, and particularly to determine the title to the lands embraced within sections 16 in the several townships constituting the present Bad River or La Pointe and the Flambeau Indian reservations within said state."

The state contends that the effect of the [212] treaty of 1843 was *that the Chippewa Indians relcased to the United States all of their claim of title or interest in or to the lands therein described and each and every part thereof, and ceded the same to the United States, which thereupon became the absolute owner thereof free from any claim of said Indians; and that the state, upon its acceptance of the conditions prescribed by the enabling act of 1846, and its admission into the Union, became vested with an absolute right in and to all the sections 16 within said territory previously surveyed, as well as to the lands subsequently surveyed by the United States, with the right in the state to have the temporary possession or occupancy of the Indians terminated by the United States.

The determination of the question suggested by this contention and the decision of this case is controlled by United States v. Thomas, 151 U. S. 577, 38 L. ed. 276, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 426. That case involved the rights of the state of Wisconsin in and over certain lands in the Lac Court Oreilles reservation, as established for the benefit of the Chippewa Indians. Thomas, an Indian of the Chippewa tribe, was indicted for the murder of another Indian of the same tribe, committed within the limits of that reservation. The evidence showed that the offense was committed upon section 16, a township embraced in the reservation. The accused contended that, by the provisions of the enabling act by which Wisconsin was admitted into the Union, section 16 in every township in that state was ceded to it for school purposes, and could not be subsequently taken by the United States as part of an Indian reservation. It appeared that previous to the alleged murder, namely, in 1859, the section upon which the crime was committed had been settled, platted, and set apart by the United States as a part and parcel of said reservation, and was continuously thereafter occupied by the Indians as such, although claimed and sold by the state as and for a part of the school land ceded to it by the act of Congress. By act of Congress, approved March 3d, 1885, chap. 341, 23 Stat. at L. 362, 385, it was provided that Indians committing certain crimes, among them murder, "against the person or property of another Indian or *other person within the [213] boundaries of any state of the United States, and within the limits of any Indian reservation, shall be subject to the same laws, tried in the same courts, and in the same manner, and subject to the same penalties, as are all other persons committing any of the above crimes within the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States." So the question was distinctly presented as to the relative rights of the state and the Indians in said section 16 within the Indian reservation on which the alleged murder was committed.

This court said: "The Indians have never been removed from the lands thus ceded [meaning by the treaty of 1842] and no Executive order has ever been made for their removal, and no change has taken place in their occupancy of the lands, except as provided by the treaty of September 30, 1854 (10 Stat. at L. 1109). By that treaty the Chippewas ceded a large portion of their territory, previously retained in Wisconsin and elsewhere, and provision was made in consideration thereof for the formation of permanent reservations for their benefit, each to embrace three full townships, and their boundaries to be established under the direction of the President. One of these included the tract comprised in the Lac Court Oreilles reservation. In the provision for these reservations nothing was said of the sixteenth section of any townships, and it is clear that it was not contemplated that any section should be left out of any one of them. The land reserved was to be, as near as possible, in a compact form, except so far as the meandering lakes were concerned. When the townships composing these reservations were surveyed, the sixteenth section was already disposed of in the sense of the enabling act of 1846. It had been included within the limits of the reservations. As it will be seen by the treaty of 1842, ratified in 1843, which was previous to the enabling act, the Indians stipulated for the right of occupancy to the lands. That right of occupancy gave them the enjoyment of the lands until they were required to surrender it by the President of the United States, which requirement was never made. Whatever right the state of [214] Wisconsin acquired *by the enabling act to the sixteenth section was subordinate to this right of occupancy for which the Indians stipulated. . . . The general rule established by the Land Department in reference to the school lands in the different states is that the title to them vests in the several states in which the land is situated, subject to any prior right of occupation by the Indians or others which the government had stipulated to recognize."

Again: "We therefore are of opinion that, by virtue of the treaty of 1842, in the absence of any proof that the Chippewa Indians have surrendered their right of occupancy, the right still remains with them, that the title and right which the state may claim ultimately to the sixteenth section of every township for the use of schools is subordinate to this right of occupancy of the Indians, which has, so far as the court is informed, never been released to any of their lands, except as it may be inferred from the provisions of the treaty of 1854. That treaty provided for permanent reservations, which included the section in question. The treaty did not operate to defeat the prior right of occupancy to that particular section, but, by including it in the new reservations, made as a condition of the cession of large tracts of land in Wisconsin, continued it in force. The state of Wisconsin, therefore, had no such control over that section or right to it as would prevent its being set apart by the United States, with the consent of the Indians, as a part of their permanent reservation. So, by authority of their original right of occupancy, as well as by the fact that the section is included within the tract set aside as a portion of the permanent reservation in consideration of the cession of lands, the title never vested in the state, except as subordinate to that right of occupation of the Indians." United States v. Thomas, 151 U. S. 577, 582, 584, 38 L. ed. 276, 278, 279, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 426, 428, 429.

It is true that the Thomas Case did not have reference to the particular Indian reservations involved in the present suit,—the Bad River or La Pointe and Flambeau reservations,—but only to the Lac Court
[215] Oreilles Indian reservation. But all *three reservations, had their origin alike in the same treaties,—that of 1842, proclaimed in 1843, and that of 1854: and the effect of those treaties was considered in that case in connection with the enabling act of 1846, under which the state now claims, as it claimed in that case, absolute title to, and full control over, all the sections 16 named in that act. What the court said in the Thomas Case, as to the rights of Indians in virtue of their occupancy of the lands set apart for their use in the Lac Court Oreilles reservation, is strictly applicable to the rights of the Indians who have occupied, and, so far as appears, still occupy, the Bad River or La Pointe and Flambeau reservations. We could not sustain the claim of the state in the present suit without overruling the principles announced in the Thomas Case; and that we are not disposed to do. The principles of the Thomas Case were recognized and enforced in Minnesota v. Hitchcock, 185 U. S. 373, 391, 46 L. ed. 954, 964, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 650, 657, et seq., which related to an act of Congress for the admission of Minnesota into the Union, and which act contained a provision similar to the one found in the enabling act for Wisconsin, namely, that certain sections "in every township of public lands in said state, and where either of said sections or any part thereof has been sold or otherwise been disposed of, other lands, equivalent thereto and as contiguous as may be, shall be granted to said state for the use of schools."

Without repeating all that was said in previous decisions, we hold, on the authority of those decisions, that the state is not entitled to the relief asked nor to any order that would interfere, at this time, with the administration by the Interior Department, of the lands in question for the benefit of the Indians for whom the Bad River or La Pointe reservation and the Flambeau reservation were established. Consequently, the bill must be dismissed.

It is so ordered.

The personal competency or incompetency of persons to contract, such as infants, persons under duress or under coverture, is to be governed by the law of the place of domicil.

Story, Confl. L. §§ 97, 103; Huey's Appeal, 1 Grant, Cas. 51; 2 Rawle's Bouvier, Law Dict. p. 199.

The personal competency or incompetency —i. e., status—of parties to a contract can always be set up as a defense to the avoidance of such alleged contract, or as to any liability growing out of the same; and this includes idiots, infants, persons under duress, and persons under coverture.

Gould, Pl. pp. 257, 258.

No person under legal disability could therefore be included in the legal contemplation of the terms "persons" and "shareholders" used in the national banking act, as such persons would be incapable of entering into the contractual relation in those states or jurisdictions where those disabilities existed; and, at common law, neither an infant, a married woman, nor a person non compos could make a contract, and could not, therefore, be a shareholder in a corporation.

The common law is still in force in Florida, and a married woman cannot make a contract; and no action at law may be brought or judgment rendered against her.

Mr. Duncan Upshaw Fletcher submitted the cause for defendant in error:

If plaintiff in error can own and hold such stock, her liability and the means of enforcing it are controlled by the laws of the United States, and not by those of the state. She became liable as a shareholder under the laws of the United States, and the remedy of the receiver is an action at law, as in the case of any other shareholder.

Even if a married woman should subscribe for stock, and only pay in a part of the par value, she might be assessed with other stockholders, and be obliged to pay, because her obligation is created by statute of the United States. The element of power to contract might enter into such a case, perhaps, but, in the case at bar, the stock was bequeathed to Mrs. Christopher, and transferred to her on the books, and she received and accepted it, as she avers in her plea. Her obligation, in this instance particularly, is created by the acts of Congress, and not by any law of Florida.

1 Cook, Corp. § 250, pp. 540–544; Kerr v. Urie, supra.

By the Revised Statutes of the United States it is provided that the shareholders of every national banking association shall be held individually responsible, equally and ratably, and not one for another, for all contracts, debts, and engagements of such association, to the extent of the amount of their stock therein, at the par value thereof, in addition to the amount invested in such shares; that persons holding stock as executors, administrators, guardians, or trustees shall not be personally subject to any liabilities as stockholders, the estates and funds in their hands being liable in like manner and to the same extent as the testator, intestate, ward, or person interested in such trust-funds would be if living and competent to act and hold the stock in his own name; and that a receiver of a national bank may, if necessary, to pay the debts of such association, enforce the individual liability of the stockholders. Rev. Stat. §§ 5151, 5152, 5234, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, pp. 3465, 3507.

Proceeding under these statutes the receiver of the First National Bank of Florida brought this action against Henrietta S. Christopher (her husband, John G. Christopher, being joined as codefendant) to recover the amount due from her as a shareholder of that bank under an assessment made by the Comptroller of the Currency against the stockholders of that bank in order to pay its debts.

The case made by the record is this: At the time of the failure *of the bank, on [222] March 14th, 1903, fifteen shares of its stock stood in the name of Mrs. Christopher. The stock was bequeathed to her by her father in 1886, and his executors caused it to be transferred to her name on the books of the bank. This was done without any request from or direction by her. Although not aware of such transfer until the stock had been issued and delivered to her in November, 1887, since that date she has held the certificate for the fifteen shares. It is shown that in 1894, she joined with other shareholders in securing an amendment of the bank's articles of association, which extended the corporate existence of the bank until the close of business on May 26th, 1914. It further appears that she received several semiannual dividends, from 3 to 5 per cent, on her stock from November, 1887, up to and including February 1st, 1896, at which time the last dividend on the capital stock of the bank was declared and paid to stockholders. The dividends were paid by checks made payable to her order and personally indorsed by her. After the transfer of the stock Mrs. Christopher's name appeared on the registry of shareholders as the owner of the fifteen shares of stock, and the books kept by the bank showed the amount of dividends paid to her from time to time on those shares.

A personal judgment was rendered in the circuit court against Mrs. Christopher for the amount due on the assessment made by the Comptroller. The judgment was affirmed by the circuit court of appeals, which held that nothing in the law of Florida disabled married women from owning, in their own right, stock in national banking associations, and from incurring the liabilities resulting therefrom. 67 C. C. A. 438, 134 Fed. 842.

That the Comptroller had authority to make the assessment against stockholders, and that such assessment is conclusive as to the amount to be collected, cannot be questioned. Kennedy v. Gibson, 8 Wall. 498, 19 L. ed. 476; Casey v. Galli, 94 U. S. 681, 24 L. ed. 307; Keyser v. Hitz, 133 U. S. 138, 33 L. ed. 531, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 290; Bushnell v. Leland, 164 U. S. 684, 685, 41 L. ed. 598, 599, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 209.

[223] *Did the coverture of Mrs. Christopher at the time her name was placed on the books of the bank as a shareholder, as well as when she received the certificate of stock, protect her against a personal judgment at law for the amount due under the assessment made by the Comptroller of the Currency? That is the controlling question in the case.

This question is, we think, substantially answered by the judgment of this court in Keyser v. Hitz, 133 U. S. 138, 150–152, 33 L. ed. 531, 537, 538, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 290, 294, 295. That was an action at law against Mrs. Hitz, a married woman, who owned shares of stock in a savings bank which was converted into a national bank. The action against her was based on an assessment made by the Comptroller of the Currency. One of the contentions in the case was that the coverture of the defendant at the time she acquired the stock, as well as when the bank failed, protected her against an assessment under the act of Congress. The transaction occurred in the District of Columbia, where the bank was located. It was not contended that the defendant was incapacitated by the laws of the District from becoming the owner of bank stock, and hence the court did not consider what would have been the result if the local statutes had prohibited married women from becoming the owners of bank stock. Upon that basis, the court said: "Assuming, then, that she was not incapacitated from becoming the owner of stock in a bank, and that she was a shareholder in the savings bank,—she became, upon the conversion of that bank into a national bank, a shareholder in the latter. Rev. Stat. § 5154, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3466. In that event she became, by force of the statute, individually responsible to the amount of her stock, at the par value thereof, for the contracts, debts, and engagements of the national bank, equally and ratably with other shareholders. Section 5151, which imposes such individual responsibility upon the shareholders of national banks, makes no exception in favor of married women. The only persons holding shares of national bank stock, whom the statute exempts from this personal responsibility, are executors, administrators, guardians, or trustees. § 5152. It is not for *the courts, by mere construc-[224] tion, to recognize an exemption which Congress has not given." Again: "We are of opinion that the coverture of the defendant did not prevent the plaintiff from recovering a judgment against her for the amount of the assessment in question, if she was, within the meaning of the statute, a shareholder in the bank at the time of its suspension. But the question as to what property may be reached in the enforcement of such judgment is not before us, and we express no opinion upon it."

The present defendant insists that she was incapacitated under the Constitution of Florida and under the decisions of the supreme court of that state from becoming the owner of the stock bequeathed to her by her father. In support of this proposition we are referred to the following provision in a statute of Florida enacted November 6th, 1829: "The common and statute laws of England which are of a general, and not of a local, nature, with the exception hereinafter mentioned, down to the 4th day of July, 1776, be and the same are hereby declared to be in force in this state, provided the same be not inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of the United States and the acts of the legislature of this state." Also, to the following provisions of the Constitution of Florida: "All property, real and personal, of a wife, owned by her before marriage or lawfully acquired afterward by gift, devise, bequest, descent, or purchase, shall be her separate property, and the same shall not be liable for the debts of her husband without her consent, given by some instrument in writing, executed according to the law respecting conveyances by married women." Art. 11, § 1. "A married woman's real or personal property may be charged in equity and sold or the uses, rents, and profits thereof sequestrated for the purchase money thereof; or for money or things due upon any agreement made by her in writing for the benefit of her separate property, or for the price of any property purchased by her, or for labor and material used with her knowledge or [225] assent in *the construction of buildings, or repairs, or improvements upon her property, or for agricultural or other labor bestowed thereon with her knowledge or consent." Art. 11, § 2.

The argument is that at common law a married woman could not make, or bind herself personally by, a contract, and was incapable, by the law of Florida, as at common law, of entering into a contract, at least one that would subject her to personal liability; that the relation of a shareholder to a national banking association was of a contractual character; and consequently, to render a personal judgment against the defendant Mrs. Christopher was, in effect, to hold her personally bound by a contract which, under the laws of Florida, she was incapable of making.

The vice in this argument is in the assumption that the liability of Mrs. Christopher as a shareholder arises wholly out of contract between herself and the bank or its creditors; whereas, upon becoming a shareholder, she made, strictly, no direct contract with anyone, and became, as was held in Keyser v. Hitz, supra, by force of the statute individually responsible to the amount of her stock, for the contracts, debts, and engagements of the bank equally and ratably with other shareholders. Such statutory liability was created for the protection of creditors, and in order to strengthen the bank in the confidence of the public. The bank, although its shares of stock were private property, was an instrumentality of the general government in the conduct of its affairs. Farmers' & M. Nat. Bank v. Dearing, 91 U. S. 29, 33, 23 L. ed. 196, 198. In Davis v. Elmira Sav. Bank, 161 U. S. 275, 283, 40 L. ed. 700, 701, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 502, 503, the court said that "national banks are instrumentalities of the Federal government, created for a public purpose, and as such necessarily subject to the paramount authority of the United States." This principle was reaffirmed in Easton v. Iowa, 188 U. S. 220, 237, 47 L. ed. 452, 459, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 288. See also Pacific Nat. Bank v. Mixter, 124 U. S. 721, 31 L. ed. 567, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 718.

In McClaine v. Rankin, 197 U. S. 154, 161–163, 49 L. ed. 702, 705–707, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 410, 412, 413, which was an action against a shareholder of a national bank to recover the amount due on an assessment [226] made by the Comptroller of *the currency, and in which the question was as to the nature of the cause of action, this court said: "Some statutes imposing individual liability are merely in affirmation of the common law, while others impose an individual liability other than that at common law. If § 5151 had provided that subscribing to stock or taking shares of stock amounted to a promise directly to every creditor, then that liability would have been a liability by contract. But the words of § 5151 do not mean that the stockholder promises the creditor as surety for the debts of the corporation, but merely imposes a liability on him as secondary to those debts, which debts remain distinct, and to which the stockholder is not a party. The liability is a consequence of the breach by the corporation of its contract to pay, and is collateral and statutory. . . . But here the right to sue did not obtain until the Comptroller of the Currency had acted, and his order was the basis of the suit. The statute of limitations did not commence to run until assessment made, and then it ran as against an action to enforce the statutory liability, and not an action for breach of contract."

In Robinson v. Turrentine, 59 Fed. 554, 555, it was held that the liability of a married woman for an assessment upon national bank stock did not grow out of contract, although it was one of a class of liabilities which may be enforced by an action in form ex contractu. In the same case it was said: "By the banking laws of the United States all the shares in the stock of national banks are liable to an assessment like the one levied on the stock of plaintiff's bank. To hold that a state law, were there such a law, could except certain shares from the liability, would enable states to defeat the policy of the Federal government in establishing the national banking system. That the Congress has power to establish and legislate for such banks has not, since 1819, been an open question. M'Culloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 316, 4 L. ed. 579. If a purchase of stocks in a national bank by a married woman without the written consent of her husband gives her the ownership of such stock, judgment must be given against the feme defendant. *If she owned [227] the stock at the failure of the bank, she is liable to the assessment; if she did not, she is not liable. While the Federal government exclusively controls the question of the liabilities of stockholders in national banks, it is not doubted but that a state has power to say that, for reasons seeming good to its legislature, and not in conflict with organic law, a particular class of persons shall not be permitted to own particular classes of property."

In Kerr v. Urie, 86 Md. 72, 77, 38 L. R. A. 119, 121, 63 Am. St. Rep. 493, 496, 37 Atl. 789, 791, it was held that a married woman residing in Maryland was capable of holding shares of stock in a national bank located in Texas, and as such shareholder was subject to the personal liability imposed by the national banking laws, without regard to the question whether she was entitled, under the laws of the state where the bank was located, to become the owner of such stock. The court said: "We conclude, therefore, that by virtue of the transfer in Maryland, and without regard to the laws of Texas, Mrs. Urie became the equitable and real holder of the stock in question; and if this be so, no question as to her powers of disposition, or as to whether she is or is not capable under the laws of Texas to make contracts, can arise in this case, for the liability of a stockholder arises not under any law of Texas, which it is contended has not been proven in this case, but under the act of Congress; and the contracts which it is claimed she is liable on are not her contracts, but the contracts of the bank. Witters v. Sowles, 1 L. R. A. 64, 35 Fed. 641; U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5152. The right to be a stockholder is given to her by the law of the state where she resides, and her rights and liabilities as such as are provided by the acts of Congress."

Recurring to the provisions in the statute and Constitution of Florida it is clear that they do not incapacitate a married woman in that state from becoming the owner, by request or otherwise, of stock in a national banking association. On the contrary, it seems that all property, real or personal, owned by a married woman before marriage, or lawfully acquired afterward by gift, devise, bequest, descent, or pur-[228] chase, is her *separate property. Nevertheless, it is said, by the settled course of decisions in that state a married woman cannot bind herself personally by contract at law or in equity, or by becoming a partner, or by making a promissory note. Dollner v. Snow, 16 Fla. 86; Hodges v. Price, 18 Fla. 342; Goss v. Furman, 21 Fla. 406; De Graum v. Jones, 23 Fla. 83, 6 So. 925, and Randall v. Bourgardez, 23 Fla. 264, 11 Am. St. Rep. 379, 2 So. 310. But those cases are not in point here; for, in each of them, the personal liability attempted to be imposed upon the married woman arose entirely out of contract, express or implied, on her part, and not by force of any statute. The argument made in this case in behalf of Mrs. Christopher assumes that the liability sought to be fastened upon her arises wholly out of contract; that is, out of an implied obligation, at the time her name was placed on the registry of shares and she received dividends, to contribute to the extent of the value of such shares to the payment of the debts of the bank. But that implied obligation, although contractual in its nature, could not, standing alone, be made the basis of this action. Without the statute she could not be made liable individually for the debts of the bank at all. No implied obligation to contribute to the payment of such debts could arise from the single fact that she became and was a shareholder. Her liability for the debts of the bank is created by the statute, although in a limited sense there is an element of contract in her having become a shareholder; and the right of the receiver to maintain this action depends upon, and has its sanction in, the statute creating liability against each shareholder, in whatever way he may have become such. There have been cases in which there appeared such elements of contract as were deemed sufficient, in particular circumstances, to support an action. First Nat. Bank v. Hawkins, 174 U. S. 364, 372, 43 L. ed. 1007, 1011, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 739; Whitman v. National Bank, 176 U. S. 559, 565, 566, 44 L. ed. 587, 591, 592, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 477; Matteson v. Dent, 176 U. S. 521, 44 L. ed. 571, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 419. But that fact does not justify the contention that an action upon an assessment made by the Comptroller is not based upon the statute.

*In McDonald v. Thompson, 184 U. S. 71, [229]
73, 46 L. ed. 437, 439, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 297, 298, which was the case of a formal subscription to the capital stock of a national bank, and which also involved the meaning of the words "contract or promise in writing" in a statute of limitations, the court said: "There was no contract in writing with the creditors or depositors of the bank, and none with the bank itself, to which the receiver could be said to be a privy, except to pay for the stock as originally issued. Granting there was a contract with the creditors to pay a sum equal to the value of the stock taken, in addition to the sum invested in the shares, this was a contract created by the statute, and obligatory upon the stockholders by reason of the statute existing at the time of their subscription; but it was not a contract within the meaning of the Nebraska act [of limitation], since the writing—that is, the subscription—contained no reference whatever to the statutory obligation, and no promise to respond beyond the amount of the subscription. In none of the numerous cases upon the subject in this court is this obligation treated as an express contract, but as one created by the statute and implied from the express contract of the stockholders to take and pay for shares in the association." All shareholders of stock in national banks become such, subject to the condition, declared by statute, that liability, to the extent of their shares, is imposed upon them for the contracts, debts, and engagements of the bank. The statute, in effect, says to all who become owners of national bank stock, no matter in what way they become shareholders, that they cannot enjoy the benefits accruing to shareholders, and escape liability for the contracts, debts, and engagements of the bank. In other words, the government that created the bank has prescribed the terms upon which ownership of its shares could be acquired, and individual liability incurred by shareholders,—executors, administrators, guardians, or trustees only being exempted from individual liability. No exception is made in favor of married women holding property. If the Constitution or statutes of Florida had expressly incapacitated or for-[230] bidden *a married woman from becoming, under any circumstances, the owner of bank shares,—as counsel for plaintiff in error insists is the case,—a question would be presented that does not arise upon the record of this case; and as the local law does not forbid married women from becoming the owners of bank stock, we do not go beyond what is necessary for the decision of the present case under the national banking law. All that we now decide is that the court below properly interpreted the statute, and did not err in rendering a personal judgment against Mrs. Christopher, as a shareholder in the bank, for the amount due under the assessment of the Comptroller. In what way the plaintiff may proceed in order to obtain satisfaction of the judgment is not a question to be determined in this action.

Judgment affirmed.

SUMNER WALLACE et al.

1. Courts—jurisdiction of Federal circuit court—case arising under Federal laws.—A case arising under the laws of the United States, of which a Federal circuit court has jurisdiction without reference to diversity of citizenship, is presented by a bill filed by the holder of a non-negotiable note, given by a national bank which afterwards went into voluntary liquidation, to exact in behalf of himself and all other creditors of the bank the stockholder's liability imposed by U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5151, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3465, which, under the act of June 30, 1876 (19 Stat. at L. 63, chap. 156, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3509), § 2, may be enforced by a bill in the nature of a creditors' bill whenever the bank has availed itself of the provisions of § 5220 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3503), for voluntary liquidation.

2. Pleading—creditors' bill—multifariousness.—A bill filed by the holder of a non-negotiable note given by a national bank which afterwards went into voluntary liquidation is not multifarious because the complainant seeks by such bill, on behalf of himself and all other creditors, the winding up of its affairs, the determination of the amount due on his note, the ascertainment of all the creditors and the amount of their claims, the subjection of the remaining assets to the payment of those claims, and the enforcement of the statutory liability of the stockholders.

3. Equity—creditors' bill—necessity of judgment at law.—No judgment at law on a note given by a national bank is prerequisite to a suit by the holder, one object of which is to subject to the satisfaction of the debt certain property conveyed to the trustee as security therefor.

4. National banks—stockholder's liability—valid obligations.—The notes of a national bank, given when embarrassed by pressing demands, in part consideration of the assumption by the payee of all its outstanding obligations, secured by a pledge of all its assets remaining after turning over cash and such bills receivable as the payee would accept at par, are its valid obligations, which can be enforced against its stockholders after voluntary liquidation.

On the enforcement of statutory liability of stockholders in national banks—see note to Williamson v. American Bank, 52 C. C. A. 6.

National Bank and the Union National Bank, hereinafter called respectively the American and Union bank, were each engaged in business in the city of Omaha, Nebraska. During that month the American bank was in such financial condition that it became necessary for it to provide for the payment of a large amount of deposits on or about January 1, 1896, and, though possessed of abundant nominal assets, did not have sufficient funds to make such payment. It knew that a neglect to pay would precipitate a run and bring on a failure of the bank. Thereupon, in order to obtain the money necessary therefor, its officers and leading stockholders entered into negotiations with the Union bank for the payment of its immediate obligations, and thus enabling it to secure an opportunity to realize upon its assets. As a result of such negotiations a contract was entered into by and between the two banks, through their boards of directors. By its terms the Union bank was to assume the payment of all the liabilities of the American bank, receiving therefor cash and such bills receivable as it was willing to accept at par and without recourse. The difference between the amounts so received and the liabilities assumed was to be represented by three non-negotiable promissory notes of the American bank, the payment of which was to be secured by a pledge of all its remaining assets to Thomas L. Kimball, as trustee. This contract was carried out. The Union bank moved into and took possession of the offices of the American bank. Upon adjustment, as above indicated, the difference was found to be $201,000, for which the American bank executed to the Union bank three non-negotiable promissory [232] *notes, each being for $67,000, and payable in one, two, and three years, respectively. In accordance with the contract the remaining assets of the American bank were placed in the hands of the trustee, Thomas L. Kimball, who proceeded to collect them and apply the proceeds on the notes until his death during the pendency of this suit. Subsequently a successor was appointed, who continued in performance of the trust until the entry of the decree. The execution of the contract of December 21, 1895, by the president and cashier of the American bank, was directed by resolution of its board of directors. On January 14, 1896, at an annual meeting of the shareholders of that bank, at which were represented 1,665¾ shares out of a total of 2,000, a resolution was adopted instructing the directors to take action looking to the liquidation of the bank. On February 25, 1896, another meeting of the shareholders was held, at which 1,696 shares were represented, and a resolution for voluntary liquidation was adopted by an affirmative vote of 1,639¾ shares. The Union bank fulfilled its obligations under the contract, having taken up all the liabilities assumed by it. The trustee meeting with little success in collection of the assets, this suit was, after the first note had matured, instituted in the circuit court of the United States for the district of Nebraska by Sumner Wallace, a citizen of New Hampshire, to whom the note had been transferred, against the Union bank, Thomas L. Kimball, the trustee, the American bank and its stockholders, including the appellants. By an amended bill the complainant sought, on behalf of himself and all other creditors of the American bank, the winding up of the affairs of that bank, the determination of the amount due upon his note, the ascertainment of all the creditors and the amounts of their claims, the subjection of the remaining assets to the payment of those claims, and the enforcement of the liability of the stockholders. He had not reduced the note to judgment prior to the commencement of this suit. Upon a final hearing a decree was entered ascertaining the amounts due the complainant and the Union bank * (they being the only creditors) [233] after the application of all credits, the number of shares of stock held by each shareholder of the American bank, and directing a recovery of $97.23 on account of each share of stock. This decree was affirmed by the United States circuit court of appeals for the eighth circuit (68 C. C. A. 40, 135 Fed. 286), from whose decision an appeal was taken to this court.

Mr. Westel W. Morsman submitted the cause for appellants. Mr. Howard B. Smith was on the brief:

King v. Pomeroy, 58 C. C. A. 209, 121 Fed. 291.

Mr. Justice Brewer delivered the opinion of the court:

A matter of jurisdiction is first presented. The note, which is the foundation of plaintiff's suit, is one made by the American bank to the Union bank, both located in Nebraska, and, under the statute, for the purpose of jurisdiction, to be considered citizens of Nebraska. 25 Stat. at L. 436, chap. 866, § 4 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 514). The plaintiff is a citizen of New Hampshire. [241] He could not maintain *an action against the maker of the note, although a citizen of a state other than that of the maker and payee. 25 Stat. at L. 434, chap. 866, § 1. But if diverse citizenship was the sole basis of the jurisdiction of the circuit court, the decision of the court of appeals would be final and there would be no appeal to this court. 26 Stat. at L. 828, chap. 517, § 6 (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 549). But the jurisdiction of the circuit court was not invoked on the ground of diverse citizenship,—at least, not on that alone. The case presented was one arising under the laws of the United States. It was a suit to enforce a special right given by those laws. Section 5220, Rev. Stat. (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3503), reads: "Any [national banking] association may go into liquidation and be closed by the vote of its shareholders owning two thirds of its stock."

By § 5151, Rev. Stat. (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3465), stockholders in national banks are made liable for "all contracts, debts, and engagements of such association, to the extent of the amount of their stock therein, at the par value thereof, in addition to the amount invested in such shares." Section 2 of the act of June 30, 1876 (19 Stat. at L. 63, chap. 156, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3509), is as follows:

"Sec. 2. That when any national banking association shall have gone into liquidation under the provisions of section five thousand two hundred and twenty of said statutes, the individual liability of the shareholders provided for by section fifty-one hundred and fifty-one of said statutes may be enforced by any creditor of such association, by bill in equity in the nature of a creditor's bill, brought by such creditor on behalf of himself and of all other creditors of the association, against the shareholders thereof, in any court of the United States having original jurisdiction in equity for the district in which such association may have been located or established."

More than two thirds of the stock voted, on February 25, 1896, for a voluntary liquidation, and on April 27, 1896, the Comptroller of the Currency formally approved the liquidation and notified the cashier of the American bank to that effect.

In proceeding, therefore, by this suit to enforce, in behalf *of himself and all other [242] creditors of the American bank, the extra liability imposed by Rev. Stat. § 5151, a case was presented arising under the laws of the United States, and of which, independently of the matter of diverse citizenship, the circuit court had jurisdiction.

The bill is not multifarious. "The two subjects of applying the assets of the bank and enforcing the liability of the stockholders, however otherwise distinct, are by the statute made connected parts of the whole series of transactions which constitute the liquidation of the affairs of the bank." Richmond v. Irons, 121 U. S. 27, 50, 30 L. ed. 864, 871, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 788, 798.

It is suggested that no judgment had been obtained upon the note prior to this suit in equity, but as one object of the suit was to subject to the satisfaction of the debt certain property conveyed to a trustee as security therefor, no judgment at law was a prerequisite. Day v. Washburn, 24 How. 352, 16 L. ed. 712; Case v. Beauregard (Case v. New Orleans & C. R. Co.) 101 U. S. 688, 691, 25 L. ed. 1004, 1005, in which the court said:

"Without pursuing this subject further, it may be said that whenever a creditor has a trust in his favor, or a lien upon property for the debt due him, he may go into equity without exhausting legal processes or remedies. Tappan v. Evans, 11 N. H. 311; Holt v. Bancroft, 30 Ala. 193."

We come, then, to the final question in the case, and that is whether the notes executed by the American bank were its valid obligations. And in reference to this question these are the significant facts: The demands against the American bank were pressing. It had not the money with which to meet them. It arranged with the Union bank to advance the money for the payment of all its outstanding obligations. When the Union bank paid these obligations of the American bank it was the same as though it advanced money to that bank to pay them. To reimburse and secure the former the latter bank turned over certain property, and executed these notes for the balance, securing them by a pledge of all its other assets, which were placed in the hands of its president, as trustee.

[243] *All the stipulations and agreements made by the directors of the two banks were carried out in good faith; and, with full knowledge of what had been done, the stockholders voted for a voluntary liquidation. The borrowing of the money by the American bank did not necessarily put it into liquidation. It had a large amount of assets, and if the real had equaled the nominal value of these assets, it would have been enabled, after discharging its obligation to the Union bank, to continue business. But, on an examination, the stockholders felt that it was wiser to stop at once. But that decision did not at all impugn the wisdom or bona fides of the transaction by which the money was obtained to pay off the pressing demands of the American bank. The question, therefore, is, whether a national bank, finding itself embarrassed, with a large amount of assets, much in excess of its obligations, yet without the cash to make payment of those which are due and urgent, can borrow to meet those pressing demands. A very natural answer is, why not? It is not borrowing money to engage in a new business. It simply exchanges one creditor for others. There may be wisdom in consolidating all its debts into the hands of one person. At least such a consolidation cannot be pronounced beyond its powers. When time is obtained by the new indebtedness (in this case a year) it gives the borrowing bank and its officers and stockholders time to consider and determine the wisdom of attempting a further prosecution of business. In the case of an individual it would be a legitimate and often a wise transaction. It is not in terms prohibited by the national banking act. Aldrich v. Chemical Nat. Bank, 176 U. S. 618, 44 L. ed. 611, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 498, is very clearly in point. The opinion in that case is quite lengthy and considers many authorities, but the gist of the decision is expressed in these words (p. 635, L. ed. p. 617, Sup. Ct. Rep. p. 505):

"Without further citation of cases we adjudge, both upon principle and authority, that as the money of the Chemical bank was obtained under a loan negotiated by the vice president of the Fidelity bank, who assumed to represent it in the transaction, and as the Fidelity bank used the money so obtained in *its banking business and for [244] its own benefit, the latter bank, having enjoyed the fruits of the transaction, cannot avoid accountability to the New York bank, even if it were true, as contended, that the Fidelity bank could not, consistently with the law of its creation, have itself borrowed the money."

We are of the opinion that the notes given by the American bank for the money advanced by the Union bank were its valid obligations, and can, therefore, be enforced against its stockholders.

Mr. Westel W. Morsman also submitted the cause for appellant in No. 193:

In order to invoke the jurisdiction granted of suits arising under a Federal statute, it is necessary to show, by proper averments in the bill, that the matter to be litigated is a Federal question.

The Union National was a volunteer. It was not required to pay by any prior obligation or for the protection of some interest or right of its own. It assumed and paid the debts of the American National upon an original agreement, for a new consideration, and because it was believed to be a profitable venture. This creates no right to equitable subrogation.

This case is also an appeal by a stockholder from the same decree, and presents only this difference: This stockholder voted against the resolutions passed by the stockholders, looking to a voluntary liquidation. There is, therefore, nothing of a personal estoppel to be adjudged against him, but we do not think that that is material. The requisite amount of stock was voted in favor of what was done in the way of voluntary liquidation, and he, as a stockholder, is bound by that, although personally he dissented from the action. MICHIGAN CENTRAL RAILROAD COMPANY, Appt.,

PERRY F. POWERS, Auditor General of the State of Michigan.

1. Constitutional law—delegation of legislative power.—Legislative functions are not unlawfully delegated by the provisions of Mich. Pub. Acts 1901, act No. 173, for the taxation of railroad and certain other corporate property at the average rate of taxation imposed on all other property within the state subject to ad valorem taxes because such average rate is to be ascertained by the state board of assessors by dividing the total tax levied on such other property by the value of such property as returned by the local assessors and board of state tax commissioners.

2. Taxation of corporations—rate.—The mere fact that all the other property in the state, wherever situated, is taken into consideration in fixing the average rate of taxation at which, under Mich. Pub. Acts 1901, act No. 173, railroad and certain other corporate property is to be assessed, does not carry with it such proof of injustice and inequality as necessarily to invalidate the tax.

3. Taxation of corporations—validity under Federal Constitution.—Nothing in the Federal Constitution prevents a state from singling out railroad and other corporate property and taxing it for state purposes in a manner and at a rate different from that applicable to other property.

4. Taxation of corporations—necessity for equalization.—The lack of any provision for an equalization of railroad property with other property in the state in Mich. Pub. Acts 1901, act No. 173, authorizing the taxation of railroad property at the average rate of taxation imposed on other property in the state, does not vitiate the assessment, where the statute names the time and place for the sessions of the assessing board, and gives to any person or company interested the right to be heard, and authorizes the board to correct the valuation.

Argued February 21, 23, 26, 1906. Decided April 2, 1906.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Michigan to review a decree dismissing a bill to restrain the enforcement against a railroad company of the provisions of a state law for the assessment and collection of taxes on railroad and certain other corporate property. Affirmed.

See same case below, 138 Fed. 223.

Statement by Mr. Justice Brewer:

This suit was brought in the circuit court of the United States for the western district of Michigan to restrain the respondent, the auditor general of the state, from enforcing against the appellant the provisions of act No. 173 of the Michigan Laws of 1901, an act to provide for the assessment of the property of railroad and certain other companies, for the levying of taxes thereon by a state board of assessors, and for the collection of such taxes. The taxes involved in the suit are those for 1902, resulting from the first assessment under the statute.

NOTE.—On the delegation of legislative power —see note to Bradshaw v. Lankford, 11 L.R.A. 582.

On constitutional equality in relation to corporate taxation—see note to Bacon v. State Tax Comrs. 60 L.R.A. 321.

Prior to the year 1900 the Constitution of Michigan contained, in art. 14, the following sections applicable to taxation:

"Sec. 10. The state may continue to collect all specific taxes accruing to the treasury under existing laws. The legislature may provide for the collection of specific taxes from banking, railroad, plank road, and other corporations hereafter created.

"Sec. 11. The legislature shall provide a uniform rule of taxation, except on property paying specific taxes, and taxes shall be levied on such property as shall be prescribed by law.

"Sec. 12. All assessments hereafter authorized shall be on property at its cash value.

"Sec. 13. The legislature shall provide for an equalization by a state board in the year one thousand eight hundred and fifty-one, and every fifth year thereafter, of assessments on all taxable property except that paying specific taxes.

"Section 14. Every law which imposes, continues, or revives a tax shall distinctly state the tax, and the object to which it is to be applied; and it shall not be sufficient to refer to any other law to fix such tax or object."

[248] *In that year §§ 10, 11, and 13 were amended so as to read as follows:

"Sec. 10. The state may continue to collect all specific taxes accruing to the treasury under existing laws. The legislature may provide for the collection of specific taxes from corporations. The legislature may provide for the assessment of the property of corporations, at its true cash value, by a state board of assessors, and for the levying and collection of taxes thereon. All taxes hereafter levied on the property of such classes of corporations as are paying specific taxes under laws in force on November sixth, A. D. nineteen hundred, shall be applied as provided for specific state taxes in § 1 of this article.

"Sec. 11. The legislature shall provide an uniform rule of taxation, except on property paying specific taxes, and taxes shall be levied on such property as shall be prescribed by law: Provided, That the legislature shall provide an uniform rule of taxation for such property as shall be assessed by a state board of assessors, and the rate of taxation on such property shall be the rate which the state board of assessors shall ascertain and determine is the average rate levied upon other property upon which ad valorem taxes are assessed for state, county, township, school, and municipal purposes.

"Sec. 13. In the year one thousand nine hundred and one, and every fifth year thereafter, and at such other times as the legislature may direct, the legislature shall provide for an equalization of assessments by a state board, on all taxable property, except that taxed under laws passed pursuant to § 10 of this article."

This change in the Constitution was doubtless owing to a decision of the supreme court of the state (Pingree v. Auditor General [Pingree v. Dix] 120 Mich. 95, 44 L. R. A. 679, 78 N. W. 1025), of date of April 26, 1899, holding unconstitutional an act passed in 1881 in respect to the assessment and taxation of telegraph and telephone lines. An act 19 of 1899, passed March 15, 1899, and commonly called the "Atkinson bill," was subject to the same objections as the *act of [249] 1881, and was evidently regarded as equally unconstitutional. Indeed, though not directly involved in that suit, it was referred to in the opinion of Mr. Justice Montgomery.

The act in controversy (Pub. Acts 1901, act No. 173) provides that the board of state tax commissioners shall constitute a state board of assessors, who are to assess the railroad and certain other corporate property in the state. Section 5 contains the following:

"Sec. 5. The term 'property' as used in this act shall be deemed to include all property, real or personal, belonging to the corporation subject to taxation under this act, including the right of way, roadbed, stations, cars, rolling stock, tracks, wagons, horses, office furniture, telegraph or telephone poles, wires, conduits, switch boards and all other property used in carrying on the business of said corporations or owned by them respectively, and all other real and personal property and all franchises, said franchises not to be directly assessed, but to be taken into consideration in determining the value of the other property: Provided, however, That this definition shall not include, apply to, or subject to taxation, such real estate as is owned and can be conveyed by such corporations under the laws of this state which is not actually occupied in the exercise of their franchises or in use in the proper operation of their roads or their corporate business; but such real estate so excepted shall be liable to taxation in the same manner and for the same purposes and to the same extent and subject to the same conditions and limitations as to the collection and return of taxes thereon, as is other real estate in the several townships or municipalities in which the same may be situate. The term 'company,' 'corporations,' or 'associations,' wherever used in this act, shall apply to and be construed as referring respectively to any railroad company, union station and depot company, express company, car-loaning company, or refrigerator or fast freight line company, and any and all other corporations subject to taxation under this act. The term 'property having a situs in this state' shall include all the property, [250] real and personal, *of the corporations enumerated in this act, owned, used, and occupied by them within the limits of this state, and also such proportion of the rolling stock, cars, and other property of such corporations as is used partly within and partly without this state, as herein provided to be determined."

By §§ 6 and 7 the several corporations are required to furnish information as to various matters of fact bearing on the matter of assessment. By § 8 property is to be assessed at its "true cash value" on the second Monday of April of each year, and, for the purposes of the assessment, the board of assessors is authorized to make personal inspection of the property, to take into consideration the reports filed under the act, and such other evidence as may be obtainable bearing thereon. In respect to the property of railroads running partly within and partly without the state, the board is directed to be guided in respect to the matter of taxation of property within the state by the relation which the number of miles of main track within the state bears to the entire mileage of the main track, both within and without the state. By § 10 the board is required to meet at the capitol at Lansing on the third Monday of December, and continue in session so long as may be necessary, not later than January 15 next thereafter, for the purpose of reviewing the assessment roll, and any person or company interested has the right to appear during said period and be heard by the assessors, and they are authorized on such application, or on their own motion, to correct the assessment or valuation. Sections 11 and 12 prescribe the method for fixing the rate of tax, the purpose being to impose upon the railroad property the average rate of taxation levied upon other property upon which ad valorem taxes are assessed. This method is accurately described by counsel for the railroad company in these words:

"The new and peculiar feature of the statute lies in the application to corporate property of a special rate of tax, known as the 'average rate,' which is derived by the following process: The total ad valorem taxes for all purposes,—state, county, city, *township, village, and school district,—paid [251] by property in Michigan which is taxed otherwise than under act 173, are divided by the total assessments of such property, whether made by one or another assessor, and the quotient resulting from this process of division is the rate of tax applied to corporate property under act 173."

By § 16 the taxes collected from corporations under this act are to "be applied in paying the interest upon the primary school, university, and other educational funds, and the interest and principal of the state debt, in the order herein recited, until the extinguishment of the state debt other than the amounts due to educational funds, when such taxes shall be added to and constitute a part of the primary-school interest fund."

After a full hearing upon pleadings and proofs the circuit court entered a decree dismissing the bill (138 Fed. 223), whereupon the plaintiff appealed directly to this court, under § 5 of the circuit court of appeals act.

Mr. Lloyd W. Bowers argued the cause, and, with Messrs. O. E. Butterfield, A. C. Angell, Henry Russell, Ashley Pond, and Benton Hanchett, filed a brief for appellant:

There are features of taxation so planted in its very nature—so essential to prevent taxation from being a mere arbitrary exaction—that they are opposed to the very idea of any government by law.

The fundamental theory on which municipal corporations are allowed to be created is representative self-government. The grant by the state legislature of legislative power, including that of taxation, to such bodies, is a historical and recognized exception to the rule against delegation of legislative power, and is upheld only because it is strictly and entirely within the principle of representative government, and, indeed, is a more immediate and complete application of that principle.

The legislature of Michigan, in imposing the "average rate" of tax, cannot be supposed to have considered and determined that such tax will yield an amount of revenue proportioned to the state's need of revenue, unless it is reasonable to estimate the revenue which the state needs by the revenues which the counties, cities, towns, villages, and school districts of Michigan raise for their purely local purposes.

People v. Fire Asso. of Philadelphia, 92 N. Y. 311, 44 Am. Rep. 380.

Courts may consider independently whether the purpose of the so-called tax is really public, even if the legislature has declared it in terms to be public; whether property sought to be taxed is really within the legislature's jurisdiction, even if the legislature has pronounced it to be; whether a tax is really uniform (when the state Constitution requires it to be uniform), even though the legislature, by adopting it, has given it presumptive propriety; and whether a thing called by the legislature a "tax" is really a tax at all, or rather a taking of private property for public purposes without compensation.

This rule requires more than that the tax be laid by, and paid into the treasury of, a government from which the taxpayer benefits. It demands that one taxpayer be not charged more than others of the expenses of the government which they both enjoy, because of and in proportion to the taxes which those others pay for the support of other governments from which the first-named taxpayer does not benefit.

It is not enough for the state legislature to say that there shall be a tax, and then leave the amount of the tax to be fixed by others. There is no tax until its amount is prescribed; and the body that determines the amount levies the tax.

And the legislature that taxes, and therefore fixes the amount of tax, must be that which represents the taxpayer; that is, the legislature which is chosen by the community which includes the taxpayer or his property. Nothing is more fundamental than this requirement.

In order to be representative, a legislature must be not only chosen by the community for which it acts, but likewise chosen to act for, and upon, the persons or property affected. Nobody outside the limits of a particular county, city, village, town, or school district participates in the selection of the members of its local legislature; and the purpose of their selection is to legislate for the particular community which chooses them.

The rule that a taxpayer is constitutionally entitled to a hearing on the amount of his tax includes the right of hearing on that point before the legislature. Such privilege is part of the general right of appearance before, or petition to, the legislature, which is part of the law of the land.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 7th ed. 497, 498; 2 Story, Const. § 1894; United States v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 542, 23 L. ed. 588; State Tax-Law Cases, 54 Mich. 350, 20 N. W. 493; *Fallbrook Irrig. The courts have recognized: 1. That persons are within the equal protection of the laws as to taxation.

2. That while the legislature, in imposing taxes, may exercise a wide discretion, in subjecting property to different forms and amounts of taxation, that discretion must rest upon a reasonable basis, and the discriminations made by the legislature in taxation of different sorts of property must not be arbitrary, in the sense of resting upon no fact that affords a just ground for such course.

3. That no more in taxation than in other fields of legislation are any persons to be deprived of those things that are more fundamental in our government, and are always essential to any real protection of the government's subjects, such as the decision of legislative questions by a popular and representative legislature; the right of appeal to the courts on questions of judicial character; opportunity for hearing before either the legislature or the court that determines the subject's rights; and the avoidance, in all fundamental ways, of such things as, in Justice Bradley's words, "are of an unusual character, unknown to the practice of our governments."

Mr. Benton Hanchett also argued the cause, and, with Messrs. O. E. Butterfield, A. C. Angell, Henry Russell, Ashley Pond, and Lloyd Bowers, filed a brief for appellant:

The provision for the equal protection of the laws is to be liberally construed to carry out its purposes.

The inquiry is not limited to the operation of a single law. The question is whether, under the different and several laws of the state, a protection of rights is afforded to a part of the persons within the state which is denied to others.

Wherever provisions are made by the laws of the state which give protection to one class of persons against the deprivation of life, liberty, or property, and those provisions are withheld from other persons who, in like conditions and for the same reasons, are in need of like protection, there is class legislation which contravenes the equal protection of the laws.

Inequalities in burdens of taxation imposed upon persons who are in like conditions, and which inequalities arise from different provisions of the law itself, and can be foreseen and provided against, constitute discrimination which is a denial of equal protection.

Other taxpayers of the state not subjected to taxation under said act No. 173 are protected by the principle everywhere recognized as fundamental, viz., the principle of self-taxation by the legislative action of representatives who are directly responsible to the taxpayers of the district in which the taxes are levied. This is especially the fundamental principle of taxation in the state of Michigan.

To determine the tax, when it is an ad valorem tax, requires that the legislature state the amount to be raised or the rate of the tax upon the dollar of the valuation. The determination of the amount to be raised, or the rate of taxation on the valuation, is the essential, the chief and necessary act in taxation. In the nature of the case, the determination of the amount, or the rate, is a legislative act. Being a necessary act of the legislature, it is not in the power of the state, in the preservation of the established principles of American law, which constitute the law of the land, to delegate or refer such determination to the action of any other body of officials. It cannot be referred to and made to depend upon the legislative or discretionary action of the municipalities.

In the determination of a tax by the legislature it is an essential of just legislation that the legislature act in view of, and determine the needs of the public in respect to, the objects for which moneys are to be raised by taxation, and of the amount necessary to provide for those needs, and also the extent to which it is just to burden the taxpayers against whom the taxes are to be charged. These are principles which are fundamental in taxation.

Midland Twp. v. Roscommon Twp. 39 Mich. 424; Michigan Land & Iron Co. v. L'Anse Twp. 63 Mich. 700, 30 N. W. 331.

Where the amount of the tax to be raised, or the rate of taxation, is determined by the legislature itself, the taxpayers who are to be charged with the taxes have a right to and an opportunity to be heard by the legislature upon the whole subject of the taxation, including the purpose of the tax, the needs of the public for the promotion of the object for which the taxes are to be imposed, the amount of taxation required for those needs, and the amount which can be properly and justly charged against the taxpayers.

The Constitution of Michigan grants to the taxpayers the absolute right to a hearing before the legislature upon the measures to be adopted for their taxation.

State Tax-Law Cases, 54 Mich. 350, 20 N. W. 493.

The determination of a district for taxation—that is, what property shall be subject to taxation—for local purposes, is legislative action; and when, instead of the legislature making that determination, it delegates to a board of commissioners the power to determine the taxing district, the taxpayers have a right to a hearing upon that subject before such board. The deprivation of the right to such hearing would be taking property by taxation without due process of law.

Mr. Loyal E. Knappen filed a separate brief for appellee on the question of undervaluation.

Mr. Justice Brewer delivered the opinion of the court:

The unconstitutionality of a statute may depend upon its conflict with the Constitution of the state or with that of the *United [291] States. If conflict with the state Constitution is the sole gound of attack, the supreme court of the state is the final authority (Merchants' & M. Nat. Bank v. Pennsylvania, 167 U. S. 461, 42 L. ed. 236, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 829, and cases cited in the opinion); while, in the other case, the ultimate decision rests with this court. The validity of this act has not been directly presented to or determined by the state court, but the first attack by the parties interested is made in the Federal court and by this suit, and conflict with both Constitutions is alleged. Undoubtedly a Federal court has the jurisdiction, and, when the question is properly presented, it may often become its duty, to pass upon an alleged conflict between a statute and the state Constitution, even before the question has been considered by the state tribunals. All objections to the validity of the act, whether springing out of the state or of the Federal Constitution, may be presented in a single suit, and call for consideration and determination. At the same time the Federal courts will be reluctant to adjudge a state statute to be in conflict with the state Constitution before that question has been considered by the state tribunals. Especially is this true when the statute is one affecting the revenues of the state, and therefore of general public interest. Coulter v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 196 U. S. 599-609, 49 L. ed. 615-618, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 342. And this reluctance becomes more imperative when the statute has been before the highest court of the state, and a decision rendered upon the assumption that it is valid, and this, although the direct question of validity was not presented nor determined.

In the case at bar the rate of taxation imposed upon the railroad and other corporate property is the average rate of taxation upon other property subject to ad valorem taxes, and that average rate is ascertained by dividing the total tax levy on all such property by the value of the property. In Board of Education v. State Assessors, 133 Mich. 116, 94 N. W. 668, the following case arising under the statute was presented (p. 117, N. W. p. 668):

"This is an application for a mandamus. It sets out, in substance, that the state board of assessors, in levying the tax upon the railroad property of this state, has as-[292] sumed to fix the rate *of taxation by dividing the total tax levy on all property other than railroad property by the value of such other property, as determined by the defendant board, by adding to the actual assessed value of such property as fixed by the local assessors and by the board of state tax commissioners, acting under the authority of the law relating to the assessment of taxes, the sum of $296,748,142, thus making the aggregate divisor in determining the rate of taxation that much in excess of the assessed valuation, thereby reducing the rate to be levied upon the railroad property of the state, and thus reducing the amount which the relator would receive as its portion of the tax assessed against railroad property by a very substantial sum."

This application was sustained, the court holding that the state board of assessors had no power to increase the value as returned to them by the local assessors and board of state tax commissioners, and saying (p. 119, N. W. p. 669):

"A fair reading of this language of the statute, we think, leads to the conclusion that the board of assessors has imposed upon it the duty, ministerial in character, of determining by a computation from data, which the law provides for placing in its hands, the rate of taxation which other property in the state is subjected to, as it appears by assessment rolls which are supposed to contain an accurate and true assessment of all property at its full cash value."

While this case did not directly determine the constitutionality of the statute, a fair implication is that it was not regarded as obviously in conflict with the state Constitution, for in that event the court would scarcely have taken time to consider the validity of proceedings under its authority.

We, therefore, proceed to inquire whether the provisions of this act and the method of taxation therein prescribed are open to any constitutional objection. We have had frequent occasion to consider questions of state taxation in the light of the Federal Constitution, and the scope and limits of national interference are well settled. There is no general supervision *on the part of the na- [293] tion over state taxation, and, in respect to the latter, the state has, speaking generally, the freedom of a sovereign, both as to objects and methods. It was well said by Judge Wanty, delivering the opinion of the circuit court in this case (p. 232):

"There can at this time be no question, after the frequent and uniform expressions of the Federal Supreme Court, that it was not designed by the 14th Amendment to the Constitution to prevent a state from changing its system of taxation in all proper and reasonable ways, nor to compel the states to adopt an iron rule of equality, to prevent the classification of property for purposes of taxation, or the imposition of different rates upon different classes. It is enough that there is no discrimination in favor of one as against another of the same class, and the method for the assessment and collection of the tax is not inconsistent with natural justice. Bell's Gap R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 134 U. S. 232, 33 L. ed. 892, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 533; Giozza v. Tiernan, 148 U. S. 657, 662, 37 L. ed. 599, 601, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 721; *Adams Exp. The first and principal matter of attack is the "average rate." It is contended that the fixing of the rate of taxation is a legislative function; that in ascertaining the average rate by the method described there is no exercise of the legislative judgment, but that it is determined by the action of the various local assessing and taxing boards, [294] who, though charged with no *duty of inquiry as to the necessities of the state or the proper rate of taxation of railroad property, are in fact the only officials exercising any discretion and judgment.

There might be a question whether, even if there were a clear delegation of legislative functions to other departments of the state government, it would be void under the Federal Constitution. Whatever, in view of the distinct grant in the Federal Constitution to the President, Congress, and the Judiciary of separately the executive, legislative, and judicial powers of the nation, may be the power of Congress in the delegation of legislative functions, a very different question is presented when the restrictions of the Federal Constitution are invoked to restrain like action in a state. Crimes against the nation must be prosecuted by indictment, yet a state may proceed by information. Suppose a state, by its Constitution, grants legislative functions to the executive, or to the judiciary, what provision of the Federal Constitution will nullify the action? Will the grant work an abandonment of a republican form of government, or be a denial of due process, or equal protection?

But it is unnecessary to enter into a discussion of this question, for in the case at bar there is no abandonment by the legislature of its functions in respect to taxation. The statute prescribes, as the rate of taxation upon railroad property, the average rate of taxation on all other property subject to ad valorem taxes. It provides the most direct way for ascertaining such average rate,—deducing it from a consideration of all the other rates. No authority is given to the local assessors to apply their judgment to the question of the railroad rate. Their authority in respect to the matter of taxation is precisely the same as it was before and independently of this statute. Their duty is to act according to their judgments in respect to local taxes committed to their charge. When they have finished their action, taken, as it must be assumed to have been, in conscientious discharge of the duties assigned, from it, by a simple mathematical calculation, the average rate of taxation is determined. If the legislature should be [295] convened after they *have finished their action and then prescribe the average rate thus mathematically deduced as the rate of railroad taxation, no question could be made of its validity. It would be obviously a legislative determination of the rate of taxation. Is it any the less a legislative determination that it assumes that the various local officials will discharge their duties honestly and fairly, with reference to local necessities, and independently of the effect upon the railroad rate, and directs that the mathematical computation be made by a board of ministerial officers, and, thus made, shall become the railroad rate of taxation? Why is it necessary that the legislature be convened to add its formal approval of the integrity of the action of the local officers? May it not intrust the mathematical computation to the state board of assessors, and if so, may it not likewise act upon the assumption that the local assessors will discharge their duties with an eye single to those duties, and irrespective of the effect upon the railroad rate? It is true there is a possibility that some local board may be actuated by other than a sense of duty to the community for which it is acting, and have a thought of the ultimate effect upon the railroad rate. There is always a possibility of misconduct on the part of officials, but legislation would be seriously hindered if it may not proceed upon the assumption of a proper discharge of their duties by the various officials. And it must be remembered that, in view of the vast multitude of local taxing boards (as stated in one of the briefs of counsel for appellant, there are about 1,300 local assessment districts), the action of any single board could have but little influence upon the railroad rate. Beyond the assumption that these local officers will act from a sense of duty is the further fact that their action affects directly and principally the special communities for which they act, and that, generally speaking, is a sufficient guaranty. As said by Mr. Chief Justice Marshall, in M'Culloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 316, 428, 4 L. ed. 579, 606:

"The only security against the abuse of this power is found in the structure of the government itself. In imposing a tax, *the [296] legislature acts upon its constituents. This is, in general, a sufficient security against erroneous and oppressive taxation."

And again, in Providence Bank v. Billings, 4 Pet. 514, 563, 7 L. ed. 939, 956:

"This vital power may be abused; but the Constitution of the United States was not intended to furnish the corrective for every abuse of power which may be committed by the state governments. The interest, wisdom, and justice of the representative body, and its relations with its constituents, furnish the only security, where there is no express contract, against unjust and excessive taxation, as well as against unwise legislation generally."

Maine v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 142 U. S. 217, 35 L. ed. 994, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 807, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 121, 163, is worthy of consideration on this question of legislative determination. The legislature of Maine graded the rate of an excise tax imposed upon railroads by the amount of their gross transportation receipts, and provided that, when a railroad was partly within and partly without the state, the gross receipts chargeable to the road within the state should be ascertained on the mileage basis. The court below held that as the Grand Trunk Railroad was partly within and partly without the state of Maine, the imposition of the tax was a regulation of commerce, and therefore in conflict with the exclusive power of Congress over interstate and foreign commerce; and rendered judgment for the company.

But this court, reversing that judgment, held that the reference to the receipts was simply to ascertain the value of the business done by the corporation, and thus obtain a reasonable conclusion as to the amount of tax which should be levied, saying (p. 229, L. ed. p. 996, Inters. Com. Rep. p. 809, Sup. Ct. Rep. p. 122):

"If the amount ascertained were specifically imposed as the tax, no objection to its validity would be pretended. And if the inquiry of the state as to the value of the privilege were limited to receipts of certain past years instead of the year in which the tax is collected, it is conceded that the validity of the tax would not be affected; and [297] if not, we do not see how *a reference to the results of any other year could affect its character."

See also Home Ins. Co. v. New York, supra, and cases cited in the opinion. Of course, a passenger on the Grand Trunk Railroad knew that the fare he was paying was increasing the gross receipts, and therefore indirectly affecting the amount of the tax collectible under the statute. But it was not to be assumed that he would travel and pay fare with that object in view. No more can it be assumed in the present case that the local taxing officers, although knowing that an increase in their local tax levy will increase the tax rate upon railroads, will be led by that knowledge to forget their single duty to the community for which they are acting. No one pays money for the mere sake of compelling others to pay. Some personal advantage must be intended. No more will local tax officers levy a tax upon their neighbors, those who have placed them in position, for the mere sake of increasing the tax burden upon railroads, especially when the local levy is not followed by an equal increase in the amount of the burden cast upon railroads, and but a trifling fraction of that increase inures, either directly or indirectly, to the benefit of the taxpayers of the locality. The total value of other property in Michigan subject to ad valorem taxes was, according to the record, in the neighborhood of $1,500,000,000. A tax levy in the city of Detroit for local purposes of $1,500,000 would, therefore, increase the rate of taxation on railroad property only one mill, and that increase would profit Detroit but little, as the railroad tax is appropriated for state purposes only.

It may be laid down as a general proposition that where a legislature enacts a specific rule for fixing a rate of taxation, by which rule the rate is mathematically deduced from facts and events occurring within the year and created without reference to the matter of that rate, there is no abdication of the legislative function, but, on the contrary, a direct legislative determination of the rate.

Again, it seems more reasonable that the average rate should *be fixed by this mathe- [298] matical computation from the other rates already established than for the legislature to prescribe in advance that which it may hope will be such rate. In the one case the exact average is determined; in the other an estimate is made, which may turn out to be more or less than the average.

While the peculiar method of ascertaining the average rate prescribed by this statute may be new, yet the application of an average rate to the taxation of railroads is not new, nor confined to Michigan. See § 1, chap. 64, Public Statutes and Session Laws of New Hampshire of January 1, 1901, section first enacted in 1878; 1 Mass. Rev. Laws (1902) chap. 12, § 93, p. 227; chap. 14, §§ 37, 40, pp. 266, 268, incl., taken from laws of 1864, 1865, and 1880; 2 Mo. Rev. Stat. (1899) §§ 9363, 9364, pp. 2175, 2176; Wis. Laws (1903) chap. 315, §§ 7–14, incl. pp. 496–499; Boston, C. & M. R. Co. v. State, 60 N. H. 87; State ex rel. Brown v. Missouri P. R. Co. 92 Mo. 137, 6 S. W. 862; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Lamkin, 97 Mo. 496, 10 S. W. 200; State ex rel. Gottlieb v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 161 Mo. 189, 199, 61 S. W. 603.

We have thus far assumed that there was equity and justice in applying to railroad property the average rate of taxation imposed upon other property. But this assumption is challenged. For instance, the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad Company's property is situate in the upper peninsula of the state of Michigan—

"and yet the average rate of tax applied to its property depends upon, and increases with, the taxes raised on all the counties of the 'Lower Peninsula' of Michigan, and in all the cities, towns, villages, and school districts of those counties, for purely local purposes. If Detroit spends $10,000,000 for local government, the Northwestern Railway Company has to pay proportionately more tax on its property in northern Michigan than if Detroit's tax for local government were $5,000,000; and, beyond that, if Detroit spends $1,000,000 or $5,000,000 for purely domestic or private enterprises, such [299] as *gas works, waterworks, street railways, parks, baths, libraries, etc., the Northwestern Railway's tax on its property (though wholly outside of Detroit—in the 'Upper Peninsula') is proportionately larger on that account.

"It may well be that (as respects the immediate point) the unity of railroad property would justify a statute requiring a railroad to pay taxes to the state at a rate derived by averaging the taxes, state and local, paid by others in the same taxing jurisdiction; but the question before the court is whether it can be made to pay a tax directly dependent upon, and measured by, the local taxes of counties, cities, towns, villages, and school districts where it has no part of its property and no office. Such a plan operates to tax the railroad because of the expenses (public and private) of local communities whose benefits it does not enjoy."

But these considerations appeal mainly to the discretion of the legislature, and do not make against its power. Unless there be some specific provisions in the state Constitution compelling other action, the state may treat its entire territory as composing but a single taxing district, and deal with all property as within the district and subject to taxation accordingly. There is no magic in county organization, no inherent necessity of dividing the state into small taxing districts. Frequently railroads are separated from other property, assessed by a state board, and the taxes collected therefrom applied to the general purposes of the state. Sometimes, it is true, a portion of the taxes thus collected is distributed pro rata to the counties along the lines of the roads, but the power of the state to apply the taxes from railroad property to only state purposes cannot be doubted, and is often exercised. If it may take all the taxes received from railroad property and apply it to general state purposes, and, to that extent, relieve counties in which there is no railroad property from their contribution to the support of the state, it has equal power to say that the average rate of taxation shall be determined, not by the [300] rates upon other *property in the immediate localities in which the railroads are located, but by those upon all property wherever situated in the state. We do not mean to hold that cases may not arise in which enforcing this method of taxation works such injustice to a railroad as to call for judicial interference. But we do hold that the mere fact that all the property in the state is taken into account in determining the average rate does not carry with it such proof of injustice and inequality as to compel the courts in all cases to strike the latter down. From the cases that are before us involving this statute it appears that there are many railroad companies in the state, and we may fairly take judicial notice of the fact that the state is traversed in almost every direction by railroads. And while it is possible that there may be a county or two without one, yet it is an exception, and to hold that for each railroad the average rate must be determined from the property in the localities immediately contiguous or through which its road passes might well introduce into the matter of taxation a confusion and inequality resulting in far greater injustice than the uniformity established by the present system.

Further, it must be borne in mind that the taxes collected from railroads in Michigan are, by § 16 of the act, applicable to state purposes, and while it is doubtless true that the appropriation of these taxes to state purposes diminishes the tax burden which will fall upon other property, yet the case presented is one in which the legislature, taking a class of property, imposes upon it through state authorities a state tax for strictly state purposes. That, so far as the restraints of the Federal Constitution are concerned, it is within the power of a state to separate a particular class of property, subject it to assessment and taxation in a mode and at a rate different from that imposed upon other property, and apply the proceeds to state rather than to local purposes, is not open to question. Kentucky Railroad Tax Cases, 115 U. S. 321, 29 L. ed. 414, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 57, is directly in point. By the legislation of Kentucky railroad companies and their property were separated from other *property, subjected to [301] different means and methods for purposes of taxation, and upon this the court said (p. 337, L. ed. p. 419, Sup. Ct. Rep. p. 63):

"But there is nothing in the Constitution of Kentucky that requires taxes to be levied by a uniform method upon all descriptions of property. The whole matter is left to the discretion of the legislative power, and there is nothing to forbid the classification of property for purposes of taxation and the valuation of different classes by different methods. The rule of equality, in respect to the subject, only requires the same means and methods to be applied im-partially to all the constituents of each class, so that the law shall operate equally and uniformly upon all persons in similar circumstances."

That no provision is made for a general equalization of railroad with other property in the state does not vitiate the assessment. See Cummings v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 101 U. S. 153, 25 L. ed. 903, in which the question was distinctly presented and determined, the court saying (p. 161, L. ed. p. 906):

"While it may be true that this system of submitting the different kinds of property subject to taxation to different boards of assessors and equalizers, with no common superior to secure uniformity of the whole, may give opportunity for maladministration of the law and violation of the principle of uniformity of taxation and equality of burden, that is not the necessary result of these laws, or of any one of them; and a law cannot be held unconstitutional because, while its just interpretation is consistent with the Constitution, it is unfaithfully administered by those who are charged with its execution. Their doings may be unlawful while the statute is valid."

While there may be no provision for an equalization of railroad with other property, it will be perceived that the statute names the time and place for the sessions of the assessing board, gives to any person or com-[302] pany interested the right *to be heard, and also authorizes the board to correct the valuation. So that it cannot be objected that the railroad companies are precluded from a full hearing on the matter of valuation; and, as has heretofore been said by this court, one hearing is sufficient to constitute due process.

Other questions are discussed by counsel in their briefs, but in view of the exhaustive and well-considered opinion of the trial judge, with the general trend of which we concur, it is unnecessary to further extend this discussion. It is sufficient to refer to that opinion for a consideration of those questions. We have noticed those which seem to us paramount and controlling.

It is charged in the bill that there was a systematic undervaluation of other property in the state, which resulted in denying to this plaintiff the equal protection of the law. The trial court found against this charge. It is enough to say that generally we accept the finding of a trial court upon a question of fact when the testimony respecting it is conflicting. It may also be said that a legislature is not bound to impose the same rate of tax upon one class of property that it does upon another. As it may exempt all of one class, so it may impose a different rate of taxation. It is sufficient if all of the same class are subjected to the same rate and the tax is administrated impartially upon them.

Affirmed.

*AGUEDA BENEDICTO DE LA RAMA, [303]
Appt.,
v.
ESTEBAN DE LA RAMA.

1. Appeal—jurisdiction—review of decree of supreme court of Philippine Islands in divorce proceeding.—The general rule that the Federal courts have no jurisdiction of the subjects of divorce or alimony does not preclude an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States under the act of July 1, 1902 (32 Stat at L. 691–695. chap. 1369, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1905, p. 154), § 10, allowing appeals to that court from the supreme court of the Philippine Islands in all actions, cases, causes, and proceedings in which the value in controversy exceeds $25,000, to review a decree of that court reversing a decree of the court of first instance, granting a divorce to the wife, and awarding her a sum in excess of that amount as allmony pendente lite, and as her share of the conjugal property.

2. Appeal—questions reviewable—sufficiency of evidence in divorce proceeding.—The sufficiency of the evidence on which a divorce to the wife was refused is open for review in the Supreme Court of the United States on an appeal from the supreme court of the Philippine Islands, taken under the act of July 1, 1902, § 10, allowing such appeals, to be governed by the rules applicable to appeals from circuit courts, in all cases in which the jurisdictional amount is involved, where the correctness of the denial of allmony pendente lite and of a separation of the conjugal property cannot be determined without passing upon the weight of such evidence, and the appeal was taken from the whole decree.

3. Evidence—sufficiency to sustain divorce.—The evidence is sufficient to establish that the adultery of the husband was accompanied by public scandal and disgrace of the wife, as is required by the Spanish laws to sustain a divorce, by testimony that he abandoned his wife, excluded her from his house, and formed open and illicit relations with three other women, who bore him a family of children.

4. Appeal—reversal of finding of fact.—The finding of the court of first instance in a divorce proceeding that the wife had not committed adultery should not have been reversed by the supreme court of the Philippine Islands unless such finding was plainly and manifestly against the weight of the evidence, even where there was a literal compliance with the provision of § 497 of the Code of Civil Procedure, empowering such court to review the evidence in case the excepting party filed a motion in the court of first instance for a new trial on the ground that the findings of fact were plainly and manifestly against the weight of evidence, and such motion was overruled, and due exception was taken to the ruling.

Argued December 5, 6, 1905. Decided April 2, 1906.

APPEAL from the Supreme Court of the Philippine Islands to review a judgment which reversed a decree of divorce rendered by the Court of First Instance of the Province of Iloilo, and directed that the complaint be dismissed. Reversed and remanded for further proceedings.

Statement by Mr. Justice Brown:

This was a suit brought in the court of first instance of the province of Iloilo by the appellant, as plaintiff, against her husband, the defendant, for a judicial separation or divorce a mensa et thoro, an equal separation of the property of the conjugal partnership, for an allowance to the plaintiff for her support during the pendency of the action, and for counsel fees, costs, and general relief, upon the ground of the husband's adultery and the public scandal and disgrace thereby brought upon the plaintiff.

In his answer defendant alleged, by way of recrimination, adultery on the part of the wife, denied the existence of any community property, and prayed for a divorce without alimony.

Upon the trial, the court decreed a divorce to the plaintiff on account of her husband's adultery, as well as the payment *of $81,042.76, Mexican money, due her as [305] her unpaid share of the property belonging to the conjugal partnership, as well as the sum of $3,200, Mexican money, as an allowance for her support since the date upon which the action was instituted, being at the rate of 400 pesos a month for eight months, with costs.

After motion for a new trial had been made and overruled, defendant appealed to the supreme court, which reversed the decree of the court below, incorporated in its opinion certain findings of fact, and ordered judgment absolute that the complaint be dismissed.

Whereupon plaintiff appealed to this court under § 10 of the act of July 1, 1902, to provide a temporary civil government in the Philippine Islands (32 Stat. at L. 691–695, chap. 1369, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1905, p. 154), a copy of which section is given in the margin.†

†"Sec. 10. That the Supreme Court of the United States shall have jurisdiction to review, revise, reverse, modify, or affirm the final judgments and decrees of the supreme court of the Philippine Islands in all actions, cases, causes, and proceedings now pending therein, or hereafter determined thereby, in which the Constitution or any statute, treaty, title, right, or privilege of the United States is involved, or in causes in which the value in controversy exceeds twenty-five thousand dollars, or in which the title or possession of real estate exceeding in value the sum of twenty-five thousand dollars, to be ascertained by the oath of either party or of other competent witnesses, is involved or brought in question; and such final judgments or decrees may and can be reviewed, revised, reversed, modified, or affirmed by said Supreme Court of the United States on appeal or writ of error by the party aggrieved, in the same manner, under the same regulations, and by the same procedure, as far as applicable, as the final judgments and decrees of the circuit courts of the United States."

Mr. Frederic R. Coudert argued the cause, and, with Mr. Howard Thayer Kingsbury, filed a brief for appellant.

No counsel for appellee.

Mr. Justice Brown delivered the opinion of the court:

An important question of jurisdiction is presented by the record in this case. It has been a long-established rule that the courts of the United States have no jurisdiction upon the subject of divorce, or for the allowance of alimony, either as an original proceeding in chancery, or an incident of a divorce or separation, both by reason of the fact that the husband and wife cannot usually be citizens of different states so long as the marriage relation continues (a rule which has been somewhat relaxed in recent cases), and for the further reason that a suit for divorce in itself involves no pecuniary value. Barber v. Barber, 21 How. 582, 16 L. ed. 226, and the analogous cases of Kurtz v. Moffitt, 115 U. S. 487, 29 L. ed. 458, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 148; Durham v. Seymour, 161 U. S. 235, 40 L. ed. 682, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 452; and Perrine v. Slack, 164 U. S. 452, 41 L. ed. 510, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 79.

[308] *But the general rule above stated has no application to the jurisdiction of the territorial courts, or of the appellate jurisdiction of this court over those courts. Hence, we held in Simms v. Simms, 175 U. S. 162, 44 L. ed. 115, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 58, that an appeal lies from a decree of the supreme court of a territory dismissing the suit of a husband for a divorce and awarding to a wife alimony and counsel fees, amounting in all to more than $5,000, so far as the decree fixes the alimony. This was an appeal from the supreme court of Arizona, and the court held that the above considerations expressed in Barber v. Barber, 21 How. 582, 16 L. ed. 226, had no application to the appellate jurisdiction of this court over the courts of a territory; that Congress, having entire dominion and sovereignty over territories, "has full legislative power over all subjects upon which the legislature of a state might legislate within the state; and may at its discretion intrust that power to the legislative assembly of a territory," citing Cope v. Cope, 137 U. S. 682, 34 L. ed. 832, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 222. It was further held that so far as the question of divorce was concerned, the decree could not be reviewed by this court, "both because that was a matter the value of which could not be estimated in money; and because the refusal of the divorce involved no matter of law, but mere questions of fact, depending on the evidence, and which this court is not authorized to re-examine." It was further said: "The decree for alimony and counsel fees, although in one sense an incident to the suit for divorce, is a distinct and severable final judgment in favor of the defendant for a sum of money of a sufficient jurisdictional amount, and is therefore good ground of appeal." The appeal in that case did not involve the merits.

The intimation that this court could not review the refusal of the divorce because it could not re-examine questions of fact was undoubtedly thrown out in view of the territorial practice act of April 7, 1874 (18 Stat. at L. 27, chap. 80, § 2), providing that "on appeal" (from a territorial court), "instead of the evidence at large, a statement of the facts of the case in the nature of a special verdict, and also the rulings of the court on the admission or *rejec- [309] tion of evidence, when excepted to, shall be made and certified by the court below, and transmitted to the Supreme Court, together with the transcript of the proceedings and judgment or decree."

Since that act was passed we have always held that the jurisdiction of this court on an appeal from the supreme court of a territory did not extend to a re-examination of the facts, but was limited to determining whether the findings of fact supported the judgment, and to reviewing errors in the admission or rejection of testimony, when exceptions have been duly taken to the action of the court in this particular. Stringfellow v. Cain, 99 U. S. 610, 25 L. ed. 421; Eilers v. Boatman, 111 U. S. 356, 28 L. ed. 454, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 432; Idaho & O. Land Improv. Co. v. Bradbury, 132 U. S. 509, 33 L. ed. 433, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 177; Mammoth Min. Co. v. Salt Lake Foundry & Mach. Co. 151 U. S. 447, 38 L. ed. 229, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 384; Young v. Amy, 171 U. S. 179, 43 L. ed. 127, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 802.

This act, however, has no application to the Philippine Islands, appeals from the supreme court of which are regulated by § 10 of the act of July 1, 1902, wherein it is declared that appeals from the supreme court of the Philippine Islands shall extend to all actions, cases, causes, and proceedings "in which the value in controversy exceeds $25,000." These are reviewable on appeal or writ of error by the party aggrieved, in the same manner as the final judgments and decrees of the circuit courts of the United States. There is no requirement that the facts shall be found. Appeals from the final decrees in these (circuit) courts extend to an examination of the facts as well as the law. While, upon such review, this court will generally accept the concurrent conclusions of the trial and appellate courts, yet, as was said by Mr. Justice Brewer in Beyer v. Le Fevre, 186 U. S. 114–119, 46 L. ed. 1080–1082, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 765: "There has always been recognized the right and the duty of this court to examine the record, and if it finds that the conclusions are wholly unwarranted by the testimony, it will set the verdict or report aside and direct a re-examination."

In this case there was no finding of facts either by the court of first instance, or by the supreme court of the Islands, [310] except *as they appear in the opinion. It is doubtful whether this is a finding of facts within the statute (Lehnen v. Dickson, 148 U. S. 71, 37 L. ed. 373, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 481; British Queen Min. Co. v. Baker Silver Min. Co. 139 U. S. 222, 35 L. ed. 147, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 523; Dickinson v. Planters' Bank, 16 Wall. 250, 21 L. ed. 278; Saltonstall v. Birtwell, 150 U. S. 417, 37 L. ed. 1128, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 169; Stone v. United States, 164 U. S. 380, 41 L. ed. 477, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 71), but, in any event, it is not binding upon us in the absence of an authority to make it.

While, as indicated in Simms v. Simms, the decree for alimony, although in one sense an incident to the suit for divorce, is a distinct and final judgment for a sum of money, and is therefore a good ground for appeal from that part of the decree, yet, where the appeal is from the whole decree (as in this case), or even from a part of the decree, and the denial of alimony or separation of the conjugal property depends upon the evidence which bears upon the right to a divorce, we cannot determine that question without passing upon the sufficiency of the testimony authorizing or refusing the divorce. An appeal from the decree for alimony or other property right would be of no value whatever unless the facts connected with the allowance or refusal of such right were open to review in the appellate court. Although an appeal from a part of a decree does not bring up the part not appealed from, yet, if the whole decree must be reviewed in order to decide the appeal, such appeal brings up the entire record. Kelsey v. Western, 2 N. Y. 500; Union Trust Co. v. Trumbull, 137 Ill. 159, 27 N. E. 24; Walker v. Pritchard, 121 Ill. 227, 12 N. E. 336. The case is even stronger where the appeal is taken from the whole decree.

The hardship of denying an appeal in this case, as well as review of the testimony upon the subject of divorce, is apparent when the peculiar provisions of the Philippine Code are considered.

By Article 1315: "Persons who may be joined in matrimony may, before celebrating it, execute contracts . . . In the absence of contracts relating to property, it shall be understood that the marriage has been contracted under the system of legal conjugal partnership."

*Article 1401: "To the conjugal partner- [311] ship belong:

"1. Property acquired for a valuable consideration during the marriage at the expense of the partnership property, whether the acquisition is made for the partnership or for one of the spouses only.

"2. That obtained by the industry, salaries, or work of the spouses, or of either of them.

"3. The fruits, income, or interest collected or accrued during the marriage, coming from the partnership property, or from that which belongs to either one of the spouses."

Article 1392: "By virtue of the conjugal partnership the earnings or profits indiscriminately obtained by either of the spouses during the marriage shall belong to the husband and the wife, share and share alike, upon the dissolution of the marriage."

Article 1407: "All the property of the marriage shall be considered as partnership property until it is proven that it belongs exclusively to the husband or to the wife."

Article 73: "A decree of divorce shall produce the following effects: . . .

"3. The guilty spouse shall lose all that may have been given or promised him or her by the innocent one, or by any other person, in consideration for the latter; and the innocent spouse shall keep all that he or she has received from the guilty one, being permitted besides to claim forthwith all that may have been promised by the same."

In the opinion of the court of first instance it is stated that the plaintiff received from her mother 2,000 pesos, which, with interest amounting to 345 pesos, must be regarded as the portion contributed by the wife to the conjugal partnership. For the purposes of jurisdiction it makes no difference whether the amount claimed be termed alimony or the wife's share of the community property. It is sufficient that she claimed to be entitled to an amount exceeding $25,000, and that the claim was not baseless is shown by the decree of the court of first instance *allowing it. By [312] the decree of the supreme court she was denied all recovery of any description, upon the ground of her adultery. If, upon a review of the testimony, it were found that she was not guilty of adultery, she would unquestionably be entitled to one half of the conjugal property.

As § 10 of the Philippine statute above cited allows an appeal to this court from "judgments and decrees of the supreme court of the Philippine Islands in all actions, cases, causes, and proceedings . . . in which the value in controversy exceeds twenty-five thousand dollars," we know of no power in this court to create an exception where the statute has made none. Such a decision would be a plain case of judicial legislation.

Our conclusion upon this branch of the case is that the appeal was properly taken, and that it calls for a re-examination of the grounds upon which the petition for a separation of the conjugal property and alimony pendente lite was denied.

2. In her complaint the plaintiff charges abandonment by her husband without cause, and also adultery with three women, by each of whom he had children, and which resulted in public scandal and the disgrace of the plaintiff. In his answer defendant denies that he abandoned the plaintiff without sufficient cause, and avers that "he ejected her from his house on account of indignation," created by her adultery with a Spanish corporal; he denies the various allegations of adultery charged against him, and says that even if they are true, they are nothing more than the "necessary consequences of the indescribable conduct of the plaintiff."

The parties were married in July, 1891, she being then fourteen years of age and he twenty-three, and lived happily together for about thirteen months, when in August, 1892, a separation ensued.

Upon the trial the defendant made no denial of his adulteries, but simply declined to answer any questions on the subject. His adulteries, however, with three separate women and the birth of a child by each was proven to the satisfaction of [313] both *courts below, and was not attempted to be disproved by evidence on the part of the defendant. Under the Spanish law the adultery of the husband, to be a good ground for separation, must be accompanied by public scandal and disgrace of the wife. Although there is no evidence that the husband "ejected her from his house on account of indignation," as set up in his answer, the fact that he abandoned his wife, excluded her from his house, and formed open and illicit relations with three other women, who bore him a family of children, is quite sufficient evidence that his adultery was accompanied by public scandal and disgrace to the wife.

There was a difference of opinion between the trial court and the supreme court as to the adultery of the plaintiff. This is the principal contested fact in the case. The question really is whether the finding of the court of first instance, that the plaintiff had not committed adultery, was so manifestly against the weight of evidence that the supreme court was justified in reversing it.

By § 497 of the Code of Civil Procedure it is enacted that "the supreme court shall not review the evidence taken in the court below, nor retry the question of fact, except, . . . 3. If the excepting party filed a motion in the court of first instance for a new trial, upon the ground that the findings of fact were plainly and manifestly against the weight of evidence, and the judge overruled said motion, and due exception was taken to his overruling the same, the supreme court may review the evidence," etc.

The defendant did move for a new trial in the court of first instance, on the ground that the "conclusions which in said decision have been deducted from the facts are contradictory to what the evidence filed in this case have shown."

This is not a literal compliance with § 497, above cited, as it is not stated that the findings of fact are plainly and manifestly against the weight of the evidence. It seems rather to fall within the terms of § 145 of the Code of Civil Procedure, by the terms of which the court of first instance may, at *any time during the term [314] at which the action has been tried, set aside the judgment and grant a new trial on the ground that "the evidence was insufficient to justify the decision, or that it is against the law." But in this connection it is also provided by § 146 that the "overruling or granting of a motion for a new trial shall not be a ground of exception, but shall be deemed to have been an act of discretion on the part of the judge."

Defendant also prepared a bill of exceptions containing the evidence upon which the hearing was had in the supreme court.

Under the circumstances, and waiving the question whether there was such a motion for a new trial as is contemplated by § 497, we are of the opinion that the judgment of the court of first instance should not have been reversed, unless the findings of that court were plainly and manifestly against the weight of the evidence.

The adultery charged upon the plaintiff is said to have been committed with one Corporal Zabal of the civil guard at Talisay, where the parties then lived. The principal testimony establishing that fact is that of Apolonia Aurelio, a confidential servant, who swears she entered the services of the plaintiff in 1891, that the corporal used to frequent the plaintiff's house during the absence of the husband, who was wont to leave home to inspect his haciendas; that plaintiff habitually visited the quarters of the civil guard for the purpose of meeting Zabal, and that Zabal was also in the habit of going to the plaintiff's house at ten o'clock at night and remaining until morning; that defendant became acquainted with these facts from a letter written by plaintiff to be sent to Zabal at the quarters of the civil guard, but purloined by the witness and given to defendant. This letter, which, upon the theory of the defendant, would have furnished conclusive evidence of the plaintiff's adultery, was destroyed. The letter, if written at all, was written in May, yet her husband continued to live with her until August, when he carried her to her parents in the town of Valladolid, apparently for [315] a visit, cohabited with her there, *and then abandoned her. His version is that he took her to her mother on the same or the next day after he discovered the letter, and that he did not cohabit with her there, although he occupied the same room, in which there was but one bed. Little reliance was placed upon the testimony of Apolonia by either of the courts below, as it appeared that she did not enter the service of the plaintiff until the year 1893, after the couple had separated, and that she was then sent by the husband to the wife as a servant. She also told a most improbable story of always sleeping in the room of the plaintiff during her husband's absence, and even while the corporal was there. The court of first instance found that the attitude of the witness was apparently hostile to the plaintiff by reason of the fact that Apolonia was about to marry a man whom the plaintiff disliked, and the plaintiff had punished her.

Upon the other hand, the court of first instance did not hesitate to say that the attitude of the plaintiff during the trial of the case was such as to impress the court very favorably in her behalf. "Her entire bearing was that of a modest, retiring, self-respecting, and conscientious woman." There was testimony tending to show that Apolonia did not want to testify, but was given two packages of paper money in order to induce her to do so, and that another witness was also paid for his testimony. The testimony of Apolonia is to a certain extent bolstered up by that of three or four men, whose intelligence was evidently of such a low order that they can scarcely deserve to be called corroborating witnesses. The judge of the court came to the conclusion that "the testimony of this woman is too uncertain and too suspicious to justify any court in declaring the plaintiff guilty of adultery, especially when the worthlessness and the dubious character of the testimony of the other witnesses for the defendant on this subject increase the probability of the existence of something in the nature of a conspiracy to destroy the case of the plaintiff, and to support that of the defendant in the present action."

As already stated, these parties were married in July, 1891, *the plaintiff then [316] being but fourteen years of age. The intrigue with Zabal, if it occurred at all, took place within thirteen months thereafter, as the parties separated in August, 1892. The story that a bride of fourteen, happily married, and living in comfort, if not in luxury, should immediately after her marriage enter into liaison with a common soldier, should receive him at her house in the presence of her servants, without an attempt at concealment, spend the night with him with her confidential maid apparently sleeping in the same room, should openly visit his quarters at night, taking her maid with her, is so improbable that it should only be accepted upon evidence leaving no other legitimate conclusion to be drawn from it except that of adultery. The inference that this testimony was fabricated was so strong that the courts below were fully justified in disregarding it. The court of first instance discarded it entirely. The supreme court evidently placed no reliance upon it, but found conclusive evidence of adultery in a letter written in March, 1899, by the plaintiff to her husband.

This letter, which was written seven years after their separation, is printed in the margin.† We do not regard it as by any *means [317] conclusive. While it is perhaps susceptible of the construction put upon it by the hus-

†The letter of March 6, 1899, addressed by the plaintiff to the defendant reads as follows:

"My respected and unforgetable Estebau:

"Pardon that I disturb your tranquillity E., that in the midst of a profound sentiment that afflicts me I find consolation for my profound grief in addressing the man who loved me in the time of my good fortune, and who led me to the altar before the eyes of the being whom we most love, God. Remember me; let fall a drop of compassion from your soul; look at me back again with your cheerful eyes at the woman who is watching for you. I know well that you are very disgusted with me, and for just reason,—for having claimed my pension. Be calm, quiet yourself, reflect a moment for my situation, which I will explain to you.

When you went to Europe, mother went to see you to explain our situation to you, and band, it is entirely consistent with the theory that she had been abandoned by her husband without cause, was left in a desperate state of mind, was anxious to regain his favor, and to make any sacrifice to induce him to take her back and resume their former relations. She hints at no misconduct of her own, but intimates that he is disgusted with her, and for just reason,—for having claimed her pension. She says that when he went to Spain her pain was unbearable, that she had become completely desperate, and was advised to demand her pension because of the fact that he was going to reside abroad permanently, and she finally commenced proceedings in view of her desperate situation. So far from confessing adultery, she says that if those who wished her ill "have told you more, they have made a mistake, for the truth about my comportment is that it cannot be complained of." There is nothing indicating that after their separation her conduct had not been irreproachable.

The paragraph much relied upon is as follows: "I keep yet on my face the shame of what has happened, notwithstanding that it has been already many years since we [318] parted. *Therefore, my husband, forgive me; erase what has happened; remember me for God's love; behold our dark fate. In you I trust my future." This is by no means necessarily a confession of guilt.

The letter is that of a broken-hearted woman, who is willing to make any sacrifice necessary to be restored to her husband's favor, and to submit to any humiliation necessary to regain his affection. She makes no confession of adultery, points to her "comportment" since their separation as showing nothing that could be complained of, but in her frequent repetition of the claim she had made for her pension points to that as the source of her husband's disgust. Bearing in mind that her husband had seduced her when she was only thirteen years of age, and that since their separation, and for nearly a decade, he had not only repudiated her, but had maintained unlawful relations with at least three other women, all of whom had borne him children, we think that, even if two constructions were possible, the court of first instance was right in putting that construction upon the letter which was most favorable to the plaintiff.

We have reached the conclusion that there is no such preponderance of evidence in favor of the theory of plaintiff's guilt as authorized the supreme court to set aside the conclusions of the court below upon the ground that these findings were plainly and manifestly against the weight of the evidence. In this connection it is proper to bear in mind that the trial judge had all these witnesses before him, and doubtless formed his conclusions largely from their appearance on the stand, their manner of giving testimony and their apparent credibility. Under the circumstances we think the supreme court should have affirmed, rather than reversed, the action of the lower court.

While the right of the plaintiff to her proportion of the conjugal property, to alimony pending suit, and to other allowances claimed, is the basis of our jurisdiction, the decree of the supreme court in dismissing plaintiff's petition renders it unnecessary to review the action of the court of first instance in fixing the amount that it held plaintiff was entitled to recover. *We are therefore of opinion that [319] the decree of the supreme court dismissing the petition must be reversed, and the cause remanded to that court for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

Reversed.

Mr. Justice White, Mr. Justice Peckham, Mr. Justice Holmes, and Mr. Justice Day dissented upon the question of jurisdiction.

you answered that it had nothing to do with you. She insulted you, Estehan; you had reason to he offeuded.

"Now, regarding my having demanded my pension, you are also in the right, but pardon my impudence in stating what I have to say:

"I swear to you, E., and call God to witness that when you went to Spain, my pain was unbearahle thinking of my fatal misfortune. I had become completely desperate, and Orozco wrote and advised me to demand my pension in view of the fact that you were going to reside permanently in Spain; then I finally did commence proceedings in view of my desperate situation, and nothing further came of the matter during your absence.

"If the Lacsons, who wish me ill, have told you more, they have made a mistake, for the truth about my comportment is that it cannot be complained of; you can secure information regarding my conduct during our separation here in Valladolid.

"I keep yet on my face the shame of what has happened, notwithstanding that it has been already many years since we parted. Therefore, my husband, forgive me; erase what has happened, remember me for God's love; behold our dark fate. In you I trust my future.

"E., I have heard that you have had some misfortunes. I send my sympathy, although I am unworthy of your presence.

"I also learn from Modesto that you do not wish to have my pension sent. Do as you wish.

"Good-by, E., take good care of yourself, and command,

"Your faithful servant Q. B. S. P.,

SOPHRONIA K. KEEN.

Error to state court—Federal question—question of local law.—What facts constitute a common-law marriage is purely a local, and not a Federal, question, and will not sustain a writ of error from the Supreme Court of the United States to a state court.

Argued and submitted March 7, 8, 1906. Decided April 2, 1906.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Missouri to review a judgment which affirmed a judgment of the Circuit Court of St. Charles County, in that state, in favor of plaintiff in an action of ejectment. Dismissed for want of jurisdiction.

See same case below, 184 Mo. 358, 83 S. W. 526.

Statement by Mr. Justice Brown:

This was an action of ejectment begun by Sophronia K. Keen in the circuit court of St. Charles county against Ellis Keen, to recover a tract of land in that county to which plaintiff averred she was lawfully entitled. The petition was in the usual form of a declaration in ejectment, and the answer a general denial.

Eli Keen was the common source of title, plaintiff claiming one half of the land, subject to the payment of debts, under § 2939 of the Revised Statutes of Missouri, upon the ground that she was the widow [320] of Eli Keen, who died in 1901, *leaving, as plaintiff alleged, no children capable of inheriting.

Defendant claimed to be the legitimate child of an alleged common-law marriage between Eli Keen, a white man, and Phœbe, a negro woman.

There was judgment below for the plaintiff, which was affirmed by the supreme court. 184 Mo. 358, 83 S. W. 526.

Mr. David P. Dyer argued the cause and filed a brief for plaintiff in error.

Mr. Charles W. Bates submitted the cause for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Brown delivered the opinion of the court:

The court deduced, as a conclusion of law from certain facts found, that no marriage at common-law had ever existed between Eli Keen and Phœbe, a former slave of Eli's father, and that the former died without leaving any child or children or other descendants capable of inheriting from him, and hence that plaintiff was entitled to recover possession of an undivided half of the lands as his wife. No ceremonial marriage was claimed.

It is difficult to see any facts upon which to found our jurisdiction of the case. No Federal question appears in the pleadings or in the testimony, a transcript of which is contained in the record. The first glimmer of one appears in the motion for a new trial in the circuit court, in which it is charged that the judgment deprived the defendant of his property without due process of law, and also denied him the equal protection of the laws, contrary to the 14th Amendment to the Constitution. But no allegation is made as to why the judgment had this effect. No notice was taken of the constitutional point in the opinion of the supreme court, although the writ of error from this court was allowed by the presiding *judge. In the assignment of [321] errors filed in this court the only error charged is that, although the court below found there was no common-law marriage between Eli Keen and Phœbe, yet, in its special findings, it found all the facts required to establish such common-law marriage between them, and that from the facts so found the law presumed a null and void marriage between said Eli Keen and Phœbe Keen, the issue of which was capable of inheriting, under the statutes of Missouri. Rev. Stat. § 2918. No reference is made to the Constitution of the United States in this connection. In addition to this, the question what facts constitute a common-law marriage is purely a local one. We have searched the record for a Federal question, but have found none. The writ of error is, therefore, dismissed.

carrier's duty to furnish cars.—When applied to interstate shipments, the provision of Tex. Rev. [No. 198.]

Argued and submitted March 8, 1906. Decided April 2, 1906.

IN ERROR to the Court of Civil Appeals in and for the Third Supreme Judicial District of the State of Texas to review a judgment which affirmed a judgment of the District Court of Llano County in that state, enforcing the statutory penalty for a carrier's failure to furnish cars to a shipper within the time limited after the latter's requisition in writing. Reversed and remanded for further proceedings.

See same case below, 36 Tex. Civ. App. 606, 83 S. W. 53; on rehearing, 36 Tex. Civ. App. 609, 83 S. W. 55.

Statement by Mr. Justice Brown:

This was an action begun by Mayes in the district court of Llano county, Texas, against the Houston & Texas Central Railroad Company to recover a penalty of $475, by reason of defendant's failure to furnish [322] seventeen stock cars, applied for in *writing by the plaintiff under the provisions of certain statutes of Texas hereinafter referred to, for the purpose of shipping plaintiff's cattle from Llano, Texas, to Red Rock, Oklahoma, and for damages occasioned by defendant's negligence.

The petitioner alleged that the defendant company formed with two other railroad companies a continuous line from Llano to Red Rock, and were engaged as common carriers in the business of shipping live stock and other freight; that on April 9, 1903, plaintiff, being the owner of six hundred and twenty-five head of cattle, made application in writing to the local agent of the road for seventeen stock cars, to be delivered on April 20, and deposited with the agent one fourth of the freight on the same, namely, $268.82, promising to pay the remainder on demand, and that he afterwards paid the same; that upon the day named, April 20, he had cattle sufficient to load the cars, delivered them to the defendant at its stock pens at Llano for shipment, but the defendant failed to furnish the cars, and did not furnish the same until the afternoon of the 21st April, 1903.

The trial resulted in a judgment in favor of the plaintiff for $425 penalty for delay, and $500 damages to the stock while in the pens at Llano. This judgment was affirmed by the court of civil appeals, and an application for a writ of error to the supreme court of the state was overruled.

Mr. Maxwell Evarts argued the cause, and, with Messrs. Robert S. Lovett, James A. Baker, and Gordon M. Buck, filed a brief for plaintiffs in error:

A state cannot, under the guise of exercising its police power, enact legislation that is in effect a regulation of interstate commerce.

It has been held that a state tax upon tolls received from interstate shipments is void, as an interference with interstate commerce.

Philadelphia & S. Mail S. S. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 122 U. S. 326, 30 L. ed. 1200, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 308, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1118.

So, a state statute simply requiring vessels engaged in the coasting trade to file certain information with designated officials was held void, as an interference with interstate commerce.

Sinnot v. Davenport, 22 How. 227, 16 L. ed. 243.

It has also been held that a state statute providing that all trains should be required to stop at county seats was void so far as it affected interstate trains.

It has also been held that a state law imposing a tax upon messages sent by telegraph companies is invalid as applied to interstate messages.

Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Texas, 105 U. S. 460, 26 L. ed. 1067.

In Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Pendleton, 122 U. S. 347, 30 L. ed. 1187, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 306, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1126, it is held that the statute of Indiana, requiring every telegraph company to receive and transmit messages with impartiality and good faith, and in the order in which they are received, and deliver all despatches by messenger to the persons to whom same are addressed or to their agents, on payment of any charges due for the same, provided such persons or their agents reside within one mile of the telegraph stations or within the city or town in which said station is, is void as applied to interstate business.

If a state, in the exercise of an otherwise admitted police power, enacts a statute which has the effect of regulating interstate commerce, it is void, even though Congress may not have elected to act in reference to the subject.

Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Husen, 95 U. S. 465, 470, 471, 24 L. ed. 527, 529, 530.

It is evident, on account of the elaborate regulations which have been prescribed by Congress for the government of railroad companies engaged in interstate transportation, that the subject is already so far covered by congressional regulation as to indicate the will of Congress that interstate transportation by railroads should be free as to all matters not so regulated by Congress.

Bowman v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 125 U. S. 465, 480, 31 L. ed. 700, 705, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 823, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 689, 1062; Sinnot v. Davenport, 22 How. 227, 238, 16 L. ed. 243, 246.

Mr. T. W. Gregory submitted the cause for defendant in error:

The cattle in this case did not become the subject of interstate commerce until they were delivered to and received by the carrier for transportation on the journey.

Mr. Justice Brown delivered the opinion of the court:

This case involves the constitutionality of certain articles of the Revised Statutes of Texas, set forth in the margin,† the *ma-[327] terial requirement of which is that when the shipper of freight shall make a requisition in writing for a number of cars to be furnished at any point indicated within a certain number of days from the receipt of the application, and shall deposit one fourth of the freight with the agent of the company, the company failing to furnish them shall forfeit $25 per day for each car failed to be furnished, the only proviso being that the law "shall not apply in cases of strikes or other public calamity."

The defense was that this statute was not applicable to demands made for cars to be †"Art. 4497. When the owner, manager, or shipper of any freight of any kind shall make application in writing to any superintendent, agent, or person in charge of transportation, to any railway company, receiver, or trustee operating a line of railway at the point the cars are desired upon which to ship any freight, it shall be the duty of such railway company, receiver, trustee, or other person in charge thereof to supply the number of cars so required, at the point indicated in the application, within a reasonable time thereafter, not to exceed six days from the receipt of such application, and shall supply such cars to the persons so applying therefor, in the order in which such applications are made, without giving preference to any person; provided, if the application be for ten cars or less, the same shall be furnished in three days; and provided further, that if the application be for fifty cars or more, the railway company may have ten full days in which to supply the cars. (As amended by the act of 1899, page 67.)

"Art. 4498. Said application shall state the number of cars desired, the place at which they are desired, and the time they are desired; provided, that the place designated shall be at some station or switch on the railroad.

"Art. 4499. When cars are applied for under the provisions of this chapter, if they are sent out of the state and to be used in interstate commerce; and as the shipment was intended for Oklahoma, the act did not apply, and the defendant was not liable. The question is whether the statute, ap-[328] plied, as it is, *by the Texas court, to interstate shipments, is an infringement upon the power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce.

That, notwithstanding the exclusive nature of this power, the states may, in the exercise of their police power, make reasonable rules with regard to the methods of carrying on interstate business, the precautions that shall be used to avoid danger, the facilities for the comfort of passengers and the safety of freight carried, and, to a certain extent, the stations at which stoppages shall be made, is settled by repeated decisions of this court. Of course, such rules are inoperative if conflicting with regulations upon the same subject enacted by Congress, and can be supported only when consistent with the general requirement that interstate commerce shall be free and unobstructed, and not amounting to a regulation of such commerce. As the power to build and operate railways, and to acquire land by condemnation, usually rests upon state authority, the legislatures may annex such conditions as they please with regard to *intra*state transportation, and such other rules regarding *inter*state commerce as are not inconsistent with the general right of such commerce to be free and unobstructed.

The exact limit of lawful legislation upon this subject cannot, in the nature of things, be defined. It can only be illustrated from decided cases, by applying the principles therein enunciated, determining from these whether, in the particular case, the rule be reasonable or otherwise.

That states may not burden instruments of interstate commerce, whether railways or telegraphs, by taxation, by forbidding the introduction into the state of articles of commerce generally recognized as lawful, or by prohibiting their sale after introduction, has been so frequently settled that a citation of authorities is unnecessary. Upon the other hand, the validity of local laws designed to protect passengers or employees, or persons crossing the railroad tracks, as well as other regulations intended for the public good, are generally recognized. An analysis of all the prior important cases upon this point will be found in the opinion of the court in Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Illinois*, 177 U. S. 514, 44 L. ed. 868, [329]
20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 722, wherein a requirement that express trains intended only for through passengers should stop at every county seat, when ample accommodations were provided by local trains, was held to be an unreasonable burden. Other similar cases regulating the stoppage of trains are Illinois C. R. Co. v. Illinois, 163 U. S. 142, 41 L. ed. 107, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1096; Gladson v. Minnesota, 166 U. S. 427, 41 L. ed. 1064, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 627; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Ohio, 173 U. S. 285, 43 L. ed. 702, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 465. In the same line is the more recent case of Wisconsin, M. & P. R. Co. v. Jacobson, 179 U. S. 287, 45 L. ed. 194, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 115.

While there is much to be said in favor of laws compelling railroads to furnish adequate facilities for the transportation of both freight and passengers, and to regulate the general subject of speed, length, and frequency of stops, for the heating, lighting, and ventilation of passenger cars, the furnishing of food and water to cattle and other live stock, we think an absolute requirement that a railroad shall furnish a certain number of cars at a specified day, regardless of every other consideration except strikes and other public calamities, transcends the police power of the state, and amounts to a burden upon interstate not furnished, the railway company so failing to furnish them shall forfeit to the party or parties so applying for them the sum of $25 per day for each car failed to be furnished, to be recovered in any court of competent jurisdiction, and all actual damages such applicant may sustain.

"Art. 4500. Such applicant shall, at the time of applying for such car or cars, deposit with the agent of such company one fourth of the amount of the freight charge for the use of such cars, unless the said road shall agree to deliver said cars without such deposit. And such applicant shall, within forty-eight hours after such car or cars have been delivered and placed as hereinbefore provided, fully load the same, and upon failure to do so he shall forfeit and pay to the company the sum of $25 for each car not used; provided, that where applications are made on several days, all of which are filed upon the same day, the applicant shall have forty-eight hours to load the car or cars furnished on the first application, and the next forty-eight hours to load the car or cars furnished on the next application, and so on; and the penalty prescribed shall not accrue as to any car or lot of cars applied for on any one day until the period within which they may be loaded has expired. And if the said applicant shall not use such cars so ordered by him, and shall notify the said company or its agent, he shall forfeit and pay to said railroad company, in addition to the penalty herein prescribed, the actual damages that such company may sustain by the said failure of the applicant to use said cars." (As amended by the act of 1899, page 67.)

Act 4502 contains the following proviso: "That the provisions of this law shall not apply in cases of strikes or other public calamity."

commerce. It makes no exception in cases of a sudden congestion of traffic, an actual inability to furnish cars by reason of their temporary and unavoidable detention in other states, or in other places within the same state. It makes no allowance for interference of traffic occasioned by wrecks or other accidents upon the same or other roads, involving a detention of traffic, the breaking of bridges, accidental fires, washouts, or other unavoidable consequences of heavy weather.

A dereliction of the road in this particular, which may have occurred from circumstances wholly beyond the control of its officers, is made punishable not only by damages actually incurred by the shipper in the detention of his stock, but, in addition thereto, by an arbitrary penalty of $25 per car for each day of detention. The penalty which was assessed in this case, though the detention was only for one day, amounted to nearly as much as the damages, and might, in another case, amount to far more.

[330] *While perhaps the road may have no right to complain of that portion of the statute which assumes to provide for its own protection, it is illustrative of its general spirit that, if the shipper does not fully load his cars within forty-eight hours after their arrival, he shall forfeit $25 for each car, or if the consignee shall fail to unload them within forty-eight hours after their delivery, at the place of consignment, which, in the case of interstate shipments, would be in another state, he shall also forfeit $25 per day for each car unloaded.

In this connection the recent case of Central R. Co. v. Murphy, 196 U. S. 194, 49 L. ed. 444, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 218, is instructive. In that case we held that the imposition by a state statute, upon the initial or any connecting carrier, of the duty of tracing the freight and informing the shipper, in writing, when, where, or how, and by which carrier, the freight was lost, damaged, or destroyed, and of giving the names of the parties and their official position, if any, by whom the truth of the facts set out in the information could be established, is, when applied to interstate commerce, a violation of the commerce clause of the Federal Constitution; and an act of the legislature of Georgia imposing such a duty on common carriers was held void as to shipments made from points in Georgia to other states.

Although the statute in question may have been dictated by a due regard for the public interest of the cattle raisers of the state, and may have been intended merely to secure promptness on the part of the railroad companies in providing facilities for speedy transportation, we think that in its practical operation it is likely to work a great injustice to the roads, and to impose heavy penalties for trivial, unintentional, and accidental violations of its provisions, when no damages could actually have resulted to the shippers.

It should be borne in mind that the act does not apply to cattle alone, but to all cases "when the owner, manager, or shipper of any freight of any kind shall make application in writing," etc. The duty of the railroad company to furnish the cars within the time limited is peremptory and admits of *no excuses, except such as arise from [331] strikes and other public calamities. If, for instance, the owner of a large quantity of cotton should make a requisition under the act for a number of cars, the railways company would be bound to furnish them upon the day named, or incur a penalty of $25 for each car, though the detention of the cotton involved no expense to the owner or may even have resulted in a benefit to him through a rise in the market.

While railroad companies may be bound to furnish sufficient cars for their usual and ordinary traffic, cases will inevitably arise where, by reason of an unexpected turn in the market, a great public gathering, or an unforeseen rush of travel, a pressure upon the road for transportation facilities may arise, which good management and a desire to fulfil all its legal requirements cannot provide for, and against which the statute in question makes no allowance.

Although it may be admitted that the statute is not far from the line of proper police regulation, we think that sufficient allowance is not made for the practical difficulties in the administration of the law, and that, as applied to interstate commerce, it transcends the legitimate powers of the legislature.

The judgment of the Court of Civil Appeals is, therefore, reversed, and the cause remanded to that court for further proceedings.

Mr. Justice White, not having heard the argument, took no part in the decision of this case.

The CHIEF JUSTICE, Mr. Justice Harlan, and Mr. Justice McKenna dissented.

v.

CITY OF ST. LOUIS and Hafner-Lotnman Manufacturing Company.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 332–343.)

Courts—jurisdiction of Federal circuit court—case arising under Federal laws.—The petition in an action of eject-ment does not present a case arising under the laws of the United States of which a Federal circuit court has jurisdiction without diversity of citizenship because it states that there is a dispute between the parties over the construction of the patent from the United States and several acts of Congress set out as the source of plaintiff's title, where its averments show that the real controversy is over the claim of plaintiff that he is entitled to the land formed by accretion, since the patent was issued, and after the statutes were passed.

Argued March 9, 1906. Decided April 2, 1906.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Missouri to review a judgment dismissing, for want of jurisdiction, the petition in an action of ejectment. Affirmed.

Statement by Mr. Justice Peckham:

This is an action of ejectment to recover certain lands in the city of St. Louis, state of Missouri, described in the petition, which was filed in the circuit court of the United States for the eastern district of Missouri.
[333] The petition was dismissed by *the court solely upon the ground that the court was without jurisdiction, and the trial judge so certified the fact. The plaintiff sued out a writ of error and brought the case directly here for review under the 5th section of the act of 1891. 26 Stat. at L. 827, chap. 517, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 549.

The petition sets forth in detail the title of the plaintiff in error to the premises which he seeks to recover in this action. It is therein stated that a confirmation of a concession was made by the commissioners appointed pursuant to an act of Congress approved March 2, 1805 [2 Stat. at L. 324, chap. 26], entitled "An Act for Ascertaining and Adjusting the Titles and Claims to Land within the Territory of Orleans and the District of Louisiana," such concession having been made to one Louis Labeaume, of 360 arpents of land, by the lieutenant governor of the Spanish province of Upper Louisiana, on February 15, 1799, and it was duly surveyed and certified April 10, 1799. The land remained an outlot, adjoining and belonging to the former town or village (now city) of St. Louis, and said outlot was owned, claimed, inhabited, cultivated, and possessed by Labeaume prior to the 20th day of December, 1803. By virtue of the 1st section of an act of Congress, approved June 13, 1812 [2 Stat. at L. 748, chap. 99], entitled "An Act Making Further Provision for Settling the Claims to Land in the Territory of Missouri," the title in fee simple to said concession, survey, confirmation, and outlot was confirmed and granted to Labeaume.

Pursuant to an act of Congress approved March 3, 1807 [2 Stat. at L. 445, chap. 36], letters patent of the United States were issued to Labeaume, bearing date the 25th day of March, 1852, which letters purported and were sufficient to grant to Labeaume, or his legal representatives, the premises mentioned in the patent. On the 6th day of June, 1874, those from and under whom plaintiff derives title to the real estate sued for were the owners of the concession, and by an act of Congress, entitled "An Act Obviating the Necessity of Issuing Patents for Certain Private Land Claims in the State of Missouri, and for Other Purposes" [18 Stat. at L. 62, chap. 223, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1512], approved June 6, 1874, it is provided that the right, title, and *interest of the United [334] States in and to all of the lands in the state of Missouri, which had been confirmed by Congress, or officers acting under and by authority of Congress, were granted, released, and relinquished by the United States, in fee simple, to the respective owners of the equitable titles thereto, their heirs and assigns, forever, as fully and completely in every respect whatever as could be done by patents issued therefor according to law.

By virtue of these matters and by mesne conveyances from Labeaume it was averred that plaintiff became the owner of the land in question, and that a controversy had arisen between the plaintiff and the defendants herein as to the proper construction and legal effect of the letters patent and the acts of Congress approved June 13, 1812, and June 6, 1874, and the plaintiff herein averred in his petition—

"that under and by virtue of said confirmation, act of Congress approved June 13th, 1812, letters patent, and act of Congress approved June 6th, 1874, said river (Mississippi) is the western boundary of said outlot, confirmation to Louis Labeaume, and said Soulard survey and survey number 3333, and that the said Louis Labeaume or his legal representatives were thereby granted all of the land lying on said west bank of said river, between the northern and southern boundary lines of said outlot, confirmation, Soulard's survey, and United States survey number 3333, to said river, and that they were thereby constituted riparian proprietors and owners of all the land along said river bank between said north and south lines of said outlot, confirmation, and surveys, and were thereby vested with the title to, and ownership of, all land thereafter formed by accretions or gradual deposits from the said river along said west bank thereof, between said north and south lines of said outlot, confirmation, and surveys, where a large body of land was formed by accretions to said outlot, confirmation, and surveys.

"That said claim of plaintiff as to the proper construction and legal effect of said confirmation, acts of Congress approved [335] *June 13th, 1812, and June 6th, 1874, respectively, and patent, is disputed by defendants, and contested by them in regard to the title of the land hereinafter described, and which land is a portion of the land formed by accretions or gradual deposits from said river, along said west bank thereof, between said north and south lines of said outlot, confirmation, and surveys, and which thereby became a portion of the land granted by said letters patent and acts of Congress approved June 13th, 1812, and June 6th, 1874, respectively, and is the land herein sued for."

It is then averred that the proper construction and legal effect of the confirmation, acts of Congress, and letters patent constitute the controlling question in the case, upon the correct decision of which plaintiff's title to the premises sought to be recovered herein depends, and he "therefore avers that this suit arises under the law of the United States, and said confirmation made and letters patent issued in pursuance thereof, and said acts of Congress approved June 13, 1812, and June 6, 1874, respectively."

"He further states that as such legal owner of the premises he was entitled to the possession of the same under and by virtue of said confirmation, letters patent, and acts of Congress approved June 13, 1812, and June 6, 1874, respectively, on the 16th day of June 1896, which are described as follows:" The plaintiff then gives a description of the land in controversy, which he alleges to be a portion of the accretions of the outlot, confirmation, and surveys, already mentioned.

It was also alleged that the defendants entered upon the premises on the 16th of June, 1896, claiming to own the same as a wharf, under and by virtue of § 9 of an act of Congress approved June 12, 1866, entitled "An Act Authorizing Documentary Evidence of Titles to be Furnished to the Owners of Certain Lands in the City of St. Louis." [14 Stat. at L. 63, chap. 96.]

Plaintiff then demanded judgment for the recovery of the premises, and $5,000 for the unlawful withholding the same, and $100 for monthly rents and *profits, from the ren-[336] dition of judgment until the possession of the premises is delivered to plaintiff.

The manufacturing company defendant filed an answer, denying each and every allegation of the petition. It also set up that it held the premises under the city of St Louis and that the city (and the defendant holding under it) has had open, continuous, notorious, and adverse possession of the premises, under claim and color of title for more than ten years next before the filing of said petition.

The city of St. Louis filed a separate plea to the jurisdiction of the court, and asserted that it had no jurisdiction to try and determine the cause, because no Federal question or question of any kind giving jurisdiction to the court under the statutes and laws of the United States is involved in the issues in this cause. It further set up the facts in relation to the case of Sweringen v. St. Louis, in which the plaintiff therein claimed title to and possession of the property next immediately north of the premises herein claimed by plaintiff, under the same patent of the United States as that under which the plaintiff herein claims, and the history of the litigation is given, and the decision of the case in this court is referred to, which is to be found reported in 185 U. S. 38, 46 L. ed. 795, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 569.

Mr. E. P. Johnson argued the cause and filed a brief for plaintiff in error:

The petition sufficiently states a Federal question.

Without a conflicting grant there is a sufficient statement to show that the construction and legal effect of the acts of Congress and patent as to the right to alluvion and the extent to which land was, or might have been, conveyed by them, was required, and therefore presented a Federal question.

S. 54, ante, 87, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 782.

If plaintiff in error on a trial in the court below should fail to produce sufficient evidence to vest a legal title in Labeaume, under act of Congress of June 13, 1812, then the only question would be whether the patent or the 1st section of the act of Congress of June 6, 1874, vested it in him, and, in the event of a contest between them in regard to the title, it would present a Federal question.

Campbell v. Laclede Gaslight Co. 119 U. S. 445, 446, 30 L. ed. 459, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 278.

The court below was in error in intimating that the petition merely stated an anticipated defense. There is no such intimation in the petition and no such inference can reasonably be drawn from it, and the petition is to be liberally construed.

Oglesby v. Missouri P. R. Co. 150 Mo. 137, 51 S. W. 758.

It sets out with great particularity the title of plaintiff under the acts of Congress, under a proper construction of them, and their legal effect, to wit: That they conveyed all land lying on the west bank of and to the river, and that it was bounded by the river, the question being the extent to which the grants conveyed title, this being a Federal question.

Sweringen v. St. Louis, 185 U. S. 38, 41, 46 L. ed. 795, 797, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 569.

The claim of the city of St. Louis, defendant in error, under the act of Congress attempting to grant the premises sued for to it, is set out, not as a defense, but as a conflicting claim, just as the conflicting claim was set out in the petition in Cooke v. Avery, 147 U. S. 375, 37 L. ed. 209, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 340, and brings this case within the decision in Shively v. Bowlby and Sweringen v. St. Louis, supra.

The denial that a claim is made under the conflicting grant would be futile, as it includes other land, and is made directly to the city of St. Louis by an act of Congress disposing of the public lands, which is a public act of which the courts must take judicial notice, and, if it conveys said premises, enforce as an outstanding title.

McGuire v. Blount, 199 U. S. 142, ante, 125, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1; Papin v. Ryan, 32 Mo. 21; Wood v. Nortman, 85 Mo. 298.

Mr. Charles Claflin Allen argued the cause, and, with Messrs. Henry W. Allen and Charles W. Bates, filed a brief for defendants in error:

In order to give the lower court jurisdiction, the necessary facts to confer jurisdiction must be stated in the petition itself, and, unless the jurisdictional facts affirmatively appear from the record, the presumption, upon writ of error or appeal, is that the court below was without jurisdiction.

King Iron Bridge & Mfg. Co. v. Otoe County, 120 U. S. 225, 30 L. ed. 623, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 552; Third Street & Suburban R. Co. v. Lewis, 173 U. S. 457, 43 L. ed. 766, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 451; Florida C. & P. R. Co. v. Bell, 176 U. S. 321, 44 L. ed. 486, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 399; Minnesota v. Northern Securities Co. 194 U. S. 48, 48 L. ed. 870, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 598.

A suit cannot be said to be one arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States, until it has in some way been made to appear on the face of the record that some title, right, privilege, or immunity on which the recovery depends will be defeated by one construction of the Constitution or a law of the United States, or sustained by an opposite construction.

Jurisdiction cannot be conferred by alleging that defendant intends to dispute the validity of some law of the United States, or to assert a defense based on some such law.

Tennessee v. Union & Planter's Bank, 152 U. S. 454, 38 L. ed. 511, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 654; Boston & M. Consol. Copper & S. Min. Co. v. Montana Ore Purchasing Co. 188 U. S. 632, 47 L. ed. 626, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 434; Florida C. & P. R. Co. v. Bell, supra; Chappell v. Waterworth, 155 U. S. 102, 39 L. ed. 85, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 34; Walker v. Collins, 167 U. S. 57, 42 L. ed. 76, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 738; Sawyer v. Kochersperger, 170 U. S. 303, 42 L. ed. 1046, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 946; Arkansas v. Kansas & T. Coal Co. 183 U. S. 185, 46 L. ed. 144, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 47; Little York Gold-Washing & Water Co. v. Keyes, 96 U. S. 199, 24 L. ed. 656.

In an action of ejectment, the plaintiff must recover, if at all, upon the strength of his own title. The weakness of his adversary's cannot avail him.

McNitt v. Turner, 16 Wall. 352, 21 L. ed. 341.

The plaintiff cannot confer Federal jurisdiction by anticipating the defendant's claims of title, which the court may never be called upon to consider, or by raising fictitious disputes with himself.

McGuire v. Blount, 199 U. S. 142, ante, 125, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1; Watts v. Lindsey, 7 Wheat. 158, 5 L. ed. 423.

The law concerning ejectment is the same in Missouri as in the United States courts.

Hunt v. Searcy, 167 Mo. 158, 67 S. W. 206.

Cases in which the Supreme Court has jurisdiction on writ of error to a state supreme court are not authorities on the questions of jurisdiction here involved.

Carson v. Dunham, 121 U. S. 421, 30 L. ed. 992, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1030.

The fact that one of the parties has derived his title directly under an act of Congress does not, for that reason alone, present a Federal question.

Blackburn v. Portland Gold Min. Co. 175 U. S. 571, 44 L. ed. 276, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 222; Shoshone Min. Co. v. Rutter, 177 U. S. 505, 44 L. ed. 864, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 726; DeLamar's Nevada Gold Min. Co. v. Nesbitt, 177 U. S. 523, 44 L. ed. 872, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 715.

The fact that the language of a grant from the United States may have to be construed in the usual and ordinary way applicable to instruments conveying title, in order to determine the correct measurements of the land conveyed, does not raise a Federal question.

Sweringen v. St. Louis, 185 U. S. 38, 46 L. ed. 795, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 569.

Cases in which this court passed the question of jurisdiction sub silentio are no authority in the case at bar.

New v. Oklahoma, 195 U. S. 252, 49 L. ed. 182, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 68; United States v. More, 3 Cranch, 159, 2 L. ed. 397.

All plaintiff needs to show is one title, good in him, to make out a prima facie case; and he cannot rely upon possible defects in that title in order to raise a Federal question.

Mr. Justice Peckham, after making the foregoing statement, delivered the opinion of the court:

There is no diversity of citizenship in this case, and the only ground of jurisdiction claimed is that the action arises under the laws of the United States. The case is a pure action of ejectment, and the general rule in such actions, as to the complaint, is that the only facts necessary to be stated therein are, that plaintiff is the owner of the premises described, and entitled to the possession, and that defendant wrongfully withholds such possession, to plaintiff's damage in an amount stated. Setting out the source of the plaintiff's title, as was done with so much detail in this case, was unnecessary, but it does not alter the case, because a claim that the title comes from the United States does not, for that reason merely, raise a Federal question.

It is a long-settled rule, evidenced by many decisions of this court, that the plaintiff cannot make out a case as arising under the Constitution or the laws of the United States unless it necessarily appears by the complaint or petition or bill in stating plaintiff's cause of action. In Little York Gold-Washing & Water Co. v. Keyes, 96 U. S. 199-203, 24 L. ed. 656-658, it was said that before the circuit court can be required to retain a cause under its jurisdiction, under § 5, act of 1875 [18 Stat. at L. 472, chap. 137, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 511], it must in some form appear upon the record, by a statement of facts, in legal and logical form, such as is required in good pleading, that the suit is one which really and substantially involves a dispute or controversy as to a right which depends upon the construction or effect of the Constitution, or some law or treaty of the United States. That was a case of a petition for a removal of a suit from the state to the Federal court. But it has been held that whether there is a right of removal in such cases depends upon whether the circuit court could have exercised original jurisdiction. Third Street & Suburban R. Co. v. Lewis, 173 U. S. 457, 43 L. ed. 766, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 451; Arkansas v. Kansas [341] & T. Coal Co. *183 U. S. 185, 46 L. ed. 144, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 47; Boston & M. Consol. Copper & S. Min. Co. v. Montana Ore Purchasing Co. 188 U. S. 632-640, 47 L. ed. 626-632, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 434. This original jurisdiction, it has been frequently held, must appear by the plaintiff's statement of his own claim, and it cannot be made to appear by the assertion in the plaintiff's pleading that the defense raises or will raise a Federal question. As has been stated, the rule is a reasonable and just one that the complainant, in the first instance, shall be confined to a statement of his cause of action, leaving to the defendant to set up in his answer what his defense is, and, if anything more than a denial of plaintiff's cause of action, imposing upon the defendant the burden of proving such defense. This principle was given effect to in Tennessee v. Union & Planters' Bank, 152 U. S. 454, 38 L. ed. 511, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 654; Muse v. Arlington Hotel Co. 168 U. S. 430, 42 L. ed. 531, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 109; Third Street & Suburban R. Co. v. Lewis and Arkansas v. Kansas & T. Coal Co. supra; Filhiol v. Maurice, 185 U. S. 108, 46 L. ed. 827, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 560; Boston & M. Consol. Copper & S. Min. Co. v. Montana Ore Purchasing Co. supra.

The mere fact that the title of plaintiff comes from a patent or under an act of Congress does not show that a Federal question arises. It was said in Blackburn v. Portland Gold Min. Co. 175 U. S. 571, 44 L. ed. 276, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 222, that "this court has frequently been vainly asked to hold that controversies in respect to lands, one of the parties to which had derived his title directly from an act of Congress, for that reason alone presented a Federal question." The same principle was held in Shoshone Min. Co. v. Rutter, 177 U. S. 505, 44 L. ed. 864, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 726, and also in DeLamar's Nevada Gold Min. Co. v. Nesbitt, 177 U. S. 523, 44 L. ed. 872, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 715.

To say that there is a dispute between the parties as to the construction of the patent or of the several acts of Congress referred to does not raise a Federal question, because a statement that there is such dispute is entirely unnecessary in averring or proving plaintiff's cause of action. His source of title, as set forth in the petition, might not be disputed, and the defense might rest upon the defense of adverse possession, as set up in the answer. If defendants contented themselves on the trial with proof of such defense, then no question of a Federal nature would have been tried or decided.

*In those cases where the dispute neces- [342] sarily appears in the course of properly alleging and proving the plaintiff's cause of action, the situation is entirely different. In this case the real dispute, as stated by the plaintiff, is whether plaintiff is entitled to the land formed by accretion, which has taken place many years since the patent was issued and since the acts of Congress were passed. There is no dispute as to the terms of the patent or of the acts of Congress. The language of the averment in the petition (which is set out in full in the foregoing statement of facts) shows that the controversy in dispute is not at all in regard to the land covered by the letters patent or by the acts of Congress, and no dispute is alleged to exist as to such land, but the dispute relates to land, "which land is a portion of the land formed by accretions or gradual deposits from said river, along said west bank thereof, between said north and south lines of said outlot, confirmation, and surveys, and which thereby became a portion of the land granted by said letters patent and acts of Congress approved June 13th, 1812, and June 6th, 1874, respectively."

Now, whether the land contained in the original patent reached to the Mississippi river as its eastern boundary, under the distances called for by the patent, would be a question of fact, as was stated in Sweringen v. St. Louis, 185 U. S. 38, 46 L. ed. 795, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 569, and whether the plaintiff is, upon the facts set forth, entitled to the accretion, is a question of local or state law, and is not one of a Federal nature. St. Anthony Falls Water Power Co. v. St. Paul Water Comrs. 168 U. S. 349-359, 42 L. ed. 497-501, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 157, and cases cited. In Packer v. Bird, 137 U. S. 661, 34 L. ed. 819, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 210, it was held that while the Federal court would construe grants of the general government without reference to the rules of construction adopted by the states for grants by them, yet whatever incidents or rights attached to the ownership of the property conveyed by the United States bordering on a navigable stream, would be determined by the states in which it is situated, subject to the limitation that their rules do not impair the efficacy of the grant, or the use and enjoyment of the property by the grantee. To the same effect is Shively [343] v. Bowlby, 152 U. S. 1, 38 L. ed. 331, 14

Sup. Ct. Rep. 548. In the opinion in that case, at page 57, L. ed. p. 352, Sup. Ct. Rep. p. 567, it is said: "By the law of the state of Oregon, therefore, as enacted by its legislature and declared by its highest court, the title in the lands in controversy is in the defendants in error; and, upon the principles recognized and affirmed by a uniform series of recent decisions of this court, above referred to, the law of Oregon governs the case."

As this land in controversy is not the land described in the letters patent or the acts of Congress, but, as is stated in the petition, is formed by accretions or gradual deposits from the river, whether such land belongs to the plaintiff is, under the cases just cited, a matter of local or state law, and not one arising under the laws of the United States.

The question before us is wholly different from the case of a writ of error to a state court founded upon § 709 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 575). A Federal question may appear in the course of the trial, and some right specially claimed or set up under a Federal statute may have been denied, and the party against whom the decision was made can have the question reviewed by this court under that section.

In Cooke v. Avery, 147 U. S. 375, 37 L. ed. 209, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 340, this question was not decided. It was not referred to in the course of the opinion, and it is no authority for the plaintiff's contention herein. It was simply held that there was an issue between the parties which depended upon the laws of the United States and the rules of the circuit court, and their construction and application were directly involved

In any aspect in which this case may be viewed, we think it was not one over which the Circuit Court had jurisdiction, and for that reason its order dismissing the petition is affirmed.

[344]*YORK MANUFACTURING COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

ARTHUR CASSELL et al.; Orrin Poppleton, Trustee; J. B. Waight and Ben Ames.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 344–353.)

Conditional sale—filing—necessity as against trustee in bankruptcy.—An adjudication in bankruptcy is not the equivalent of a judgment or attachment, so as to operate as a lien in favor of the trustee as against the conditional vendor of property sold to the bankrupt, because of noncompliance with the requirement as to filing made by Ohio Rev. Stat. § 4155, which, if given the construction placed by the highest state court upon a similar provision respecting chattel mortgages, renders an unfiled contract of conditional sale void only as to those creditors who have fastened upon the property by some specific lien.

Argued March 14, 1906. Decided April 2, 1906.

APPEAL from the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit to review a decree which affirmed a decree of the District Court for the Southern District of Ohio, giving a lien in favor of the trustee in bankruptcy as against the conditional vendor of property sold to the bankrupt, because of a failure to file the contract of sale. Reversed and remanded to the District Court for the entry of a decree in conformity with the opinion.

See same case below, 67 C. C. A. 526, 135 Fed. 52.

Statement by Mr. Justice Peckham:

The York Manufacturing Company has appealed from a judgment of the circuit court of appeals, which held that the company had no lien upon or right to remove certain machinery, as against creditors of the Mount Vernon Ice, Coal, & Milling Company, a bankrupt corporation. The facts upon which the question arises are as follows:

The corporation above named was organized under the laws of the state of Ohio, and was doing business at Mount Vernon, in that state. The company desired to enlarge its plant for the purpose of making ice, and to that end it was necessary to secure the proper machinery. It therefore entered into a contract, which was concluded October 27, 1902, with the appellant, the York Manufacturing Company, to supply that machinery for the sum of $7,375, to be paid in instalments, as stated in the contract. The contract also contained a stipulation "that the title to the ownership of the machinery, apparatus, or plant herein contracted for, shall remain in the York Manufacturing Company until the entire purchase price herein agreed to be paid . . . shall be actually paid in cash." The vendor *was given the right to enter[345] the premises of vendee and remove the property in case of default. Twenty-five per cent only of the price of the machinery was ever paid. This contract was never filed, as required by the statute of Ohio relating to conditional sales. Section 4155, which is set forth in the margin.†

The corporation, being short of funds for the purpose of building, desired to obtain them by the execution of a mortgage on the lot on which the building was to be erected. One William Mild was the president of the corporation and was the owner of and had the legal title to the real estate upon which its plant was being constructed. Mild applied to Messrs. Waight & Ames to assist in raising money, by lending their credit as sureties on notes to be given for loans to the corporation up to the sum of $10,000, by such persons or banks as loans could be [346]*obtained from. Waight & Ames agreed to become such sureties, and the parties then entered into an agreement for that purpose, the particulars of which it is not necessary here to deal with.

At the date of the Waight & Ames agreement,—November 1, 1902,—no part of the machinery had come to the possession of the company, but it began to arrive in January, 1903, and was finally installed in the plant three or four months later.

On the same date that the agreement was executed, a mortgage, without date, was also executed by William Mild, in whom the title was, to Waight & Ames, conditioned for their indemnification for becoming sureties, as contemplated by their agreement. This mortgage was not recorded until July 16, 1903, and on the next day the corporation made a general assignment for the benefit of its creditors. On July 22, 1903, a petition by creditors of the corporation was filed for an adjudication of bankruptcy against it, and on December 11, 1903, the adjudication was made.

Soon after the adjudication the York Manufacturing Company filed an intervening petition, which set forth the contract under which they sold the machinery to the bankrupt, and alleged default in payment, and prayed that the company might be allowed to enter the premises and remove the machinery therefrom. This petition was resisted by the creditors.

A short time thereafter Waight & Ames filed their intervening petition, setting up their mortgage, and alleging that they had no knowledge of the contract with the York Manufacturing Company at the time of taking their mortgage, and prayed that they might be given precedence over that company. It appears they did raise for Mild the sum of $10,000, by indorsing for him to that extent, and a portion of it they have since been compelled to pay, and they are liable for the balance.

The referee in bankruptcy, before whom the question came, held that the mortgage of Waight & Ames was a valid lien on all the bankrupt's property, including the machinery furnished by the York Manufacturing Company, subject, however, to a *purchase-money mortgage on the lot for [347]$1,000. He also held that the York Manufacturing Company had no lien on the machinery, but was a general creditor only.

The district court, on a petition for review, reversed this ruling, and held that the mortgage of Waight & Ames did not cover the machinery supplied by the York Manufacturing Company, but that the latter had no lien thereon as against general creditors; that the mortgage of Waight & Ames was a valid lien on the rest of the property, subject to the purchase-money mortgage on the lot; that they were not creditors of the bankrupt corporation, except as to the sum of $1,500 they had charged for becoming sureties under the contract above mentioned, but the court held that they might prove the debts of the creditors who held the notes on which they were sureties, if the creditors failed to do so, and that they might be subrogated to the rights of the creditors to the extent they had paid or might pay any balance due on said notes remaining after applying thereon the surplus of the proceeds of the sale of the real estate, after the purchase-money mortgage had been paid, and that the entire $10,000 of the notes, which were mentioned in the contract between Waight & Ames and the company, and for which they were to be sureties, might be included in this right of subrogation. This, of course, did not include a note for $1,000, which had been paid five months before the proceedings in bankruptcy. The district court held that the mortgage of Waight & Ames was subordinate to the lien of the York Manufacturing Company, because no part of it had been placed on the ground of the bankrupt until two months after the making of the mortgage to Waight & Ames. The court, however, held that the general creditors were entitled to have the plant of the York Manufacturing Company sold for the payment of their claims because of the failure of that company to file the conditional sale contract, as required by the Ohio statute, and such failure rendered the contract void as to the creditors. Waight & Ames did not appeal from the district court's decree.

"In all cases where any personal property shall be sold to any person, to be paid for in whole or in part in instalments, or shall be leased, rented, hired, or delivered to another on condition that the same shall belong to the person purchasing, leasing, renting, hiring, or receiving the same whenever the amount paid shall be a certain sum, or the value of such property, the title to the same to remain in the vendor, lessor, renter, hirer, or deliverer of the same, until such sum or the value of such property or any part thereof shall have been paid, such condition, in regard to the title so remaining until such payment, shall be void as to all subsequent purchasers and mortgagees in good faith, and creditors, unless such condition shall be evidenced by writing signed by the purchasers, lessor, renter, hirer, or receiver of the same, and also a statement thereon, under oath, made by the person so selling, leasing, or delivering any property as herein provided, his agent or attorney, of the amount of the claim, or a true copy thereof, with an affidavit that the same is a copy, deposited with the clerk of the township where the person signing the instrument resides at the time of the execution thereof, if a resident of the state, and if not such resident, then with the clerk of the township in which such property is sold, leased, rented, hired, or delivered is situated at the time of the execution of the instrument; but when the person executing the instrument is a resident of a township in which the office of county recorder is kept, or when he is a nonresident of the state, and the property is within such township, the instrument shall be filed with the county recorder; and the officer receiving any such instrument shall proceed with the same in all respects as he is required to do by § 4152 of the Revised Statutes of Ohio, and shall receive the same fees as are allowed by law for similar services in other cases."

348] *The circuit court of appeals, upon appeal by the York Manufacturing Company, affirmed the district court (67 C. C. A. 526, 135 Fed. 52), and that company has appealed here.

Mr. Constant Southworth argued the cause, and, with Messrs. John L. Lott and Louis J. Dolle, filed a brief for appellant:

The word "creditors" in the conditional sales law includes only judgment creditors.

Mr. Justice Peckham, after making the foregoing statement, delivered the opinion of the court:

The question is simply whether the York Manufacturing Company has a right, under its conditional sale of the machinery to the bankrupt corporation, to take the machinery out of the premises where it was placed, as against all except judgment or other creditors by some specific lien. There are no judgment creditors in the case and no attachment has been levied, and the question is simply whether the adjudication in bankruptcy is equivalent to a judgment or an attachment *on the property, so as to[351] prevent the York Manufacturing Company from asserting its right to remove the machinery by virtue of the reservation of title contained in its contract.

In Wilson v. Leslie, 20 Ohio, 161, the court was construing the language of the statute relating to chattel mortgages, which declared a mortgage absolutely void as against creditors of the mortgagor, and as against subsequent purchasers and mortgagees in good faith, unless the mortgage or a true copy thereof should be deposited forthwith, as directed in the act. The court held that the mortgage was not void for lack of filing, as between the parties thereto, but that the statute only avoided the instrument as to those creditors who, between the time of the execution of the mortgage and the filing thereof, had taken steps to "fasten upon the property for the payment of their debts." As against such as had in the interim secured liens by attachment, execution, or otherwise, the mortgage would be void. When filed with the recorder the instrument became valid as against all persons except those whose rights have attached upon the property before the recording of the instrument. See to the same effect Re Shirley, 50 C. C. A. 252, 112 Fed. 301.

We have not been referred to any decision of the supreme court of Ohio as to the meaning of the statute requiring the filing of contracts of conditional sales, but we concur with the circuit court of appeals in this case, that the statute would render the unfiled contract void as to the same class of creditors mentioned in the chattel mortgage statute. Therefore the contract would be void as to creditors who, before its filing, had "fastened upon the property" by some specific liens. As to creditors who had no such lien, being general creditors only, the statute does not avoid the sale, which is good between the parties to the contract.

The mortgage of Waight & Ames cannot be a lien on the machinery sold by the York Manufacturing Company, because the mortgage was prior to the time when any portion of such machinery was placed upon [352] the land. There was no clause in *the mortgage covering after-acquired property, and, in any event, the mortgage would not cover property so acquired, the title to which, as in this case, was reserved to the vendor. This was the ruling of the district court, and no appeal was taken therefrom by the mortgagees. There are no creditors with any specific liens, nor is there any other mortgage, and there is no attachment.

We come, then, to the question whether the adjudication in bankruptcy was equivalent to a judgment, attachment, or other specific lien upon the machinery. The circuit court of appeals has held herein that the seizure by the court of bankruptcy operated as an attachment and an injunction for the benefit of all persons having interests in the bankrupt's estate.

We are of opinion that it did not operate as a lien upon the machinery as against the York Manufacturing Company, the vendor thereof. Under the provisions of the bankrupt act the trustee in bankruptcy is vested with no better right or title to the bankrupt's property than belonged to the bankrupt at the time when the trustee's title accrued. At that time the right, as between the bankrupt and the York Manufacturing Company, was in the latter company to take the machinery on account of default in the payment therefor. The trustee, under such circumstances, stands simply in the shoes of the bankrupt, and, as between them, he has no greater right than the bankrupt. This is held in Hewit v. Berlin Mach. Works, 194 U. S. 296, 48 L. ed. 986, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 690. The same view was taken in Thompson v. Fairbanks, 196 U. S. 516, 49 L. ed. 577, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 306. It was there stated that "under the present bankrupt act, the trustee takes the property of the bankrupt, in cases unaffected by fraud, in the same plight and condition that the bankrupt himself held it, and subject to all the equities impressed upon it in the hands of the bankrupt." See Yeatman v. New Orleans Sav. Inst. 95 U. S. 764, 24 L. ed. 589; Stewart v. Platt, 101 U. S. 731, 25 L. ed. 816; Hauselt v. Harrison, 105 U. S. 401, 26 L. ed. 1075. The same doctrine was reaffirmed in Humphrey v. Tatman, 198 U. S. 91, 49 L. ed. 956, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 567. The law of Ohio says the conditional sale contract was good between the parties, although not filed. In such a *case the trustee in bankruptcy takes only [353]
the rights of the bankrupt, where there are no specific liens, as already stated.

The remark made in Mueller v. Nugent, 184 U. S. 1, 46 L. ed. 405, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 269, "that the filing of the petition [in bankruptcy] is a caveat to all the world, and in effect an attachment and injunction," was made in regard to the particular facts in that case. The case itself raised questions entirely foreign to the one herein arising, and did not involve any inquiry into the title of a trustee in bankruptcy as between himself and the bankrupt, under such facts as are above stated. The dispute in the Mueller Case was whether the court in bankruptcy had power to compel, in a summary way, the surrender of money or other property of the bankrupt, in the possession of the bankrupt, or of someone for him, without resorting to a suit for that purpose. This court held, as stated by the chief justice in delivering its opinion: "The bankruptcy court would be helpless indeed if the bare refusal to turn over could conclusively operate to drive the trustee to an action to recover as for an indebtedness or a conversion, or to proceedings in chancery, at the risk of the accompaniments of delay, complication, and expense intended to be avoided by the simpler methods of the bankrupt law." It was held that the trustee was not thus bound, but had the right, under the facts in that case, to proceed under the bankrupt law itself and take the property out of the hands of the bankrupt or anyone holding it for him.

In this case, under the authorities already cited, the York Manufacturing Company had the right, as between itself and the trustee in bankruptcy, to take the property under the unfiled contract with the bankrupt, and the adjudication in bankruptcy did not operate as a lien upon this machinery in favor of the trustee as against the York Manufacturing Company.

The decree of the Circuit Court of Appeals is reversed and the case remanded to the District Court, with directions to enter a decree in conformity with this opinion.

Reversed.

Argued March 2, 1906. Decided April 2, 1906.

ON WRIT of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit to review a judgment affirming the judgment of the Circuit Court for the Southern District of New York, which had reversed the ruling of the board of general appraisers, that carbon sticks which must undergo a slight process of manufacture in order to be fit for use in electric lamps are dutiable under the similitude clause of the tariff act, at the rate imposed on the finished product. Judgments of the two lower courts reversed and the cause remanded to the Circuit Court with directions to sustain the decision of the board of general appraisers.

See same case below, 63 C. C. A. 532, 129 Fed. 90.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Assistant Attorney General McReynolds argued the cause and filed a brief for petitioner:

The imports were "carbons for electric lighting" within the manifest meaning of those words, and, as they were in such condition that no further manipulation could adapt them to any other useful purpose, a different classification would violate the plain purpose of the act.

Similarity in one of the particulars mentioned is sufficient to subject an unenumerated article to the duty levied on an enumerated one.

Pickhardt v. Merritt, 132 U. S. 252, 258, 33 L. ed. 353, 356, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 80.

Mr. J. Stuart Tompkins argued the cause, and, with Messrs. Comstock & Washburn, filed a brief for respondents:

The unfinished carbon sticks in question are not dutiable directly under paragraph 98 at 90 cents per hundred, as carbons for electric lighting.

The term "carbons for electric lighting" is the one generally used in trade as well as in common speech to designate finished articles of commerce used in arc lamps.

Jehl, Manufacture of Carbons for Electric Lighting, ed. 1899; Standard Dict. carbon; Century Dict. carbon.

This court has sanctioned reference to dictionary definitions as an aid to the memory and understanding of the court in determining the usual and ordinary meaning of words in tariff laws.

In the present case, there being no evidence that the word "carbons" has a special meaning in trade and commerce different from its common and ordinary signification, it would seem that the latter or common meaning, as understood in everyday speech, must be taken as the criterion in determining whether or not these imported sticks are "carbons" for electric lighting within the purview of that term as used in paragraph 98.

Sonn v. Magone, 159 U. S. 417, 40 L. ed. 203, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 67.

The dutiable classification of this merchandise must be determined according to the condition in which it was imported, not according to its condition when further manipulated or manufactured, after arrival.

United States v. Schoverling, 146 U. S. 76, 82, 36 L. ed. 893, 895, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 24.

That the defendants imported their merchandise in its unfinished condition "for tariff purposes" is in no way prejudicial to them.

Mr. Justice McKenna delivered the opinion of the court:

This case involves the rate of duty under the tariff act of 1897 (30 Stat. at L. 156, 205, chap. 11, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, pp. 1633, 1693) upon certain sticks of carbon used for electric lighting. The collector of customs of the port of New York held them to be dutiable at 90 cents per one hundred sticks, under paragraph 98 of the act of 1897, which provides as follows:

"Gas retorts, three dollars each; lava tips for burners, ten cents per gross and fifteen per centum ad valorem; carbons for electric lighting, ninety cents per hundred; filter tubes, *forty-five per centum ad valorem; [357] porous carbon pots for electric batteries without metallic connections, twenty per centum ad valorem."

On protest and review by the board of appraisers the decision of the collector was affirmed. The board of appraisers, however, held that the sticks were not within the terms of paragraph 98, basing the ruling on United States v. Reisinger, 36 C. C. A. 626, 94 Fed. 1002, nor within paragraph 97, under the rule in United States v. Gabriel, 99 Fed. 716. And held further, that while the articles in question were not enumerated in the act of 1897, they were "similar in material, texture, and use to carbons for electric lighting," and dutiable under paragraph 98 by virtue of the similitude clause (§ 7) of the act of 1897. The circuit court for the southern district of New York held that the articles were dutiable under paragraph 97, and reversed the ruling of the board of appraisers upon the authority of United States v. Reisinger, supra, and the circuit court of appeals affirmed the circuit court.

It appears from the evidence that the carbon sticks are from 12½ to 20 inches in length, and to render them ready for use ½ inch must be cut off from the shorter ones and their ends burnished or smoothed, the process costing about 1-10 of 1 per cent. The longer sticks must be cut in two, and sharpened at both ends, and it is stipulated that those steps for their completion being done the only use for the sticks "is as carbons for electric lighting." They are undoubtedly "carbons" and their use is "for electric lighting." In a general sense they come within the description of paragraph 98. It is contended, however, that they are not covered by that paragraph, because they must undergo a process of manufacture, though slight that process need be. The contention virtually is that the articles imported are not "carbons," either in the trade or popular sense, and do not become such until fit for use in lamps. In other words, it is the finished stick that constitutes the entity contemplated and made dutiable at 90 per cent under paragraph 98, *and that the articles imported are ac- [358] curately described and enumerated only in paragraph 97, as articles composed of carbon, not specially provided for. Paragraph 97 is as follows:

"Articles and wares composed wholly or in chief value of earthy or mineral substances, or carbon, not specially provided for in this act, if not decorated in any manner, thirty-five per centum ad valorem; if decorated, forty-five per centum ad valorem."

There is much to justify the contention of respondents as to paragraph 98. The act of 1897 recognizes in many places the difference between finished and unfinished articles of manufacture, but it also recognizes in many places use as determining the duty. The words "electric lighting" are very general, and it is the effect of the stipulation of the parties that the imported articles have no useful purpose except for electric lighting, though something further may be required for exact adaptation. However, we may put our decision on another ground, which will be best developed in considering the contention of respondents under paragraph 97.

The contention encounters a serious difficulty. As was decided in Dingelstedt v. United States, 33 C. C. A. 395, 62 U. S. App. 306, 91 Fed. 112, the paragraph covers articles which are susceptible of decoration, and not, as contended by respondents, articles decorated or not decorated, irrespective of their capability of being decorated. If the articles in question do not fall within paragraph 98, because not finished, and do not fall within paragraph 97, because not susceptible of decoration, where do they fall? They would seem necessarily to fall under that part of § 6 which provides that "on all articles manufactured, in whole or in part, not provided for," and subject to a duty of 20 per cent ad valorem. But there is a circumstance to be considered that arrests this effect. Section 7 provides "that each and every imported article, not enumerated in this act, which is similar, either in material, quality, texture, or the use to which it may be applied, to any article enumerated in this act as chargeable with duty, shall pay the same rate of duty [359] which *is levied on the enumerated article which it most resembles in any of the particulars before mentioned."

The imported merchandise are undoubtedly manufactured articles and do not miss by a great deal being identical with "carbons for electric lighting" in the most restricted sense of that description. They have, therefore, similarity in all the particulars mentioned in § 7 to such carbons.

The judgments of the Circuit Court of Appeals and of the Circuit Court are reversed, and the case remanded to the Circuit Court with directions to sustain the decision of the board of general appraisers.

v.
LAWRENCE BROTHERS COMPANY.

1. Constitutional law—due process of law—title by adverse possession.—There is no denial of the due process of law guaranteed by U. S. Const., 14th Amend., in so much of Me. Pub. Laws 1895, chap. 162, as in effect enacts that a doing of such overt acts of ownership as are possible on wild land, under a recorded deed showing a claim of title, coupled with the payment of the taxes, the owner meantime not paying such taxes, and doing no act indicative of ownership, shall constitute a disseisin, and that such disseisin, if continued for twenty years, shall bar an action for the land.

2. Adverse possession — time.—Twenty years' adverse possession of wild land before the passage of Me. Pub. Laws 1895, chap. 162, would not bar a suit by the former owner to recover possession, under the provision of that act barring such actions "unless brought within said twenty years, or before January 1, 1900," if such adverse possession did not continue for the five years following the passage of that act.

3. Constitutional law—due process of law—title by adverse possession—retrospective legislation.—Property is not taken without due process of law, in violation of U. S. Const., 14th Amend., by construing the provisions of Me. Pub. Laws 1895, chap. 162, barring actions by the former owner to recover wild land adversely held unless commenced within twenty years or before January 1, 1900, as defeating an action begun after that date, when defendant had held the statutory possession for the five years following the act, and for fifteen years before.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Judicial Court of the State of Maine to review a judgment overruling exceptions and a motion for a new trial in an action of trover, in which a verdict was found in favor of the defendant. Affirmed.

Mr. William Frye White argued the cause, and, with Messrs. Taber D. Bailey and John B. Cotton, filed a brief for plaintiff in error:

A state statute which obliges a person in the constructive possession of land which, from its nature and character, is capable of no other possession, to bring suit to recover said land, thereby compelling a resort to legal proceedings by one who is in the complete enjoyment of all he claims, takes property without due process of law.

A state statute which expressly takes away the right of entry and seisin in land from the owner, and transfers these vested property rights to another, takes property without due process of law.

Arrowsmith v. Burlingim, 4 McLean, 489, Fed. Cas. No. 563; Gillan v. Hutchinson, 16 Cal. 153.

So also does a state statute which takes away vested rights of action.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. p. 444; Larrabee v. Lumbert, 36 Me. 444.

The same is true of a state statute which makes certain past transactions conclusive evidence to take away property from the owner in possession of the same, unless he incurs the expense and risk of a suit at law.

The power of the judiciary is limited to construction of statutes. It cannot disregard the plain and express language denoting the legislative will, and re-enact the statute to make it conform to constitutional requirements. No statute could be held unconstitutional if the judiciary were allowed to ignore vital and essential parts of a statute, and then construe the remainder to read opposite to its plain language.

Settle v. Van Evrea, 49 N. Y. 280; State ex rel. Wall v. Blasdel, 4 Nev. 241.

Mr. Orville Dewey Baker argued the cause, and, with Mr. Amos K. Butler, filed a brief for defendant in error:

A construction given to a statute by the highest court of a state must be accepted by this court in judging whether the statute conforms to the Constitution of the United States.

The deprivation of property in issue must be confined to this particular plaintiff, and to the facts of this particular case.

Cooley, Const. Lim. pp. 180, 181.

If this act operates to change or to modify the common law as to disseisin of wild lands, this is quite unobjectionable, so long as it operates prospectively, and not retrospectively or instanter. Such is the frequent, and even usual, purpose and operation of statutes, and especially of statutes of limitation. They affect and change existing rights and remedies, to real as well as personal property; but this does not make them obnoxious to our constitutions, state or national, so long as they operate prospectively, and provide a reasonable time within which the essential rights previously existing, and the existing remedies, or some proper equivalent remedy, may be enforced.

Proprietors of Kennebec Purchase v. Laboree, 2 Me. 275, 11 Am. Dec. 79.

The principle upon which the act of 1895 is based is not novel. It has been repeatedly passed upon in other states, in many of them under statutes which would give much more color than the Maine statute to the contentions which the defendant here sets up.

Mr. Justice Holmes delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action of trover for logs, brought by the plaintiff in error in the supreme judicial court of Maine. The defendant admitted carrying off the logs, but set up title to the land on which they were cut, one half in itself and one half in its licensors. At the trial the plaintiff proved a prima facie title to an undivided interest in the land. The defendant relied upon the Maine Public Laws of 1895, chap. 162, § 1. With regard to that, the chief justice, presiding, instructed the jury that if the defendant and its licensors, respectively, had satisfied the conditions of § 1, it was entitled to a verdict. A verdict was found for the defendant on that ground. The ruling was taken to the full court on exceptions and a motion for a new trial. At the argument there it was urged that the statute, if applicable to the plaintiff, was contrary to the 14th Amendment, and void. But the court, adverting to the question, decided the contrary, and the defendant had [366]*judgment. 98 Me. 268, 99 Am. St. Rep. 397, 56 Atl. 908. The case then was brought to this court.

The material sections of the act of 1895 are as follows:

"Sec. 1. When the state has taxed wild land, and the state treasurer has deeded it, or part of it, for nonpayment of tax, by deed purporting to convey the interest of the state by forfeiture for such nonpayment, and his records show that the grantee, his heirs or assigns, has paid the state and county taxes thereon, or on his acres or interest therein, as stated in the deed, continuously for the twenty years subsequent to such deed; and when a person claims under a recorded deed describing wild lands taxed by the state, and the state treasurer's record shows that he has, by himself or by his predecessors under such deed, paid the state and county taxes thereon, or on his acres or interest therein, as stated in the deed, continuously for twenty years subsequent to recording such deed; and whenever, in either case, it appears that the person claiming under such a deed, and those under whom he claims, have, during such period, held such exclusive, peaceable, continuous, and adverse possession thereof as comports with the ordinary management of wild lands in Maine, and it further appears that during such period no former owner, or person claiming under him, has paid any such tax, or any assessment by the county commissioners, or done any other act indicative of ownership, no action shall be maintained by a former owner, or those claiming under him, to recover such land, or to avoid such deed, unless commenced within said twenty years, or before January 1, 1900. Such payment shall give such grantee or person claiming as aforesaid, his heirs or assigns, a right of entry and seisin in the whole, or such part, in common and undivided, of the whole tract, as the deed states, or as the number of acres in the deed is to the number of acres assessed.

"Sec. 4: This act shall not apply to actions between cotenants, nor to actions now pending in court, nor to those commenced before January 1, 1900."

*The defendant and his licensors claimed [367] under the second branch of the statute. They held under recorded warranty deeds describing wild lands taxed by the state, running back for more than twenty years, and, although it must be taken that the first deed of the series was executed by owners of a part interest only, that deed naturally was held by the state courts to be a repudiation of the tenancy in common and to lay a foundation for the working of the act. With that question we have nothing to do. The state treasurer's record showed that the defendant, its licensors, and those under whom they claim had paid the taxes thereon continuously down to the bringing of this suit. The same persons had held such exclusive, peaceable, continuous, and adverse possession of the land as comports with the ordinary management of wild lands in Maine, and during the same period no former owner had paid any tax or done any other act indicative of ownership. These facts are admitted or must be assumed to be established by the verdict. This action was brought in 1902 for acts done from 1900 to 1902, after the time allowed by § 4 had run. The question is whether the statute is constitutional as applied to such a case.

Before considering the construction of the statute we will deal with an objection which seems to be made to it, even if solely prospective, as we subsequently shall explain. Suppose that the law gives no effect whatever to acts done before its passage, still it is suggested that when it went into operation the plaintiff, but for its provision, would have been in constructive possession, and the statute purported at once to disseise him and to put him to an action to recover the land. But so far as the statute is prospective it merely enacts, subject to the qualification in § 4, of which we shall speak in a moment, that certain acts, if done in the future, shall constitute a disseisin, and that the disseisin, if continued for the due time, shall ripen into title. The distinction between trespass and disseisin may be modified by statute as properly as it may be established by com-[368] mon law. Also statutes of limitation *may be passed where formerly there were none. So far as the 14th Amendment is concerned, there is nothing to hinder a state from enacting that in future the doing of such overt acts of ownership as are possible on wild land, under a recorded deed which shows that the actor claims title, coupled with payment of the taxes, the owner meantime not paying them, and doing no act indicative of ownership, shall constitute a disseisin, or that such disseisin, if continued long enough, shall bar an action for the land. We think it unnecessary to cite the state decisions on similar statutes, or to argue that proposition at greater length. See Leffingwell v. Warren, 2 Black, 599, 17 L. ed. 261.

The main argument for the plaintiff is that if, as was the fact, the defendant had maintained the statutory occupation for the twenty years before the passage of the act, the statute purported retrospectively to give it the title, or, if the statute did not go to that length, that at least it counted the fifteen years preceding the enactment with the five following it to January 1, 1900, in order to make up the twenty years required by § 1, in any suit brought after that date. The former, more extreme suggestion, is answered by § 4. By the words of that section the statute did not apply to actions brought before January 1, 1900. Therefore, if, but for the statute, the plaintiff would have had a constructive seisin and might have declared in trespass, he still had it during five years and might have declared in the same way.

The only matter requiring analysis is the question of the former owner's position after January 1, 1900, when the act applied. The action then required to be brought by the former owner is an action "to recover such land, or to avoid such deed." An action to recover the land presupposes that the former owner still is out by a continuance, up to the time when the suit is brought, of the acts and omissions of the parties concerned respectively which are made to constitute a disseisin. The requirement that the statutory disseisin should continue until the [369] action was brought is further shown by *the word "said" in the phrase "unless commenced within said twenty years," to which "or before January 1, 1900," is the alternative. Said twenty years are the years during which the disseisor has been paying taxes and holding possession. If between 1895 and 1900 the former owner had been paying the taxes and doing acts indicative of ownership, he would be seised by the very terms of the statute. He would have no occasion to sue, and we hardly understand it to be suggested that he could be sued on the strength of a disseisin satisfying the statute during the twenty years before it was passed, but ending in 1895. If such a suggestion should be made, it would be disposed of by recalling again that for five years after the enactment, for purposes of suit, at least, he stood constructively seised by force of § 4, whenever apart from the statute he would not have been disseised. Of course, therefore, he was not disseised retrospectively before the date of the act. It is still more absurd to suppose that the act meant that if he had paid the taxes and done acts of ownership, so that he was not merely constructively, but actually, seised during the five years, his title was to vanish when that time had elapsed.

The discussion is narrowed, then, to the consideration of an action begun, as this was, after January 1, 1900, when the defendant has held that statutory possession for the five years following the act and for fifteen years before. If the plaintiff had brought a real action instead of the present suit, he would have been barred if the statute is good. The plaintiff says that the counting of the fifteen years before the enactment makes the statute bad. But suppose that the statute had enacted simply that if the conditions of § 1 should be maintained from the date of the act until January 1, 1900, and no action brought, the former owner should be barred, there can be no question that it would have been valid. It was not and could not be argued that a statute of limitations allowing nearly five years would be unreasonably short. Turner v. New York, 168 U. S. 90, 42 L. ed. 392, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 38; Terry v. Anderson, 95 U. S. 628, 24 L. ed. 365. *But, [370] if such a statute would be constitutional, the requirement of a continuance of similar conditions for a time before the statute long enough to make twenty continuous years when taken with the five years following it was a pure advantage to the plaintiff, a further condition which did him only good. It was not argued that the statute was invalid because a less time was allowed to persons in the plaintiff's position than to those whose twenty years should begin to run after the statute went into effect. Similar provisions are common and seem to have been before the court in Terry v. An- derson and Turner v. New York, supra, and in Koshkonong v. Burton, 104 U. S. 668, 26 L. ed. 886.

Some objection was made to the effect given to a tax deed in the first part of the section. But that is not before us. We see nothing to indicate an intent to go beyond the law. Marx v. Hanthorn, 148 U. S. 172, 37 L. ed. 410, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 508. As to the possibility that the taxes may have been assessed unlawfully or the recorded deed under which the defendant claims forged, it is admitted that such matters might be proved. As they are public facts, give color to the overt acts done upon the land, and must be accompanied by a necessarily conscious omission of the plaintiff to pay taxes or do any acts of ownership, we see nothing to hinder the legislature making them sufficient, prima facie, at least, to set the statute running and to put the former owners to a suit.

The act, as we construe it, does not infringe the 14th Amendment. We understand our construction to agree with that adopted by the supreme judicial court of the state. That court says of the statute: "It is not only not retrospective, but it is distinctly made prospective only in its operation, and the reasonable period of five years after the date of the enactment is allowed, during which all controversies respecting such titles might be adjusted according to 'the principles and the nature of those facts by means of which those titles had existed' before the passage of the act." [98 Me. 282, 99 Am. St. Rep. 407, 56 Atl. 912.] Of course, if the statute, as construed by the state court, is constitu-[371] tional, we follow its *construction. Tampa Waterworks Co. v. Tampa, 199 U. S. 241, 243, ante, 170, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 23. We have made some little analysis of the words simply because the state court went into no detail.

Judgment affirmed.

JOSÉ ANTONIO VIVONI, Concepción Ramirez, Angela Ramirez, et al.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 371-377.)

1. Wills—construction.—"Issue," and not "lawful heirs," was meant by the words sucesión legitima in a devise of the residue of the testator's estate "in the character of fidei-commissum, and that the other [shares] may [profit by] accretion, in case of death without sucesión legitima," in equal parts to his nieces and a foster child, who was to adopt his surname, coupled with a provision for the education of such foster child, and a request that when her education was finished she should return to live with the said nieces.

2. Appeal—questions reviewable.—Questions not presented by the pleadings nor raised in the lower court will not be considered on appeal.

Argued and submitted March 14, 1906. Decided April 2, 1906.

APPEAL from the District Court of the United States for the District of Porto Rico to review a decree dismissing a bill for the partition of real estate. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Fritz von Briesen argued the cause, and, with Messrs. Charles M. Boerman and Stephen M. Hoye, filed a brief for appellant:

As used in the Spanish codes and law dictionaries the words sucesión legitima have a meaning which may be most nearly expressed by the English words "intestate succession."

Escriche, Diccionario Razonado de Legislación y Jurisprudencia, Paris, 1852, title, Sucesión Legitima; Pothier, Traité des Successions, Paris, 1890, p. 1; Porto Rico Code Civ. Proc. 1889, arts. 912, 981; Porto Rico, Civ. Code 1902, §§ 664–666, 866; La Code 1861, arts. 871–875.

The words sucesión legitima are used to designate those of the nearest relatives who take the inheritance.

Alcubilla, Diccionario de la Administración Española, Madrid, 1895, Appx. p. 795; 3 Scaevola, Jurisprudencia del Codigo Civil, Madrid, 1901, p. 213.

It is the same in our language.

Century Dict. Succession.

If a grantor or testator uses the word "heirs," and there are children, he usually means children. But the word "heirs" is construed to mean heirs unless the context shows that the meaning of the grantor or testator was otherwise.

Ide v. Ide, 5 Mass. 500; Gifford v. Choate, 100 Mass. 345; Heath v. Hewitt, 127 N. Y. 166, 13 L.R.A. 46, 24 Am. St. Rep. 438, 27 N. E. 959.

NOTE.—As to how far the intention of a testator is to govern in the construction of a will—see notes to Pray v. Belt, 7 L. ed. U. S. 309; Dougherty v. Rogers, 3 L.R.A. 847; Boston Safe Deposit & T. Co. v. Coffin, 8 L.R.A. 740; Davidson v. Coon, 9 L.R.A. 587; and Masterson v. Townshend, 10 L.R.A. 816.

As to when objections must be made in the court below—see notes to O'Neill v. New York, O. & W. R. Co. 5 L.R.A. 591; and State v. Holt, 8 L.R.A. 608.

It is the general rule of the Spanish law that wills are to be construed exactly as they read, unless such construction be a ridiculous one.

7 Jurisprudencia Civil, No. 315, p. 787; 12 Jurisprudencia Civil, No. 439, p. 461; 26 Jurisprudencia Civil, No. 204, pp. 15, 16; 27 Jurisprudencia Civil, No. 108, pp. 395, 396; 27 Jurisprudencia Civil, p. 166; 33 Jurisprudencia Civil, No. 49, p. 191; Pothier, Traité des Donations Testamentaires, Paris, 1890, p. 330, chap. 7, § 1.

The same provisions are found in our law of the construction of wills. The plain meaning of the words used in a will is always presumed to be their meaning, and the burden of proof that they are used in another sense is upon the party claiming so.

See Aspden's Estate, 2 Wall. Jr. 368, Fed. Cas. No. 589; Daly v. James, 8 Wheat. 534, 5 L. ed. 679; Osborne v. Shrieve, 3 Mason, 391, Fed. Cas. No. 10,598.

It is also invariably so held in the states where the civil law similar to that of Porto Rico is in force; as, for example, in Louisiana and California.

Norris v. Hensley, 27 Cal. 439; Sharp v. Klienpeter, 7 La. Ann. 264.

In construing a will, the words are to be construed according to their natural import, unless the context evidently points out that in the particular instance there should be some other construction.

Sheriff v. Brown, 5 Mackey, 172; Re Hallet, 8 Paige, 378; Puryear v. Edmondson, 4 Heisk. 51.

A testator must be presumed to have used words in their ordinary, primary sense or meaning.

Re Woodward, 117 N. Y. 522, 7 L.R.A. 367, 23 N. E. 120.

All doubts are to be resolved in favor of the testator's having said exactly what he meant.

Cody v. Bunn, 46 N. J. Eq. 131, 18 Atl. 857.

Where the provisions of the will are clear and simple, no reason exists for taking the testator's words in any other than their natural sense.

Wylie v. Lockwood, 86 N. Y. 301; Lovett v. Buloid, 3 Barb. Ch. 137.

The question in expounding a will is not what the testator meant, but what is the meaning of the words used by him.

Barry's Appeal, 6 Sadler (Pa.) 132, 20 W. N. C. 26, 10 Atl. 126; Bates v. Woodruff, 123 Ill. 205, 13 N. E. 845.

Only when technical words are employed in a will in such a manner that to give them their strict meaning would defeat the intention of the testator, apparent from the will, a more liberal or popular interpretation will be given to them, in order to carry such intention into effect.

De Kay v. Irving, 5 Denio, 646.

Provisions relating to fidei-commissary substitutions are to be liberally construed, so as to prevent the taking place of substitution.

Pothier, Traité des Substitutions, Paris, 1890, p. 477.

Mr. N. B. K. Pettingill submitted the cause for appellees:

The courts will so construe wills, irrespective of the technical meanings of the words used, as to determine and carry out the real intention of a testator.

Robison v. Female Orphan Asylum, 123 U. S. 707, 31 L. ed. 295, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 327; Kenaday v. Sinnott, 179 U. S. 616, 45 L. ed. 345, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 233; Codina v. Codina, 14 Jurisprudencia Civil, p. 237; Romero v. Romero, 14 Jurisprudencia Civil, p. 793.

The accustomed legal use of the term sucesión is to denote "issue," and not "heirs."

Dictionary Spanish Royal Academy, p. 932, sucesión; Lopez, Spanish-English Dictionary, p. 577, sucesión; 61 Jurisprudencia Civil, pp. 10, 488; 51 Jurisprudencia Civil, p. 422.

Where the word "heirs" is used by a testator, it often is shown by the context to mean "issue" or "descendants."

Mr. Justice Holmes delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a bill for the partition of real estate, in which the female plaintiff claims one undivided eighth as heir to her daughter, Felipa Benicia, who died an infant, without issue. This daughter got her title under the will of Thomas José Ramirez, and the question is whether, in the event which happened, her share went to her mother by descent or to her fellow devisees by the terms of the will. The other devisees all were living at her death. The case was heard upon a plea setting up the foregoing facts, together with the will, and the bill was dismissed. Thereupon the plaintiffs appealed to this court.

*The material clause of the will is as [376] follows: "Trece.—El remanente de mis bienes, dercchos, y acciones, lo lego con calidad de fideicomiso, y que acrezcan las demas, caso de fallecimiento sin sucesión legitima, por iguales partes, á mis sobrinas Doña Cornelia y Doña Antonia Martinez, Doña Monserrate, Doña Obdulia, Doña Encarnación, Doña Angela, y Doña Concesión Ramirez de Arellano y Felipa Benicia, mi hija de crianza," etc. We vary slightly the translation in the record. "The remainder of my goods, rights, and actions I bequeath in the character of fidei-commissum and that the other [shares] may [profit by] accretion, in case of death without succsión legitima, by equal parts to my nieces [named] and Felipa Benicia, my foster child, who shall adopt my surname," with appointment of a guardian for the last, a provision for her education, and a request that when that is finished she return to live with the said nieces.

It is agreed that it is possible for sucesión legitima to mean either issue or lawful heirs. If it means the latter, the mother inherited, as she was the lawful heir. If it means the former, then, by the terms of the will, Felipa Benicia's share went to the testator's nieces when she died. It seems to us too plain to need extended elucidation that sucesión legitima here means issue. The argument on the other side, that the purpose is merely to prevent an escheat by making the nieces and Felipa Benicia reciprocal successors, to impose a fetter on free alienation, and to enhance the dowry of the nieces, strikes us as fanciful. The natural object of this fidei-commissary substitution is that which is said to be its object,— to secure accretion among the shares. But that purpose would pretty nearly vanish into thin air if death without heirs were the event in view. For each of the nieces being heir to all the others, accretion among them would be excluded. It is argued, to be sure, that they might repudiate the inheritance and then claim under the will, if any of the nieces died heavily in debt. Whether this would be true by Spanish law we need not inquire. For such remote explanations must be rejected when [377] *the will offers a different and more obvious one upon its face. And while it is pressed that substitutions are strictly construed in favor of the first taker, we do not understand that or any other rule of construction to require a perversion of language, or to govern a case where the second taker stands on an equal footing with the first in the testator's mind, with equal mutual chances, and when the plainly expressed purpose is to create an artificial class, with cross limitations in case of death without a child.

A suggestion is made by an afterthought, in a brief filed since the argument, that the testator could not exclude the mother of Felipa from her right, as necessary or forced heir, to two thirds of Felipa's share. The suggestion comes too late. No such claim was set up in the bill, or, so far as appears, in the court below. Therefore, we shall not consider at length whether, in case of a pure gratuity to one to whom the testator was under no legal obligation, the Spanish law entitled a forced heir to claim against the words of a gift like this. The texts cited are not sufficient to establish the proposition, and the contrary seems to be shown by Ley 10, titulo 4, part. 6, and note 13, Madrid ed. 1848. See also 4 Escriche, 1051, 1052, sub. v. Substitución Fideicomisaria, ad fin. On the whole case the plaintiffs must abide by the construction and the law, in which, it would seem from the bill, they have acquiesced for thirty years.

Decree affirmed.

THE STEAMSHIP WILDCROFT, James Cassap, Master and Claimant.†

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 378–390.)

1. Appeal—concurrent findings of fact.—The concurrent findings of the two lower courts that a vessel was inspected at the beginning of the voyage, and found to be seaworthy and fit to carry the cargo which she had undertaken to transport, will ordinarily not be disturbed by the Federal Supreme Court on appeal.

2. Evidence—burden of proof—seaworthiness.—The burden of proving that a vessel was seaworthy at the time of beginning the voyage, or that due diligence had been used to make her so, rests upon the shipowner claiming the benefit of the exemption provided in the Harter act of February 13, 1893 (27 Stat. at L. 445, chap. 105, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 2946), § 3, against errors of management or navigation, whether or not there is any evidence to the contrary.

Mr. Justice Day delivered the opinion of the court:

The original action was begun by the filing of a libel in the district court of the United States for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, to recover damages alleged to have been sustained by the petitioner, with respect to a cargo of sugar of which it was the consignee, shipped upon the steamship Wildcroft from ports in Cuba to Philadelphia. The evidence showed that in the month of April, 1901, the Wildcroft, having discharged a cargo of coal at the port of Havana, proceeded to Cardenas and Matanzas, where she took on the load of sugar, to be delivered to the petitioner in Philadelphia. This sugar was stored in bags in holds Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 4 of the ship. On the voyage a severe storm was encountered and some damage was done by salt water finding its way into hold No. 3 because of the tearing away of the tarpaulins over the hatches and the washing off of the starboard ventilator cover. At the *hearing in the district court the [385] claim for damage, because of injury alleged to have been caused to the sugar in holds Nos. 1 and 2, was held to be waived by the libellant, who disclaimed damage on that account. And the district judge added, we think correctly, as to the surface damage in hold No. 3, "This damage was concededly caused by a peril of the seas."

There is nothing in the testimony to show that the injury to the cargo of sugar in holds Nos. 3 and 4 of the vessel by means of fresh water was occasioned until the ship arrived at Philadelphia.

A more distinct understanding of the construction of the vessel and the manner in which fresh water could be communicated to hold No. 3, and from thence into hold No. 4, may be had by a perusal of the full finding of the facts made in the case in the district court (124 Fed. 631, 126 Fed. 229), approved by the circuit court of appeals (65 C. C. A. 145, 130 Fed. 521), which findings fully explain the situation and the method by which the injury was inflicted. It is enough for us to say that both courts unite in the conclusion that the cargo was injured on Monday, April 29, after the ship arrived at the dock in Philadelphia, when, because of the letting in of fresh water for the purpose of filling the engine-room tank, which was accomplished by opening a valve on the ship's side which admits water from the river, and because of an open cock to a valve in the connection from the tank-filling pipe to the service or feed donkey, connecting with the distribution box, water was permitted to flow from the tank-filling pipe through this open cock to the distribution chest and down a pipe and through a valve, which must have also been held open in some way so that water flowed into this suction pipe leading into No. 3 hold, and flowing thence into No. 4 hold, damaged the cargo of sugar therein contained. It is evident from the testimony that if these cocks, and more particularly the one marked "D," had been properly closed, the water could not have found its way into the holds and inflicted the damage.

[386] Of these findings the circuit court of *appeals, adopting the conclusions of the court below, said: "All of the testimony in this respect is uncontradicted, and no facts are shown from which any other conclusion can be drawn, than that the water which came into the bottom of these holds, to the depth of several feet, doing the damage in question, came in after the early morning of the 29th of April, and before the close of that day, while the cargo was being discharged at the wharf in Philadelphia. It is not disputed that the water was fresh water, such as was the water in the Delaware river, in which she was lying. In connection with these facts, it was shown by the testimony that the sea cock for filling the engine-room tank was open at 10 o'clock that morning, and kept open for a period of three hours, and that if two certain cocks, fully described in the evidence and pointed out by the learned judge of the court below, were left open by accident or design, there would be a free flow of water from the open sea cock into the bilges of hold No. 3. Directly after the filling of the tank and the closing of the sea cock, water to a considerable depth was reported in holds No. 3 and No. 4. This sea cock had not been open from the time the cargo was put on board in Cuba until, as just stated, on the morning of the 29th of April, at Philadelphia. We think the court below was fully justified in its finding, that the damage here in question was due to 'the water that flowed into the hold through the pipe line on April 29th, in the manner just described,' and that 'it is impossible that the damage could have occurred in any other way.'"

In order to have the benefit of the exemptions provided in the Harter act (27 Stat. at L. 445, chap. 105, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 2946) against errors of management or navigation, by reason of the 3d section, which was relied upon in the case, it was incumbent upon the shipowner to prove that the vessel was seaworthy at the time of beginning the voyage, or that due diligence had been used to make her so. International Nav. Co. v. Farr & B. Mfg. Co. 181 U. S. 218, 45 L. ed. 830, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 591; The Southwark (Martin v. The Southwark) 191 U. S. 1, 48 L. ed. 65, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1. *It, therefore, be- [387] came incumbent upon the shipowner to show that a due and proper inspection had been had and the vessel ascertained to be in all respects seaworthy and fit to carry the cargo which she had undertaken to transport, or that due diligence to that end had been used. As we understand the findings of both the district court and the court of appeals, the testimony in this regard introduced by the shipowner was sufficient in the judgment of those courts, to establish that the vessel was seaworthy in the respects involved, and that an inspection had been had, and the valves and connections, the negligent use of which was productive of this injury, found in due order at the beginning of the voyage. This finding of two courts will ordinarily not be disturbed, and is usually accepted by this court as conclusive. The Carib Prince (Wupperman v. The Carib Prince) 170 U. S. 655, 658, 42 L. ed. 1181, 1185, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 753. The only testimony directly upon the subject at the hearing was that of the master and the engineer, taken upon deposition in England, upon interrogatories filed. The charge in the libel was very broad and general, and the interrogatories were not as specific as they might have been, and no cross interrogatories were filed. While the testimony is not as specific as it might be, we still think it was sufficient to show that an inspection was had, and everything found in order at the beginning as well as during the voyage, and from the record we reach the conclusion, sustained by the findings of the courts below, that the ship was seaworthy in all respects at the beginning of the voyage, and it was a careless and recent opening of the valve or valves, shortly before the fresh water was let in, which resulted in the damage complained of. We are very clear that this is not a case where the findings of the court below can be disturbed, as was our conclusion in the case of The Southwark, supra, relied upon by the petitioner, where it was shown that the damage inflicted was the result of unseaworthiness in respect to a condition which a proper inspection of the vessel at the beginning of the voyage would have discovered and remedied. We, therefore, reach the con-[388] clusion that the decree of the *circuit court of appeals should be affirmed, and but for its construction of the rule of evidence in cases of this kind this opinion might well end here. But we are unable to agree with the views expressed in the opinion of the learned circuit court of appeals to the effect that where a shipowner seeks the protection of the immunity afforded by the Harter act under § 3, reliance may be had upon the presumption of law that the vessel was seaworthy at the beginning of the voyage, and that it is only in cases of conflicting proof that the burden is imposed upon the shipowner of establishing by testimony the seaworthiness of the vessel, or due diligence in that behalf, in order to have the benefit of the act. We think this construction of the law is opposed to the terms and policy of the act, and contrary to the decisions of this court heretofore announced, from which we see no occasion to depart. The relief afforded by the 3d section of the Harter act to the owner of a vessel transporting property is purely statutory. In the case at bar there could be no question as to the liability of the vessel owner from the established facts of the case, but for the immunity afforded by that act. To permit a cargo of sugar to be injured by the introduction of fresh water in the manner shown, but for the provisions of this act, would have made a case of clear liability against the owner; and where the statute has given immunity against such loss by reason of error in navigation or management, it does so upon the distinct condition that the owner shall show that the vessel was in all respects seaworthy and properly manned, equipped, and supplied for the voyage; or, if this cannot be established, that he has used due diligence to obtain this end. The discharge of this duty is not left to any presumption in the absence of proof. It is the condition precedent, compliance with which is required of the vessel owner in order to give him the benefit of the immunity afforded by the act. The reason for requiring this proof by the owner is apparent. He is bound to furnish a seaworthy and properly equipped ship for the purpose of the voyage. Whether he has done so is a matter *peculiarly within his own [389] knowledge. The inspection which he can give, but which the shipper cannot give, for lack of opportunity, will establish whether this duty has been complied with. The whole matter is in the control of the owner. The law says, in substance, that when the owner can show that he has discharged this duty he shall be relieved from errors of navigation and management on the voyage, over which he has not such direct control. It is not a case where there is either the necessity or propriety of resorting to presumptions. It is only when he has discharged the burden which the law imposes upon him, and shown that he has furnished a vessel, fit and seaworthy, or has used due diligence to that end, that the law relieves him of the liability which he would otherwise incur. This construction of the statute has been more than once announced in the decisions of this court; recently in International Nav. Co. v. Farr & B. Mfg. Co. 181 U. S. 218, 226, 45 L. ed. 830, 833, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 591, in which this court, speaking through Mr. Chief Justice Fuller, said: "We repeat, that even if the loss occur through fault or error in management, the exemption cannot be availed of unless the vessel was seaworthy when she sailed, or due diligence to make her so had been exercised, and it is for the owner to establish the existence of one or the other of these conditions." This case was quoted and followed in the still later case of The Southwark, supra, in which it was reiterated that the burden was upon the vessel owner to show by reasonable and proper tests that the vessel was seaworthy and in a fit condition to receive and transport the cargo undertaken to be carried, and that if, by failure to adopt such tests and furnish the required proof, the question of the ship's seaworthiness was left in doubt, that doubt must be resolved in favor of the shipper, because the vessel owner had not sustained the burden cast upon him by the law to establish that he had used due diligence to furnish a seaworthy vessel.

While we, therefore, accept the decision of the learned circuit court of appeals as to the facts in this case, we do not *wish [390] to be regarded as sanctioning any relaxation of the rule above stated, already laid down in the prior decisions of this court.

Decree affirmed.

UNITED STATES, Appt.,
v.
JAMES H. WICKERSHAM, Jr.

1. Civil service—positions included.—The protection of the President's order of July 27, 1897, against removals from the civil service except upon written charges, with opportunity for defense, extends to an employee in the office of the United States surveyor general for the state of Idaho, certified by the Secretary of the Interior as within the terms of the act of January 16, 1883 (22 Stat. at L. 406, chap. 27, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1222), § 6, and the executive order of May 6, 1896, made in pursuance thereof, extending the departmental service classified under that act so as to include all executive officers and employees outside of the District of Columbia, whether compensated by a fixed salary or otherwise, who are serving in a clerical capacity, or whose duties are, in whole or in part, of a clerical nature.

2. Civil service—compensation during suspension.—A regular and duly qualified employee in the classified civil service of the United States is entitled to the compensation attached by law to his position during the period of his wrongful suspension by a subordinate officer.

Argued February 28, 1906. Decided April 2, 1906.

APPEAL from the Court of Claims to review a judgment awarding compensation to an employee in the office of the United States surveyor general for the state of Idaho during the period of his suspension by that officer. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Assistant Attorney General Pradt and Mr. Felix Brannigan argued the cause and filed a brief for appellant.

Messrs. William R. Andrews and Samuel D. Luckett argued the cause and filed a brief for appellee.

Mr. Justice Day delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellee brought suit in the court of claims to recover upon an alleged claim for compensation at the rate of $1,100 per annum, from November 1, 1897, to July 1, 1902, and averred that he was a clerk in the office of the United States *surveyor [393] general in Boisé, Idaho, in the classified civil service, from which employment, on said first-mentioned date, he was suspended without fault of his own or just cause. He stated his readiness to discharge the duties of the office, and set forth in detail what he claimed amounted to a wrongful suspension therefrom by the United States surveyor general of the state of Idaho. The finding of facts is quite voluminous, and it is unnecessary to set it all out in detail. The facts pertinent to the decision of this case may be summarized as follows: Several years prior to May 6, 1896, claimant was employed as a clerk, stenographer, and typewriter in the office of the surveyor general of the United States for the state of Idaho, at a salary of $1,100 per annum. On that date the President of the United States made and promulgated an order relating to the civil service, which provided, among other things:

"Rule III.

"1. All that part of the executive civil service of the United States which has been, or may hereafter be, classified under the civil service act, shall be arranged as follows: The Departmental Service. . . .

"2. The Departmental Service shall include officers and employees as follows:

. . . . . .

"(b) All executive officers and employees outside of the District of Columbia not covered in (a), of whatever designation, whether compensated by fixed salary or otherwise—

"Who are serving in a clerical capacity, or whose duties are in whole or in part of a clerical nature."

On June 9, 1896, the Secretary of the Interior issued the following order:

Civil Service Classification of Officers and Employees.

Department of the Interior,
Washington, June 9, 1896.

By direction of the President of the United States, and in accordance with the third clause of § 6 of the act entitled "*An Act to [394] Regulate and Improve the Civil Service of the United States," approved January 16, 1883 [22 Stat. at L. 406, chap. 27, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 1222]:

It is ordered, That the officers and employees in or under this Department included within the provisions of the civil service law and rules be, and they are hereby, arranged in the following classes:

Class E, all persons receiving an annual salary of $1,000 or more, or a compensation at the rate of $1,000 or more, but less than $1,200 per annum. . . .

On September 22, 1896, the Acting Secretary of the Interior communicated to the Civil Service Commission the names of the incumbents, with their legal residences and the dates of appointment, added to the classified departmental service by the extension of May 6, 1896, also inclosing a similar list of such positions and employees in the offices of the surveyor general, which contained the name of the appellee, with his title, "stenographer and typewriter," date of appointment, salary, residence, and class. The appellee was verbally informed by the surveyor general of his selection, and, after executing the prescribed oath, entered upon his duties. At the time of his employment the custom was to allow the surveyor general to select the clerical force of his office. Appellee was continuously employed as such stenographer and typewriter until November 1, 1897, on which date he was suspended from service by the surveyor general. No charges in writing or orally were preferred against him, the surveyor general basing the suspension on the ground that appellee's services were not needed on account of lack of work to be done. On November 15, 1897, the surveyor general reported to the Commissioner of the General Land Office an accumulation of mineral work, the employment of certain clerks by himself, with the request for additional clerical force. On November 22, 1897, the Commissioner of the General Land Office advised the surveyor general that the ground taken that certain persons were dismissed because there was no further occasion for their services, and the appointment of other persons in [395] their places, could not *be sustained. On February 24, 1898, the Commissioner of the General Land Office, in reply to a letter from the surveyor general under date of February 21, 1898, in which he had asked authority to employ two additional draftsmen and four transcribing clerks, to be paid from the funds reported as available, said: "No authority can be given you to employ the additional force desired, except as provided under the civil service rules. I am constrained to say that but for your summary action in dispensing with so many of your employees, in violation of the law governing such matters, the difficulties in despatching the work of your office would not have prevailed to such an extent." On May 14, 1898, the Commissioner advised the Civil Service Commission as follows: "Referring to my request of the 20th ult., for a certificate of a list of eligibles for appointment as stenographer and typewriter, at $900, in the office of the surveyor general of Idaho, I have been informed that an examination was recently held by your Commission in said state for persons possessing the required qualifications, and it is urgently requested that as soon as possible this office may be furnished with a certificate from those citizens of Idaho who are eligible for the place desired to be filled under my call of the 20th ult., as the surveyor general reports that his work is much impeded and embarrassed for the lack of a competent stenographer." On June 15, 1898, the president of the Civil Service Commission addressed a communication to the Secretary of the Interior, in which he said: "In this connection the Commission invites your attention to the fact that although Surveyor General Perrault suspended the above-named employees (Lellman and Wickersham) and three others (D. J. Cohen, Joseph P. Chinn, and Alice S. Howey) over seven months ago, on the alleged ground of lack of work (which has been effectually disproved), these persons still remain, separated from the service, while others occupy the positions to which they are properly entitled." Since November 1, 1897, claimant has not been permitted to perform the duties of stenographer and typewriter in said office, although after *said date he stood ready and [396] willing to discharge the duties thereof, and he has received no compensation from the United States since October 31, 1897. On November 5, 1897, he protested against his suspension, and on December 28, 1897, he demanded his salary. On January 1, 1899, he assumed office as district clerk of Ada county, Idaho, and served for one year. On April 9, 1898, the Commissioner of the General Land Office directed the reinstatement of the clerks whose places had not been permanently filled, among others naming the appellee, and directed the surveyor general to prefer formal charges against such persons as he had reported for inefficiency, etc., and to hand a copy of the charges and a copy of the order to each of the clerks and give them three days within which to make a response. In pursuance of this instruction the surveyor general, on April 16, 1898, preferred charges against the appellee, and on the same day reinstated him. On May 10, 1898, the Commissioner of the General Land Office advised the surveyor general that the appellee would be reinstated in the service of the bureau, as his continuance in the surveyor general's office would not be harmonious and in the best interests of the public service. On the same day he was offered a position in Washington at $1,000 per annum, without transportation, which he declined.

He was offered the alternative of accepting a position in the General Land Office in Washington at a reduced salary, or to await the occurrence of a vacancy elsewhere; but he has not since been offered a position elsewhere in the service. On August 8, 1898, the Commissioner of the General Land Office made appellee's suspension permanent. The court of claims rendered a judgment in favor of the appellee for the amount of his compensation from the 1st of November 1897, from which date, it was found, he was wrongfully suspended, until May 10, 1898, when his services in the office of the surveyor general were discontinued and he was offered a position in the bureau at Washington, which he declined.

It is the contention of the government that Wickersham was not an official ap-[397] pointee of the President or the head of *a department, but was merely an appointee of the surveyor general, without definite employment, and subject to removal at the will of that officer. The employment of the appellee is alleged to be no different than the ordinary engagement of master and servant, and it is urged that the attempted suspension by the surveyor general was tantamount to dismissal by an employer of one who was engaged without definite term and subject to dismissal at any time.

The provisions of the act of Congress of January 16, 1883, to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States (1 Rev. Stat. Supp. 392), are broad and comprehensive. By § 6 of the act the power is conferred upon the President of the United States to require the heads of executive departments to classify for the purposes of the act and the examination therein provided for, and to include in one or more of said classes, so far as practicable, subordinate places, clerks, and officers in the public service pertaining to their respective departments, not before classified for examination. The order of the President of May 6, 1896, Rule III., provides that the departmental service classified under the act should include officers and employees, among others, "All executive officers and employees outside the District of Columbia . . . of whatever designation, whether compensated by fixed salary or otherwise, who are serving in a clerical capacity, or whose duties are, in whole or in part, of a clerical nature." In accordance with the statute, and under the provisions of this order, the Secretary of the Interior, on June 9, 1896, made an order classifying the officers and employees of his department, Class E including persons receiving $1,000 or more salary, or compensation at the rate of $1,000 or more, but less than $1,200 per annum. On September 26, 1896, under the extension order referred to and the action of the Secretary of the Interior, the Acting Secretary of the Interior filed a list of positions and employees with the Civil Service Commission, which among others, in the list of employees in the offices of surveyors general, contained the name of the appellee as a stenographer *and typewriter, the date of his [398] appointment, salary, and residence, as stated in the findings of fact. By the action recited on the part of the President and the head of the Department of the Interior, Wickersham was brought within the protection of the law and the President's order afforded to persons duly entered in the classified civil service. While he may not technically have been an officer of the United States with a fixed term and compensation, he certainly was within the subordinate places provided for in the statute, and within the "employees outside the District of Columbia," covered by the President's order of May 6, 1896. That order expressly included officers and employees, whether compensated by a fixed salary or otherwise, serving in a clerical capacity or whose duties were in whole or in part of a clerical nature. The Secretary of the Interior certified the name of the claimant to the Civil Service Commission as an employee in the office of the surveyor general within the terms of the statute and the Executive order. He was, therefore, entitled to the protection of the President's order of July 27, 1897 (14 Am. Rep. Civ. Serv. Comm. 133): "No removal shall be made from any position subject to competitive examination except for just cause and upon written charges filed with the head of the department or other appointing officer, and of which the accused shall have full notice and an opportunity to make defense." If the contention of the government be correct, and the attempted suspension by the surveyor general was equivalent to a dismissal from office, such action would run counter to the requirements of the Presidential order just quoted. The action of the surveyor general was not upon written charges, and no notice or opportunity to make defense was given to the accused, as provided in that order. The appellee being entitled to the protection of this order, and to have notice of the charges preferred, and an opportunity to make defense, the attempted removal, if such it was, was without legal effect; nor can we find any authority, statutory or otherwise, authorizing the suspension in the manner undertaken in this case. The attempted [399] *suspension was held to be without authority by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and the surveyor general was directed to reinstate the claimant and to proceed by regular charges against him. In the meantime the record shows that the claimant was ready and willing to discharge the duties of his position, and had received no compensation therefor during the time of his wrongful suspension. Whether he could have been summarily removed or suspended by the President or other competent authority is not the question now before the court, but the question is whether the employee, during his wrongful suspension by a subordinate officer, is entitled to the compensation provided by law. We see no reason, in such an attitude of the case, where the wrongful suspension is clearly established, and the ability of the incumbent to discharge the duties of his office affirmatively found, for withholding from him the compensation given by law to an incumbent of the place. If this be not so, then a regular and duly qualified employee in the public service, protected by the statute and the orders of the President made in pursuance thereof, can be deprived of the benefit and emolument of his position by a wrongful and illegal suspension from his duties. We do not think such a contention can be sustained either by reason or authority. Where an officer is wrongfully suspended by one having no authority to make such an order, he ought to be and is entitled to the compensation provided by law during such suspension. Throop, Pub. Off. § 407; Emmitt v. New York, 128 N. Y. 117, 28 N. E. 19. This was the view entertained by the court of claims in deciding Lellmann v. United States, 37 Ct. Cl. 128, on the authority of which the case at bar was decided by that court. We think the ruling was correct.

The case comes to this: The appellee, by his appointment, practically made by the Secretary of the Interior in entering his name in the classified list and designating him for the service required, was entitled to the privileges and emoluments of his position until he was legally disqualified by his own action or that of some duly author-

[400] ized public authority. The attempted *suspension without authority of law, he remaining ready and willing to discharge the duties of the place, could not, during the period of such wrongful suspension, have the effect to deprive him of the compensation legally belonging to one entitled to hold the position.

2. Courts—jurisdiction of Federal circuit court—diverse citizenship.—The motive with which a creditor invokes the jurisdiction of a Federal circuit court is immaterial if he has a justiciable demand and the requisite diversity of citizenship exists.

3. Courts—jurisdiction of Federal circuit court—ancillary action.—Receivers in possession of street railway property under a decree of a Federal circuit court may, with the authority of that court, maintain an ancillary bill to remove a cloud cast upon the title to such property by the claim of the municipality that the rights and franchises of the street railway companies would expire on a specified date, and by its asserted purpose to resume possession of the streets on that date, and to resort to all legal means to protect its rights against what it deemed the unfounded claims of the railway companies as to the duration of their franchises.

4. Corporations—ultra vires—who may raise question.—The want of corporate power to make or accept certain leases of street railway property cannot be raised by the municipality in a suit to which all the corporations are parties, brought by the receivers, in whom are vested, under the authority of the court, all the rights and franchises of the lessor corporations which the latter undertook to transfer to the lessees.

5. Statutes—validity—expression of subject in title.—The requirement of the Illinois Constitution of 1848 that no private or local law shall embrace more than one subject, which shall be expressed in the title, is satisfied if the title is not made to cover legislation incongruous in itself, and which, by no fair intendment, can be considered as having a necessary or proper connection with such title.

6. Street railways — franchise — term.—The authority of the city of Chicago under Ill. acts of February 14, 1859, and February 21, 1861, to fix the terms and conditions upon which the street railway companies chartered by those acts with a corporate life of twenty-five years should occupy its streets, includes the power to fix the term of such occupation.

7. Street railways — franchise — term.—The right to use the Chicago streets for street railway purposes was not extended to ninety-nine years, without reference to any limitation as to time fixed by the municipality, by the Illinois amendatory act of February 6, 1865, which extends from twenty-five to ninety-nine years the corporate life of the street railway companies created by the acts of February 14, 1859, and February 21, 1861, to construct and maintain street railways on streets designated by the common council, upon terms and conditions prescribed by such council, and provides that any transfer of "rights, privileges, or franchises between the corporations" and all "contracts, stipulations, leases, and undertakings" as made and amended between the companies and the city, respecting the location, use, or exclusion of railways in or upon the streets, or any of them, of said city, shall be deemed and held and continued in force "during the life hereof" as if incorporated in the earlier statutes.

8. Statutes — construction — legislative grant.—A legislative grant of special and exclusive privileges must be made in plain terms in order to convey private rights in respect to public property, and to prevent the future control of such privileges in the public interest.

9. Statutes — amendment — effect. — The extended corporate life given by the Illinois amendatory act of February 6, 1865, to the street railway corporation created by the act of February 14, 1859, § 1, must be read into the charter of the street railway company created by § 10 of the same act, and invested by that section with all the grants, powers, privileges, immunities, and franchises conferred upon the corporation by the 1st section as fully and effectually as if incorporated by a separate act.

10. Street railways — franchise — term.—The right to operate street railways in Chicago under the municipal ordinance confirmed by Ill. acts of February 14, 1859, and February 6, 1865, until the city should exercise its reserved right to purchase, is confined to the streets designated in the original ordinance and in such other later ordinances as indicate a purpose to preserve the permission of the original ordinance, and does not, by reason of the unity of the street railway system, extend to the rights of occupancy acquired in other streets, so as to continue such right until purchase is made of the entire system.

11. Street railways — franchise — term.—No intention to confer a right in perpetuity to the occupancy of certain streets on the west side for street railway purposes authorized by the Chicago ordinance of August 17, 1864, can be inferred from the silence of such ordinance respecting the term of the grant, in view of the other ordinances limiting grants for the west side system to twenty-five years and thereafter until the municipality should exercise its right of purchase,—especially since twenty-five years was the limit of the corporate life of the grantee.

12. Street railways — franchise — term —acceptance of new privileges.—Whatever rights and privileges the street railway companies had in the Chicago streets under the compromise ordinance of July 10, 1883, as amended August 6, 1883, after the expira-

13. Statutes—expression of subject in title.—The declaration in the title of the various acts constituting the charters of the Chicago street railway companies, that they concern "horse railways," does not, because of the provision of the Illinois Constitution of 1848, that no private or local law shall embrace more than one subject, which shall be expressed in the title, prevent the exercise of the power to amend, modify, or annul any contracts, stipulations, licenses, or undertakings, conferred by the amendatory act of February 6, 1865, upon the city and the companies, in such manner as to authorize the use of electricity or cable as the motive power.

14. Statutes—curative act—effect of repeal.—The effect of Ill. act of June 9, 1897, ratifying the grants to street railway companies by the proper public officers or authorities of permission to use cable, electric, or other motive power, cannot, as to contracts in existence when enacted, be destroyed by subsequent repeal.

15. Street railways—extension of route—official consent.—The abolition, during the life of the street railway corporation created by the Illinois act of February 14, 1859, of the office of supervisor in a township in Cook county, whose consent, under § 6 of that act, was essential to the extension of the street railway over and along the highways of the township, did not authorize such extension without official consent.

16. Street railways—extension of franchise—consent.—Consent of the board of trustees for the town of Lake View, in Cook county, which, under Ill. act of February 16, 1865, was to consist of the supervisors, assessors, and commissioners of highways, and their successors in office, and was empowered by the act of March 5, 1867, § 7, to control and supervise streets and highways, satisfies the provision of the act of February 14, 1859, § 6, requiring the consent of the supervisor to the extension of the Chicago street railway system into townships of Cook county.

17. Municipal corporations—power to grant street railway franchise.—The power to control streets and highways, conferred upon the board of trustees for the town of Lake View, in Cook county, by Ill. act of March 5, 1867, § 7, includes the right to authorize the use of such streets and highways for street railway purposes.

18. Street railways — franchise — term.—The consent to the extension of the Chicago street railway system into the town of Lake View, in Cook county, given by a supervisor acting under the authority of the act of February 14, 1859, § 6, or by the board of trustees created by the act of February 16, 1865, was not given in perpetuity, although no time was specifically mentioned, but must be deemed to cover only the same term as the city of Chicago had granted to the main system.

19. Street railway — franchise — term.—A grant of a street railway franchise does not, in Illinois, extend beyond the life of the municipality conferring it, where there was no attempt to make a grant of a definite term.

CROSS APPEALS from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Illinois to review a decree granting in part the relief sought by two ancillary bills filed by the receivers of the Chicago Union Traction Company to remove a cloud cast upon the title to street railway property by the attitude and claims of the city of Chicago with reference to the duration of the street railway franchises. Reversed and remanded for further proceedings in accordance with this opinion.

See same case below, 132 Fed. 848.

Statement by Mr. Justice Day:

These are appeals from the decree of the circuit court of the United States for the northern district of Illinois. The origin of the cases dates from April 22, 1903, when the Guaranty Trust Company of New York, a corporation and citizen of that state, filed three suits in the circuit court of the United States for the northern district of Illinois against the Chicago Union Traction Company, the North Chicago Street Railroad Company, and the West Chicago Street Railroad Company, corporations and citizens of the state of Illinois. On the day the declaration was filed the general issue was joined, the jury waived, and, upon trial, judgment was rendered against the respective defendants for $318,690.66, $565,052.66, and $270,440. Executions having been awarded and returned "no property found," bills were filed by the Guaranty Trust Company, and receivers appointed for the property of each and all of those companies. Under the order of the court of July 18, 1903, the receivers filed two ancillary bills, one against the city of Chicago, the Chicago West Division Railway Company, the Chicago Union Traction Company, and the West Chicago Street Railroad Company; the other against the city of Chicago, the Chicago Union Traction Company, the North Chicago Street Railroad Company, and the North Chicago City Railway Company. They were afterwards amended by leave of the court. These bills state, among other things (having reference now to the west side case), that, as receivers, and under the order of the court, the complainants were in possession of the system of street railroads; that the property included the rights, privileges, and franchises originally granted to the Chicago West Division Railway Company by the state of Illinois; that on October 20, 1887, the Chicago West Division Railway Company leased the property to the West Chicago Street Railroad Company [405] for the full term of nine *hundred and ninety-nine years; that on June 1, 1889, that company transferred and conveyed to the Chicago Union Traction Company all its property, franchises, and rights, which were taken possession of by that company and were possessed and enjoyed by it with the consent of the city council, until the appointment of complainants as receivers; that since the appointment they have been directed by the court to make expenditures of about $580,000 in procuring new equipment; for that purpose it was necessary to issue receiver's certificates to borrow money, which they alleged they were unable to do, because of the hostile acts of the city of Chicago, its mayor, its council committees and representatives, which amounted to an impairment of the contract rights and franchises secured to the complainants and granted by the acts of the general assembly of Illinois, passed February 14, 1859, and February 6, 1865. They received a notice from the superintendent of streets, dated July 16, 1903, addressed to them as receivers, and stating that all permits issued to the Chicago Union Traction Company to do work and make repairs upon the streets, alleys, or public places in the city of Chicago were to be revoked on July 30, 1903. The bill sets out a large number of ordinances of the city and acts of the state of Illinois, under which acts, it was alleged, privileges and franchises were granted on fifty-six of the streets of the city, for the period of ninety-nine years from February 14, 1859.

It was averred that the city denies any contract right with the complainants under and by virtue of the said laws and ordinances, and, for the purpose of coercing the railroad companies to surrender their franchises, received from the state, asserts and claims that the act of 1865 is unconstitutional and void; that, if valid, it only operates to the extent of such lines as were authorized and consented to before its passage; that, if valid, the railroads could only operate their lines by animal power; that by force of the ordinance of July 30, 1883, the right to operate lines constructed prior thereto was absolutely limited to July 30, 1903, and that thereafter the railroad com-[406] pany *would be a trespasser upon the streets of the city; that, by messages and official declarations of the mayor and council of the defendant city, it was given out that, unless the railroad company would surrender its franchises and rights to occupy the streets of the city, the city would oust the railroad company therefrom and pass an ordinance granting the right to operate street railways upon the streets now occupied by the railroad company, to other persons or corporations. That unless an injunction is granted, the city will, after July 30, 1903, proceed, by declaration of forfeiture or otherwise, to interfere with and prevent the occupation and enjoyment of the fifty-six railway routes described in the bill. That as to the street railroads where ordinances provided for possession until the city shall purchase the lines, the city has never made an offer to purchase, and seeks to force a surrender of the franchises and privileges, and to compel the railroad company to accept a twenty years' license, at an oppressive and ruinous annual rental. That if the claim and contentions of the city are sustained, the entire system of the railroad company will be destroyed and its charter rights illegally confiscated.

The prayer for relief is that the Chicago West Division Railway Company be decreed to be vested by the state of Illinois with the franchises and right to own, maintain, and operate fifty-six street railway routes, described in the bill, until 1960, and until such time thereafter as the city shall purchase the lines and pay for them in cash at their then appraised value, according to the terms of the ordinance contract; that it be decreed that the claim of the city of Chicago that the rights of the companies will expire on July 30, 1903, impairs the obligation of the charter subsisting between the state of Illinois and the said companies, and constitutes an unlawful taking of the rights and property of the company without compensation, and an unlawful interference with the property in the custody of the court; that the charter rights of the companies to maintain, operate, and enjoy the lines described in the bill until the *year 1960, and thereafter until the city pur-[407] chases the same, be established and quieted as against the hostile claims of the city, and that such claims be declared and decreed unconstitutional, contrary to law, and exist as clouds upon the title of the company, and for a perpetual injunction against the city from asserting the claims aforesaid, or interfering with the possession, occupation, and enjoyment of the railroad's property, except in the proper exercise of its police power, until the lawful determination of the charter rights.

The bill in the North Chicago case is substantially the same. It avers that the property vested in the receivers in the north division of the city is about 100 miles of street railroad and the franchises and privileges thereunto belonging; that on May 24, 1886, the North Chicago City Railway Company leased to the North Chicago Street Railroad Company for the term of nine hundred and ninety-nine years all its property, franchises, and rights, except the right to exist as a corporation. That on June 1, 1899, the North Chicago Street Railroad Company leased and conveyed the property, for the full life of the lessor corporation, to the Chicago Union Traction Company; that the traction company entered into possession of the property and continued to use the same until the appointment of the receivers named therein.

The city answered and set up, among other things, that the suits wherein the receivers were appointed were collusive and in pursuance of a scheme concocted by the West Chicago Street Railroad Company, the North Chicago Street Railroad Company, the Chicago Union Traction Company, and the Guaranty & Trust Company of New York for the purpose of conferring jurisdiction upon the circuit court of the United States on the ground of diverse citizenship; that the Guaranty Trust Company was not a bona fide owner of the judgment upon which the suits were brought; and that the evidences of indebtedness upon which that company brought suit and obtained judgment as a colorable basis for the allowance of creditor's bills and appointment of receivers were [408] not in fact owned by the Guaranty *Trust Company, but were owned by divers persons and corporations of the state of Illinois.

The city denies that the city council passed any ordinance or resolutions that constitute an impairment of the contract rights of the complainants, granted under the acts of the general assembly of the state of Illinois, February 14, 1859, and February 6, 1865, or the ordinances of the city, and denies that it has ever threatened interference with any lawful rights, franchises, or privileges held by the complainants. It admits that its superintendent of streets sent a written notice to the complainants, as alleged in the bill, but without authority from the defendant, and that on July 21, 1903, the same was rescinded and recalled.

The answer then sets up the claims of the city concerning the legislative acts and ordinances pleaded in the bill, admits the passage or attempted passage thereof, but denies that the same has resulted in investing the railroad companies with a franchise from the state, to maintain and operate the system of railroads for ninety-nine years, and avers that the rights under certain of the ordinances set up in the bill expire on July 30, 1903. Defendant denies that it unlawfully or oppressively injured the lawful rights of the company; admits that it has contended and now contends that the alleged act of 1865 is unconstitutional and void as construed by the company; that the said act, when properly construed, did not operate to extend the duration of time beyond that fixed in various ordinances respectively relating to said lines; that the said companies have no right to operate street railway lines by other than animal power; and that the time for operation of certain of the lines existing under ordinances passed prior to July 30, 1883, expired on July 30, 1903, by reason of the time limits prescribed in said ordinances, as extended by the ordinance of July 30, 1883, and by reason of the limitation in the power of the city by the city and village law of the state of Illinois, passed July 1, 1872. It avers that it has never claimed or asserted that the time for the operation of lines constructed *under or- [409] dinances passed prior to July 30, 1883, absolutely ceased and determined, but, on the contrary, has recognized and conceded the existence of the purchase clause contained in certain of said ordinances as affecting the time limitations therein, and has endeavored to procure proper fiscal legislation by the general assembly of the state, which would enable the city to avail itself of said ordinance provisions with reference to purchase, and has frequently proposed and desired negotiations with the companies to provide new ordinances for the purchase by the defendant of the tangible property of said companies. The answer denies the allegations of the bills as to unlawful threats and compulsions, but admits that it does intend to enforce its rights in its streets against the unlawful claims of the companies, and admits that, unless restrained by injunction, it will proceed by every proper and lawful method to enforce its rights in its streets as set up in the answer, and to procure necessary street railway facilities for the citizens of Chicago, and to prevent the companies from unlawful usurpation of rights in the streets or from continuing to occupy the same after the right so to do has ceased and determined. It admits that as early as 1883 a serious difference as to the nature and extent of the legal and contract rights of the street railway companies in certain of the streets of the city arose between the companies and defendant. It sets up the messages of the mayor and copies of the various resolutions of the council with regard to opening negotiations with the companies for the ascertainment of their rights and those of the city.

The case having been tried, the circuit court rendered a decree holding that the legislative acts of 1859, 1861, and 1865 constituted a grant to the companies to use the streets of the city to be designated by the council, but that the franchise to use the streets was a grant from the state; that the acts of 1859, 1861, as amended in 1865, extended the franchises of the companies for ninety-nine years, the extended life of the corporation; that the Constitution of Illinois of 1870 prohibited the further creation of corporations by special laws, [410] and decreed *that the general assembly should not grant the right to construct any street railways in the city without acquiring the consent of the local authorities then having control over the streets; that the cities and villages act of 1872 empowered cities organized under that act to permit, regulate, or prohibit the locating, laying, or constructing of tracks of horse railroads in any street, alley, or public place, but such permission was limited to a period not to exceed twenty years; that the acts of 1859, 1861, as amended in 1865, did not constitute a grant by the legislature of streets which were authorized to be used and occupied by the city after it adopted and elected to be governed by the city and village act, and that after date of May 3, 1875, as to such streets, the street railway companies' rights were regulated by the city ordinances affecting the same; that the act of 1859, under the 10th section of which the North Chicago City Railway Company was incorporated, amended by the act of February 21, 1865, extended the life of the corporation for ninety-nine years; and held that said amendment applied not only to the Chicago City Railway Company, but as well to the rights conferred by the act of 1859 on the North Chicago City Railway Company. The case is reported in 132 Fed. 848.

Pertinent parts of the ordinance of August 16, 1858, the acts of February 14, 1859, February 21, 1861, and February 6, 1865, are given in the margin.†

†Ordinance of August 16, 1858.

An Ordinance Authorizing the Construction and Operation of Certain Horse Railways in the Streets of the City of Chicago (Passed August 16, 1858).

Be it ordained by the common council of the city of Chicago:

Section 1. That there is hereby granted to Henry Fuller, Franklin Parmalee, and Liberty Bigelow, and such other persons as may hereafter become associated with them, and to their executors, administrators, and assigns, permission and authority and consent of the common council to lay a single or double track for a railway, with all necessary and convenient tracks for turn-outs, side tracks, and switches, in and along the course of certain streets of the city of Chicago hereinafter mentioned, and to operate railway cars and carriages thereon in the manner, and for the time, and upon the conditions hereinafter prescribed; provided, that said tracks shall not be laid within 12 feet of the sidewalks upon any of the streets.

Sec. 2. That said parties are hereby authorized to lay a single or double track for a railway in and along the course of the following streets in said city, and extending the same as follows: Commencing on State street, at the south side of Lake street; thence south to the present city limits. Also, commencing on State street, at the junction of Ringgold place; thence on Ringgold place to Cottage Grove avenue, thence on Cottage Grove avenue to the present limits of the city of Chicago.

Bank* v. McMahon, 3 L.R.A. 192, 38 Fed. 283; Union Bank v. Oxford, 90 Fed. 7.

In any event, the common counts in the declaration for money loaned and advanced to the defendant, and upon an account stated, etc., showed a controversy within the jurisdiction of the court, and it must be presumed that these counts were sustained by proof.

Sec. 10. The right to operate said railways shall extend to the full time of twenty-five years from the passage hereof, and at the expiration of said time the parties operating said railways shall be entitled to enjoy all of said privileges until the common council shall elect, by order for that purpose, to purchase said tracks of said railways, cars, carriages, station houses, station grounds, depot grounds, furniture, and implements of every kind and description, used in the construction or operation of said railways, or any of the appurtenances in and about the same, and pay for the same in the manner hereinafter mentioned.

the several acts amendatory thereof, and may exercise all the powers conferred upon railroad corporations by the 25th and 26th sections of "An Act to Provide for a General System of Railroad Incorporations," approved November 5th, 1849, ascertaining and making recompense for all damages sustained agreeably to the provisions of the act hereinbefore first mentioned.

Sec. 6. The said corporation is hereby authorized, with the assent of the supervisor of any township, to lay down and maintain the said railway or railways in, upon, over, and along any common highway in said township, but in such manner as not to obstruct the common travel of the public over the same. In all cases where vehicles shall meet the cars or carriages of said railway, either in the city or country, said vehicles shall give way to the cars or carriages on the railway.

Sec. 7. All of the rights and privileges granted, or intended so to be, to said Franklin Parmalee, Liberty Bigelow, Henry Fuller, and their associates in and by the ordinances of the common council and the amendments thereto, are hereby in all things affirmed, and shall pass to and become vested in the corporation hereby created.

Sec. 8. Nothing herein contained shall authorize the construction of more than a single track, with the necessary turn-outs, which shall only be at street crossings upon State street between Madison and Twelfth streets, except by the consent of the owners of two thirds of said State street between Madison and Twelfth streets aforesaid, nor shall anything herein contained be construed to authorize the company hereby incorporated to permit the cars of any other railroad company whatever, propelled by steam, to be run along or upon the railway of the company hereby incorporated.

Sec. 9. The said company hereby incorporated shall, within two years from the passage of this act, erect, maintain, and operate two railways, one from Lake street to the southern boundary of the city and one from the south branch of the Chicago river, on Madison street, to the western boundary of said city, and upon failure to do so this act and all the privileges and franchises hereby conferred shall cease and determine.

Sec. 10. All the grants, powers, privileges, immunities, and franchises conferred upon, and all duties and obligations required of, Franklin Parmalee, Liberty Bigelow, Henry Fuller, and David A. Gage by this act for the south and west divisions of the city of Chicago and the county of Cook, are hereby conferred upon and required of William B. Ogden, John B. Turner, Chas. V. Dyer, James H. Rees, and Valentine C. Turner by the name of "The North Chicago City Railway Company" for the north division of said city, and said county of Cook, as fully and effectually to all intents and purposes as if they had been by a separate act incorporated with all of said grants, powers, privileges, immunities, and franchises conferred upon them and all of said duties and obligations imposed upon them, and the said last-named corporation may take, hold, mortgage, and convey real estate.

Sec. 11. This act shall be deemed a public act, and noticed by all courts as such without pleading, and shall take effect from its passage.

If nothing had been done to bring about a speedy judicial settlement of the matters in controversy by a comprehensive decree binding on the city of Chicago, a multiplicity of suits would have been brought about which would speedily have transferred the practical operation of the "ninety-nine year act" from the street railways to the courts of Cook county.

That a court of equity has power to give relief against such an intolerable condition of affairs is clear. In holding that equity will give such relief, this court has shown no disposition to be restrained within the narrow limits of ancient precedents. Cases of this kind are sui generis, and constitute a striking instance of the adaptability of equitable remedies to new conditions.

A complainant is entitled to equitable relief when threatened with serious and irreparable injury, even when the means of accomplishing such injury is an ordinance or other municipal act which is void on its face, and does not require extrinsic evidence to establish its invalidity.

Act of February 6, 1865.

An Act Concerning Horse Railways in the City of Chicago.

Section 1. Be it enacted by the people of the state of Illinois, represented in the general assembly, That the 1st section of an act of said general assembly, entitled "An Act to Promote the Construction of Horse Railways in the City of Chicago," approved February 14th, 1859 and the 1st section of a certain other act of said general assembly, entitled "An Act to Authorize the Extension of Horse Railways in the City of Chicago," approved February 21, 1861, be, and the same are hereby, so amended as that all the words in said respective sections after the word "company" therein, respectively, shall be and read as follows, viz.: for ninety-nine years, with all the powers and authority hereinafter expressed, or pertaining to corporations for the purposes hereafter mentioned.

Sec. 2. That the 2d section of the act first above referred to by its title, and which section is included in and made a part of the act secondly above referred to by the title thereof, be and the same is hereby, as to both of said acts, so amended as to read as follows, viz.: The said corporation is hereby authorized

The removal of a cloud from the title was within the ancillary jurisdiction of the court.

It was no objection that complainants' title is an estate for years, and not in fee.

Goldsmith v. Gilliland, 10 Sawy. 606, 22 Fed. 865; McKee v. Howe, 17 Colo. 538, 31 Pac. 115; Pennie v. Hildreth, 81 Cal. 127, 22 Pac. 398; Newport v. Taylor, 16 B. Mon. 699.

The city's claim of a right to purchase was a cloud on title.

It is no objection to complainants' right to maintain the suit that they sue in a representative capacity.

Davis v. Gray, supra; Laverty v. Sexton, 41 Iowa, 435; Newport v. Taylor, supra.

While it has been repeatedly held in Illinois that a suit to quiet title cannot be maintained by an administrator, the reason given is that the administrator has no estate or interest in the land, but only a power of sale.

Ryan v. Duncan, 88 Ill. 144.

It is no objection to complainants' right to maintain a suit to quiet title that there is no statute of Illinois specifically authorizing it. Courts of equity have inherent jurisdiction to grant such relief in a proper case.

Whitney v. Stevens, 97 Ill. 482; Lamb v. Farrell, 21 Fed. 5; Allen v. Halliday, 25 Fed. 688; Sharon v. Tucker, 144 U. S. 533, 36 L. ed. 532, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 720; Holland v. Challen, 110 U. S. 15, 28 L. ed. 52, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 495.

It is no objection to complainants' right to maintain the suit that the defendant is a municipal corporation, claiming certain powers under a statute of the state.

Watson v. Elizabeth, 35 N. J. Eq. 345; Newport v. Taylor and Davis v. Gray, supra.

The complainants were under no obligation to set out specifically in their bills the nature of the adverse claims made by the city. It was sufficient to allege generally that such adverse claims existed.

But said corporations shall not, or any or either of them, be liable for the loss of any property or thing carried on said railways, kept in and under the care of its owner, his servant or agent; provided that any contract hereafter made by the common council of the city of Chicago with either of the corporations referred to in this act, for a higher rate of fare than 5 cents, shall be subject to modification or repeal at any regular meeting of said common council, by a majority vote of all the aldermen elected, or by the general assembly of the state of Illinois.

Sec. 3. [As to the Chicago & Evanston Railroad.]

Sec. 4. Each of said corporations shall be authorized to purchase, hold, and convey, real or personal estate, necessary for the use of such corporation, and to manufacture materials, machinery, and rolling stock for the use of such corporation.

Sec. 5. This act shall be deemed a public act, and noticed by all courts as such, without pleading, and shall take effect from its passage.

N. E. 647; Holbrook v. Winsor, 23 Mich. 394.

When issues have been joined and fully tried between the proper parties, the courts will not draw fine distinctions to defeat a remedy which it is in the public interest to have administered.

The right to a complete decree effectually quieting the title and settling the controversy in all its aspects was a substantial right of the parties, which it would have been error to disregard.

Quint v. McMullen, 103 Cal. 381, 37 Pac. 381.

In a country constituted as this is, where sovereign powers are exercised by representative legislative bodies, the courts recognize but one mode of "favoring the state," and that is by sustaining and making effective the legislative purpose.

Unless the decisions of the court are to follow all the vicissitudes of municipal politics, it will be necessary to find some better standard of public interest than the contentions of those who may, from time to time, be acting as officers of municipalities.

The city of Chicago has no mandate from the legislature to represent the public interest. It is only a subordinate agency of the state, with limited powers, and its charter is subject to the same rules of interpretation that apply to the railway companies' charters.

The power to agree upon "terms and conditions" did not impose upon the common council the duty and power of fixing the "term" of the franchise.

The title of the act of February 6, 1865, was sufficiently specific.

People ex rel. Deneen v. People's Gaslight & Coke Co. supra.

The constitutionality of the act has been expressly upheld in McCartney v. Chicago & E. R. Co. 112 Ill. 611.

The act was within the power of the general assembly.

In giving effect to the act of 1865, the only principles of interpretation which we suggest are those applicable to any statute in which there is a plain declaration of the legislative purpose about a matter clearly within the competency of the legislature to decide.

Springfield v. Edwards, 84 Ill. 626; Bate Refrigerating Co. v. Sulzberger, 157 U. S. 1, 39 L. ed. 601, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 508; Frye v. *Chicago, B. & Q. R. Effect must be given, if possible, to all the words of the statute.

A section has or can have no life except as a part of the whole statute. It has no force of meaning or significance apart from the enacting clause.

Wheeler v. Chubbuck, 16 Ill. 361; Burritt v. State Contract Comrs. 120 Ill. 322, 11 N. E. 180; The Seat of Government Case, 1 Wash. Terr. 115; State v. Patterson, 98 N. C. 660, 4 S. E. 350.

The words "hereof," "herein," or "hereby," in an original statute, refer to the act itself; in an amendatory statute they refer to the original act as amended.

Lane v. Kolb, 92 Ala. 636, 9 So. 873; Holbrook v. Nichol, 36 Ill. 161; McKibben v. Lester, 9 Ohio St. 628; Ely v. Holton, 15 N. Y. 595.

The acts amended by the statute of 1865 were the original charters of the North Chicago City Railway Company and the Chicago West Division Railway Company, and the phrase "during the life hereof," as found in the amended charter of each of these companies, means "during the continuance or existence of this statute as an amendatory act."

Benham v. Minor, 38 Conn. 252.

The suggested difficulty as to the words "as made or amended" is devoid of substance. The word "as" may express either similarity, identity, or simultaneity. It may relate to form, manner, or time. Its use in the latter significance is well established and frequently recognized.

Seibert's Appeal, 13 Pa. 500.

The New Jersey act of 1790 was the same in spirit and in purpose as the Illinois act of 1865, which in form it closely resembles, except that it committed the powers of designation and regulation to a state commission instead of to the local authorities, and it expressly empowered the commission to fix the term of the contract. Parties who intended to make an enduring contract could pursue no wiser course than to adopt the language of that statute, then recently construed by this court in a decision which vigorously upheld the obligation of good faith on the part of states as well as of individuals, even in the face of changing conditions.

See Bridge Proprietors v. Hoboken Land & Improv. Co. 1 Wall. 116, 17 L. ed. 571.

In construing acts of the general assembly the rule is always applicable that the legislature is presumed to legislate for the future, not for the past. For this reason courts are reluctant to give statutes a retrospective operation.

White v. United States, 191 U. S. 545, 552, 48 L. ed. 295, 298, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 171; Cleary v. Hoobler, 207 Ill. 97, 69 N. E. 967; Re Day, 181 Ill. 73, 50 L.R.A. 519, 54 N. Ct. Rep. 653.

So firmly established is this rule of construction that the courts in many cases have construed statutes prospectively, even where the legislature had apparently confined its language, with intention, to the past or present tense.

Amsbry v. Hinds, 48 N. Y. 57; Harvey v. Tyler, 2 Wall. 328, 17 L. ed. 871; Indianapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Blackman, 63 Ill. 117; People ex rel. Columbia Constr. Co. v. Hinrichsen, 161 Ill. 223, 43 N. E. 973; Harris v. White, 81 N. Y. 532.

It is settled by judicial construction in Illinois that the act in question is prospective in its general scope and effect.

Chicago City R. Co. v. People, 73 Ill. 541; McCartney v. Chicago & E. R. Co. 112 Ill. 611.

The prospective embodiment, in a statute, of a contract not yet in existence, and the details of which are unknown to the legislature, is not without precedent.

Bridge Proprietors v. Hoboken Land & Improv. Co. supra; Re New York Elev. R. Co. 70 N. Y. 327.

Words in a statute which are not technical are to be taken in their common or popular acceptation, unless some special reason exists for giving them a strict interpretation.

The motive power to be used by a street railway is peculiarly a subject for regulation from time to time by the police power of the state. The courts will not attribute to the legislature an intention to abridge or limit the police power by a corporate charter, even assuming that such a limitation is possible.

It is true that this statute was repealed by § 5 of the act of March 7, 1899. But such repeal did not affect rights vested or contracts made or ratified by the act during the time that it was in force.

The only fair construction of the act of 1865 is that the general assembly agreed to suspend, for the period specified in that act, its power of providing for a termination of the corporate powers and rights of these companies, either by city purchase or in any other manner.

Potter v. Collis, 19 App. Div. 392, 46 N. Y. Supp. 471, 156 N. Y. 16, 50 N. E. 413.

The general provisions of the ordinance of 1858, adopted into and made a part of the act of 1859, became applicable to the entire system of railways authorized by that act, when built or extended anywhere within the county of Cook.

Chicago Union Traction Co. v. Chicago, 199 Ill. 484, 59 L.R.A. 631, 65 N. E. 451.

It is a familiar and universal principle of construction of grants that they carry with them, by necessary implication, whatever is reasonably necessary to the full enjoyment of the things granted.

Among the many instances of the appliction of this rule to the creation or extension of corporate life are:

St. Clair County Turnp. Co. v. People, 82 Ill. 177, 96 U. S. 63, 24 L. ed. 651; Foster v. Fitch, 36 Conn. 236; Liverpool & L. Life & F. Ins. Co. v. Massachusetts (Liverpool & L. Life & F. Co. 3 Grant, Cas. 200; Stebbins v. Jennings, 10 Pick. 172; Com. v. Frankfort, 13 Bush, 185.

The power of eminent domain does not extend to the taking of a fragment of a railway.

Central City Horse R. Co. v. Ft. Clark Horse R. Co. 81 Ill. 523.

The charter did not contemplate or permit a severance of ownership as between the main line of any railway and the extensions and feeders thereof, so as to require passengers living along the line of such extensions or feeders either to walk for a considerable distance or to pay a double fare. Any contract, whether made with the city or any other corporation, tending to produce that result, would be contrary to the purpose and obligation of the charter.

Chicago Union Traction Co. v. Chicago, 199 Ill. 604, 65 N. E. 470; Beekman v. Third Ave. R. Co. 153 N. Y. 144, 47 N. E. 277.

The right to remain in possession and operate a public improvement built with private funds until purchased by the state or municipality is frequently inserted in charters and contracts. Such a provision is analogous to the equity of a lessee to receive compensation for his improvements before his right of possession ceases. The lessor is thereby prohibited from re-entry, except on the condition of repayment, and the lessee has no right to remove the permanent structures. The obligation to pay covers all the improvement, not portions. The construction has been uniform that, under such a provision, the whole charter improvement must be paid for as it exists when the right of purchase comes to be exercised.

Public policy will not permit any severance of a single franchise where a unit service is required. An enforced sale of a part will be prevented. A voluntary sale of a portion is void.

Nearly every ordinance authorizing extensions and feeders requires in express terms a connected service for one fare over the system. This necessarily concluded both the city and the company that the railway is a unit, and not a mere aggregate of independent and disassociated lines.

Beekman v. Third Ave. R. Co. supra; Muller v. Dows, 94 U. S. 449, 24 L. ed. 209.

The provisions of §§ 10 and 11 in the ordinance of 1858, and their frequent adoption in later ordinances, did not contemplate or authorize separate elections to purchase isolated parts of the improvement, or multiplied and conflicting valuations and apportionments by several independent sets of appraisers. They, in law, considered, separately or together, provide only for a single election, to take over a single property, on a single appraisal by one board of appraisers. That is the only lawful purchase which could be made, and the words must be so construed as to effect a lawful purchase.

A part of a railroad may be of little value when its ownership is severed from the ownership of another part, and the franchise is not capable of division.

As against a statute framed in covert and obscure language, and claimed to ratify and confirm by wholesale the acts of a municipality in its dealing with the claimants, the court will adopt the strictest possible construction in order to prevent the wresting of valuable rights from the public by such insidious and surreptitious legislation.

Boisé City Artesian Hot & Cold Water Co. v. Boisé City, 59 C. C. A. 236, 123 Fed. 232.

Mr. Justice Day delivered the opinion of the court:

The jurisdiction of the circuit court to render the original judgments against the companies and to maintain the ancillary bill is challenged at the outset. These objections require notice before considering the controversy upon its merits. It is insisted that the circuit court had no jurisdiction to render the judgments at law because of the provisions of the act of August 13, 1888 (25 Stat. at L. 433, 434, chap. 866, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 508), providing that no circuit court shall have cognizance of any suit to recover the contents of any promissory note in favor of any assignee or subsequent holder if such instrument be payable to bearer, unless such suit might have been prosecuted in such court to recover, if an assignment or transfer had not been made. As the notes were made payable to the order of "Markham B. Orde, Treas.," and there is no allegation that Orde was not a citizen of the state of Illinois, of which state the defendant companies were corporations and citizens, it is insisted that the jurisdiction must fail, under the provisions of the statute just referred to. Assuming, without [448] deciding, that this question *could be raised by way of defense to the ancillary bill, we think the objection must fail, for, under the allegations of the declaration, the money was furnished directly to the defendants by the Guaranty Trust Company, and that company was the first taker of the notes. In Falk v. Moebs, 127 U. S. 597, 32 L. ed. 266, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1319, it was held that notes made in this form, payable to the treasurer, indorsed before delivery by him, are the notes of the company. And when it appears that the indorser is not in fact an assignee of the paper, suit may be brought in a Federal court by a holder having the requisite diverse citizenship, notwithstanding the indorser might have been a citizen of the same state with the defendant. Holmes v. Goldsmith, 147 U. S. 150, 37 L. ed. 118, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 288.

It is further argued that the entire proceedings were fraudulent and collusive; that no money was in fact loaned, and that they were the result of a conspiracy between corporations of Illinois, to obtain the jurisdiction of the Federal court, and its decision on the controverted rights of the parties under the statutes of the state. We have examined the supplemental records submitted since the argument in this court, on this branch of the case, and think the charges of bad faith and conspiracy are not sustained. We have no doubt that the money was loaned by the Guaranty Trust Company to these corporations, and that the original judgments were bona fide. As to the conspiracy to get the case into the Federal court, with a view to the decision of the rights of the parties therein, we are not aware of any principle which prevents parties having the requisite citizenship and a justiciable demand from seeking the Federal courts for redress, if such be their choice of a forum in which to have contested rights litigated. Having a proper cause of action and the requisite diversity of citizenship confers jurisdiction upon the Federal courts, and in such cases the motive of the creditor in seeking Federal jurisdiction is immaterial. South Dakota v. North Carolina, 192 U. S. 286, 310, 48 L. ed. 448, 457, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 269; Dickerman v. Northern Trust Co. 176 U. S. 181, 190, 44 L. ed. 423, 430, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 311; Lehigh Min. & Mfg. Co. v. Kelly, 160 U. S. 327,[449]

It is true that the judgments were taken and the receivers appointed on the same day, and it is quite likely that the receiverships were in view when the judgments were taken, and that preparations had been made in that direction, but we perceive in this no legal objection to the jurisdiction of the court. It is further insisted by the counsel for the city that the ancillary bills cannot be sustained upon their merits. But we think a case was made out by the allegations of the bills, especially when considered with reference to the admissions of the answer, which showed that the extent and character of the property rights of the corporations whose rights and franchises were the subjects of the receivership were in direct and serious controversy between the company and the receiver on the one hand and the city on the other. While it may be that there would have been no interference on the part of the city with the property while it was in the hands of the court's receivers, still the record shows that the city strenuously contested the asserted rights of the corporations to the franchise to use the streets of the city for ninety-nine years, the term claimed to have been granted to them by the act of February, 1865. It was the claim of the city that as to many of the ordinances granting rights in a number of the streets, the right to the use and occupancy of them would expire July 30, 1903. The city had asserted in a number of ways its purpose to treat the rights of the companies and whatever franchises they had as terminated at that date. It declares its purpose to resume possession of the streets and resort to all legal means to protect its rights against what were deemed the unfounded claims of the companies as to the extended franchises. Without going into further detail upon this branch of the case, we think that the attitude and claims of the city cast a cloud upon the title to this property which was in the hands of the [450] receivers to be administered *under the orders of the court, and that in such case the receivers may, with the authority of the court, proceed by ancillary bill to protect the jurisdiction and right to administer the property, and to determine the validity of the claims of the parties which cast a cloud upon the franchises and rights claimed by the companies and the receivers, and that in such case it was proper to grant an injunction until the rights of the parties could be determined. Detroit v. Detroit Citizens' Street R. Co. 184 U. S. 368, 46 L. ed. 592, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 410; Re Tyler, 149 U. S. 164, 37 L. ed. 689, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 785; Rouse v. Letcher, 156 U. S. 47, 39 L. ed. 341, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 266; White v. Ewing, 159 U. S. 36, 40 L. ed. 67, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1018. We think, then, that the court had jurisdiction of the case made in the ancillary bills.

A further preliminary question is made in the contention that the leases under which the various transfers were made, and which are supposed to have vested title in the Chicago Union Traction Company, are void for want of corporate power in the companies to make or receive the same. We do not think the city of Chicago is in a position to raise that question. The corporations have undertaken to transfer the rights of the lessor companies, and the lessees have gone into possession thereof, and the same are now in possession of the receivers under authority of the court. All of the companies are parties to the suit, and the rights and franchises of all are, by order of the court, vested in the receivers. They hold the title to all these rights to be sold at judicial sale, or otherwise dealt with, as the court may direct. In this view we cannot see that it is material to inquire into the validity of the intermediate transfers between the companies. No contract is undertaken to be enforced with the city of Chicago which depends upon the validity of these transfers. The city has no power to invalidate them, and the state has not attempted to inquire into their validity by a proceeding in quo warranto. In such case, we think, the principle laid down in Fritts v. Palmer, 132 U. S. 282, 293, 33 L. ed. 317, 321, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 93, 96, is controlling: "The question whether a corporation having capacity to purchase and hold real estate for certain defined purposes or in certain quantities *has taken title to real estate for purposes [451] not authorized by law, or in excess of the quantity permitted by its charter, concerns only the state within whose limits the property is situated. It cannot be raised collaterally by private persons unless there is something in the statute, expressly or by necessary implication, authorizing them to do so."

Passing now to the merits of the case, we will first notice the objection that the acts of 1859, 1861, and 1865 are unconstitutional. The Illinois Constitution of 1848 contained the provision that no private or local law shall embrace more than one subject, and that shall be expressed in the title. The acts are attacked upon the ground that they are violations of this requirement. But we do not think that these objections are tenable. The title of the act of February 14, 1859, is "An Act to Promote the Construction of Horse Railways in the City of Chicago;" the title of the act of February 21, 1861, is "An Act to Authorize the Extension of Horse Railways in the City of Chicago;" the title of the act of February 6, 1865, is "An Act Concerning Horse Railways in the City of Chicago." In People ex rel. Deneen v. People's Gaslight & Coke Co. 205 Ill. 482, 98 Am. St. Rep. 244, 68 N. E. 950, the Illinois cases were reviewed and the conclusion reached that the purpose of the constitutional provision is accomplished if the title is comprehensive enough as reasonably to include within the general subject or the subordinate branches thereof, the several objects which the statute seeks to effect. And it was held that generality of the title is no objection to a law so long as it is not made to cover legislation incongruous in itself, and which by no fair intendment can be included as having necessary or proper connection. In the case of Montclair Twp. v. Ramsdell, 107 U. S. 147, 27 L. ed. 431, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 391, a statute of New Jersey was before this court which was claimed to be unconstitutional because it embraced more than one subject, not expressed in its title. The provision of the New Jersey Constitution was "To avoid improper influences which may result from intermixing, in one and the same act, such things as have no proper relation to each other, every law shall embrace but one [452] object, *and that shall be expressed in the title." [Art. 4, § 7.] The Montclair Twp. Case held: 1. That this provision does not require the title of an act to set forth a detailed statement or an index or abstract of its contents; nor does it prevent uniting in the same act numerous provisions having one general object, fairly indicated by its title. 2. That the powers, however varied and extended, which a township may exercise, constitute but one object, which is fairly expressed in a title showing nothing more than the legislative purpose to establish such township. In the late case of Detroit v. Detroit Citizens' Street R. Co. 184 U. S. 368, 46 L. ed. 592, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 410, the court had occasion to deal with a similar provision in the Constitution of Michigan. In it the language of Judge Cooley in People ex rel. Secretary of State v. State Ins. Co. 19 Mich. 392, was quoted with approval: "We must give the constitutional provision a reasonable construction and effect. The Constitution requires no law to embrace more than one object, which shall be expressed in its title. Now, the object may be very comprehensive and still be without objection, and the one before us is of that character. But it is by no means essential that every end and means necessary or convenient for the accomplishment of the general object should be either referred to or necessarily indicated by the title. All that can reasonably be required is that the title shall not be made to cover legislation incongruous in itself, and which by no fair intendment can be considered as having a necessary or proper connection." Applying this principle, we do not think that any of the subjects treated were so far foreign to the title of the several acts as to be open to this constitutional objection. See also upon this subject: Independent School District v. Hall, 113 U. S. 141, 28 L. ed. 956, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 371; Jonesboro v. Cairo & St. L. R. Co. 110 U. S. 192, 198, 28 L. ed. 116, 118, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 67; Otoe County v. Baldwin, 111 U. S. 1, 28 L. ed. 331, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 265; Mahomet v. Quackenbush, 117 U. S. 508, 29 L. ed. 982, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 858; Carter County v. Sinton, 120 U. S. 517, 30 L. ed. 701, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 650.

Without taking time to analyze the acts in this connection we pass to what we deem more important features of the case.

The principal controversy in this case turns upon the construction *of the act of [453] 1865, amending the act of 1859. On the part of the companies it is insisted that this act means to give an irrevocable grant from the state of the right to use the streets of the city of Chicago for street railway purposes for a term of ninety-nine years from the passage of the law; that the only right conferred upon the city is one of designation of the streets to be occupied and the regulation by agreement with the companies of what are termed the "administrative" features of the occupancy. It is insisted that this broad right is derived from the public act of the state legislature, which, upon its acceptance, has become an inviolable contract between the state and the companies. Upon the part of the city it is contended that there has been no grant to the railways to occupy the streets of the city except with the authorization of the city council and upon such terms and conditions, including the term of occupancy, as that body may see fit to fix by contract with the companies; that the only legitimate effect of the act of 1865, other than the extension of the corporate life of the companies, has been to continue the control of the city over the streets, and to reaffirm the contracts theretofore made between the city and the companies. The theory that the franchise to use the streets was derived solely from the state, subject only to the right of the city to designate the streets to be occupied, and to regulate the "administrative" features of the use, was adopted by the learned circuit court in construing the act in controversy. It is therefore important to consider the nature of the franchises, licenses, rights, and privileges dealt with in the act of 1865, to ascertain, as near as may be, in what sense its terms were used, and with what meaning they are incorporated into the act. In order to construe this act and determine, if possible, its true meaning and the extent of the powers and rights intended to be granted or confirmed, reference may appropriately be had to prior legislation upon the subject, for the act of 1865 is amendatory, and can only be understood if a correct apprehension is first had of the powers previously granted, and the extent and nature of the rights and *privileges [454] conferred and the sources from which they severally came. Whether the city charter, granted while the Constitution of 1848 was in force, gave the city the right to grant to railway companies the privilege of using the streets for street railway purposes, is a question much discussed in the briefs and the arguments at bar. The city, by the charter of 1851, and the amendment of 1863, had general power to control the use and occupation of the streets of the city and to regulate the use of horse railways therein and the laying of tracks thereon. It is insisted for the city that, independent of the acts under consideration in this case, the general powers conferred in the city charter, as construed by the supreme court of Illinois, were broad enough to empower it to grant the use of the streets for street railway purposes. See Quincy v. Bull, 106 Ill. 337, 349, and cases cited in the opinion. On the part of the companies it is contended that this right could only come from the state, and that the effect of the act in question was to confer the right upon the companies as a charter right granted by the sovereign power.

It is said to have been the settled understanding of all concerned, and in accordance with the then-existing policy of the state, that the act of 1859 was a franchise directly granted by the state, giving the full right to use the streets of the city for the term of the corporate life of the companies, subject only to the designating power of the city as to streets to be used. In this connection it may be observed that the supreme court of Illinois in Chicago Union Traction Co. v. Chicago, 199 Ill. 484, 525, 59 L. R. A. 631, 645, 65 N. E. 451, 462, distinctly stated that the act of 1859 recognized the power of the common council to pass the ordinance of August 16, 1858. "There," it is said in the opinion, "was no other action of the common council, taken before the passage of the act of February 14, 1859, except the ordinance of August 16, 1858. By the use of the words, 'with such rights and privileges as the said common council has prescribed,' the legislature could not have referred to any other action of the common council than the passage of [455] the ordinance *of August 16, 1858. It thereby recognized the power of the common council to pass that ordinance, and the appellant here introduces it and relies upon it. The legislature, by thereby affirming and recognizing the passage of the ordinance of August 16, 1858, also recognized the power of the common council to pass that ordinance under clause 9 of § 4 of chapter 4, of the charter of 1851." In the act of 1859 the legislature did not assume to fix independently the term for the use of the streets, but affirmed that which the common council had authorized the corporators to do, and gave authority to confer future rights by agreement with the corporations. In the first grants after the passage of the act of February 14, 1859, those of May 23, 1859, to the Chicago City Railway Company and the North Chicago City Railway Company, as we shall have occasion to show later, so far from acting upon the theory that the state had granted to the corporations the full right to use the streets for the corporate life of the companies, and needed no permission from the city council other than such as designated the streets and regulated administrative features, the council made and the companies accepted the ordinances which, on the north side, were for the term of twenty-five years and no longer, and on the south and west sides for the term named in the act of 1859, which had affirmed the grant from the council in the ordinance of 1858. The south and west side ordinance, as its recitals show, was not only passed in pursuance of the act of February 14, 1859, but also by virtue of the power and authority otherwise vested in the common council by its charter. Union Traction Co. v. Chicago, supra. Thereafter and frequently until the passage of the act of 1865, the council made and the companies accepted specific ordinances fixing the time of occupancy, as had been done in the original ordinances of May 23, 1859. And neither before nor after the passage of the act of 1865 was the ninety-nine year term recognized or acted upon in ordinances granting the use of the streets.

Under the ordinance of 1858 the council undertook to authorize *the persons named [456] to lay and operate a horse railway in certain streets of the city. This right, by the terms of the ordinance, was granted for the period of twenty-five years, and until the common council, in the manner designated, should elect to purchase and pay for the property of the railway companies. If this ordinance had been without legislative authority previous to the act of February 14, 1859, that act constituted the persons named in the ordinance of 1858, with one other, and their successors, a body politic and corporate under the name of the Chicago City Railway Company, for the term of twenty-five years, with all the powers incident to such corporations. The corporation was authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a single or double track railway in the city of Chicago, within the present or future limits of the south or west divisions of the city. But the grant did not stop there. It was immediately qualified and limited by the authority given to the common council of the city, for it provided that this right to maintain and operate street railways was upon streets, etc., "as the common council of said city have authorized said corporators, or any of them, or shall authorize said corporation so to do in such manner and upon such terms and condition, and with such rights and privileges, as the common council has or may, by contract with said parties, or any or either of them, prescribe." The corporation was given the right of eminent domain. Then, as to the action of the city, already taken under the ordinance of 1858, by § 7, all of the rights and privileges granted or intended so to be to the incorporators and their associates by the ordinances and amendments thereto passed by the council were approved and vested in the corporation. By § 10 of the act the North Chicago City Railway Company was incorporated. Is this act consistent with the theory that the full franchise of occupying and using the streets, without regard to authority from the city, except in designating streets, was vested by the state in the companies incorporated? This act conferred upon the railway companies, it is true, the [457] right to use and occupy *the streets of the city, but this right was upon the terms prescribed in the law. Conceding the plenary power of the legislature over the subject at that time, and that franchises, broadly speaking, are rights and privileges conferred by the state, and are derived from a grant of the sovereign power, nevertheless the state, while exercising its authority, might give to the city such measure of right and control in the manner as it saw fit. Dill. Mun. Corp. 3d ed. § 705; Richmond, F. & P. R. Co. v. Richmond, 96 U. S. 521, 24 L. ed. 734. The city is the corporate body directly interested in the use and control of the streets. By the charter of 1851 exclusive control over the streets was given to the council. That it was the intention of the legislature to give effect to the right of municipal control in the act under consideration is shown in its confirmation of terms already fixed by contract between the city and the companies. As to the future, companies were to have no right to the use and occupancy of the streets until they should obtain from the city council authority to that end, under contracts to be agreed upon as to terms and conditions. A more comprehensive plan of securing the city in the control of the use of the streets for railway purposes could hardly be devised. The company must be "authorized" by the city council before it can lay tracts or operate railways in the streets. This is more than to designate that for which authority has already been given. To authorize is to "clothe with authority" (Webster's dict.); "to give legal power to" (Century dict.). It is an additional grant of right and power which the legislature requires the corporation to obtain as a condition precedent to its use and occupation of the streets. This power of the city, in the absence of language in the statute excluding the authority and reserving its exercise to the state, necessarily includes the right to fix the time for which the streets may be used. This doctrine was, we think, correctly stated by Judge Lurton, in delivering the opinion of the court of appeals in Louisville Trust Co. v. Cincinnati, 22 C. C. A. 334, 346, 47 U. S. App. 36, 59, 76 Fed. 296, 308. "The right of the local authority to impose terms and conditions is *clearly conferred, and no such corporation [458] can impose itself upon the public streets or highways unless it enter into an agreement touching the occupancy of such streets, or resorts to the right of condemnation, in default of an agreement. This right to impose terms and conditions most obviously implies the right to agree upon the duration of such occupancy. The right to exclude altogether, unless resort be had to condemnation, involves the right to limit the period of the grant." Coverdale v. Edwards, 155 Ind. 374, 381, 58 N. E. 495; Elliott, Railroads, § 1081.

The act under consideration nowhere assumes to fix the duration of the grant, nor excludes the conclusion that it is embraced in the terms and conditions which are to be fixed by contract with the city. If the franchise to use the streets, without regard to municipal action, was fully conferred by the legislative act under consideration, then the company had only to take possession of the streets, subject to regulations as to running of cars, etc., by the city council. On the contrary, under the terms of this act, the city, by withholding its consent, could prevent the use of the streets by the corporations. No way is pointed out by which this consent could be compelled against the will of the council. That body might, for reasons sufficient to itself, under the terms of this act, by withholding assent, determine that it was undesirable to have the corporations in control of the use of the streets.

While the decisions of the supreme court of the state are not binding upon us in determining whether a contract was made which is entitled to protection under the Federal Constitution, we may notice the case of Chicago City R. Co. v. People, 73 Ill. 541. That was a proceeding in quo warranto against the Chicago City Railway Company, asking to declare a forfeiture of its franchise to operate upon a portion of Indiana avenue. The grounds relied upon were that the railway company had not obtained the consent of two thirds of the owners of the property fronting on the avenue within fif-[459] teen months from the passage of the *ordinance of August 22, 1864, the time limited for construction in the ordinance of that date. The respondent, the Chicago City Railway Company, relied upon an ordinance passed November 13, 1871, amendatory of the ordinance of August 22, 1864, extending the time to complete its railway for a period of two years from the date of the last-named ordinance. The court found that two thirds of the property owners had consented, as provided in the ordinance of August 22, 1864, but found that the company had neglected to construct its road to the city limits within fifteen months from the passage of the ordinance, as therein provided. The question turned upon the validity of the extending ordinance of November 13, 1871, passed after the Constitution of 1870 went into effect. The majority of the court—Chief Justice Walker and Justices Breese and Sheldon dissenting—held that the common council had authority, under the act of 1865, to extend the time for the building of the roads on Indiana avenue, as the time limitation was a provision in favor of the city, which it might waive, as the charter of the company was silent upon the time within which the railway might be constructed, and in this connection held that the right granted by the city to construct the railway was a license as distinguished from a franchise derivable from the state, and, therefore, not within the constitutional prohibition against the passage of local or special laws granting to any corporation, association, or individual the right to lay down railroad tracks, or amending existing charters for that purpose, or granting to any corporation, association, or individual any special or exclusive privilege, immunity, or franchise whatever. The minority of the court were of opinion that the Constitution of 1870 made the extending ordinance invalid. In neither the majority nor the dissenting opinions is there any intimation that the railway company could occupy or use a street of the city of Chicago without the permission of the city. In discussing how far the charter authorized the company to act without the consent of the city, Mr. Justice Sheldon, in the course of an able dissenting opinion, concurred in by the Chief [460] *Justice and Mr. Justice Breese, is careful to point out that the right to occupy the streets is not complete in the grant of the charter from the state, and is only capable of being exercised when supplemented by the authorization of the city. And see People's Pass. R. Co. v. Memphis City R. Co. 10 Wall. 38, 55, 19 L. ed. 844, 850. In that case this court held that a charter authorizing a street railroad company to operate street railroads in all the streets of the city "with the consent of the city" was unavailing until the consent of the city was first had, which consent was a condition precedent to the use of the streets.

What, then, was conferred in the franchise granted by the state? It was the right to be a corporation for the period named, and to acquire from the city the right to use the streets upon contract terms and conditions to be agreed upon. The franchise conferred by the state is of no practical value until supplemented by the consent and authority of the council of the city. After the passage of the act of 1859 the common council of the city, on May 23, 1859, passed an ordinance authorizing the extension and operation of certain horse railways in the streets of the south and west divisions of the city, and granting the use thereof to the Chicago City Railway Company. The city purported to act under authority of the act of 1859, and by virtue of the powers and authority otherwise vested in the common council by law. By this ordinance the term of use and occupation was fixed at "during all the term in the said act of the 14th of February, A. D. 1859, specified and prescribed." On the same day the council passed an ordinance granting rights in certain streets to the North Chicago City Railway Company. This ordinance contained this language: "The rights and privileges granted to the said company by this ordinance, or intended to be, shall continue and be in force for the benefit of said company for the full term of twenty-five years from the passage of this ordinance, and no longer." On February 21, 1861, the legislature passed an act incorporating the Chicago West Division Railway Company for the term of twenty-five years, the corporation to possess *the powers [461] enumerated in the 2d, 3d, 5th, and 6th sections of the act of February 14, 1859. By § 4 of the act the corporation was authorized to acquire from the Chicago City Railway Company the powers, franchises, privileges, and immunities conferred upon that company, and the consent of the directors of said company was made a condition precedent to the exercise of the powers conferred as to any streets of the south and west divisions of the city of Chicago.

Before the passage of the act of 1865 a number of ordinances were passed, conferring the privilege of using streets, in most cases with a time limit definite in character. The record discloses that by an agreement of July 29, 1863, the Chicago City Railway Company had agreed to convey to the Chicago West Division Railway Company certain rolling stock, equipment, etc., together with "all and singular the franchises, rights, privileges, and immunities" of the Chicago City Railway Company in and upon certain streets, "conferred, given, or granted by or under any or all acts of the general assembly of the state of Illinois, and any and all ordinances of the city of Chicago, or contracts with the common council." In this contract it was also provided that if at any time it should be adjudged that consent to the sale by the council of the city of Chicago is or was necessary to secure to the grantee company the rights and privileges embraced in the contract, the grantor company would do all in its power by reasonable and proper effort to secure such consent of the common council. By the deed of transfer of July 30, 1863, the grantor company conveyed its rights, privileges, and franchises in the use and occupation of certain streets, "to have and to hold the above bargained and granted premises and property to the party of the second part, etc., for and during all the time which the said party of the first part might hold, exercise, and enjoy the same under its present charter and any and all extensions thereof." On December 13, 1859, the Chicago City Railway Company by agreement gave to the North Chicago City Railway Company permission and authority [462] to make, construct, and use for *twenty-four years, tracks, etc., as might be necessary to extend its railway southerly to such points in the south and west divisions along certain streets, "as the party of the first part (Chicago City Railway Company) has been or may be authorized to make and have the same."

It thus clearly appears, at least up to the passage of the act of 1865, that legislation upon the subject recognized and enforced the right and authority of the city to fix the term during which the streets might be occupied by street railway companies. The legislature had confirmed the ordinance of the city fixing the term at twenty-five years and until the city should see fit to purchase the property of the railway company. It had required the companies to obtain the authority of the city before using the streets, such use to be upon terms and conditions, and with such rights and privileges, as the city had or might thereafter prescribe by contract with the companies.

We find no intention evidenced in legislative action thus far to prevent the municipal authorities from exercising the important and far-reaching authority of fixing by contract with the persons or corporations to whom franchises are granted by the state the term during which the occupancy shall continue. This feature of the right to use the streets, it need hardly be said, is of most vital importance to both parties. Some latitude of time is essential to the value and stability of the investment to be made. An unduly long period might conclude municipal action when changing conditions and growing population demanded it in the public interest.

We come now to the act of 1865. Does its interpretation justify the contention that by its terms the state took from the local authorities the control which had been theretofore recognized, the right and authority to determine upon what terms and for what length of time the railways might occupy the streets, and without other consideration than the building, equipment, and operation of the roads, conferred upon the companies the right to use and occupy for ninety-nine years to *come the streets of [463] the city which might thereafter be designated by the city council, and confirmed without qualification for that term the right to use and occupy the streets covered in contracts already made with the city? We may premise, before taking up this act for more detailed consideration, that it is a firmly established rule, which we shall have occasion to refer to later on in this discussion, but which must be borne in mind as we enter upon the consideration of this act, that one who asserts private rights in public property under grants of the character of those under consideration, must, if he would establish them, come prepared to show that they have been conferred in plain terms, for nothing passes by the grant except it be clearly stated or necessarily implied. The 1st section of the act of 1865 was effectual to extend the corporate life of the two companies, created by the acts of 1859 and 1861, from twenty-five to ninety-nine years each. The 2d section authorizes the construction and maintenance of street railways in the city of Chicago upon such streets, etc., within the limits named, as the common council have authorized or shall from time to time authorize, the rights, privileges, and immunities and exemptions to be such as the common council has prescribed, or may, by contracts with said parties, or either of them, prescribe. In the first clause of that section, then, there is shown no disposition to depart from the policy of the state as indicated by the act of 1859, and the action of the companies thereunder, which required the street railway companies, before entering upon the occupation or use of the streets, to obtain, by agreement with the city, its sanction and authority for the right and privilege of so doing. Then comes the clause which, it is contended, works a revolution of former policies and extends former franchises and rights to the full term of ninety-nine years, and withholds from the city the power of granting any further use of the streets to the railway companies, except upon terms of extending the right for the like period. While we have no right to consider this act by segregating its clauses as though they were [464] separate enactments, *for the purpose of having its provisions clearly in view, we insert this clause:

"And any and all acts or deeds of transfer of rights, privileges, or franchises, between the corporations in said several acts named, or any two of them, and all contracts, stipulations, licenses, and undertakings, made, entered into, or given, and as made or amended by and between the said common council and any one or more of the said corporations, respecting the location, use, or exclusion of railways in or upon the streets, or any of them, of said city, shall be deemed and held and continued in force during the life hereof, as valid and effectual, to all intents and purposes, as if made a part, and the same are hereby made a part, of said several acts."

Does a fair interpretation of this clause of the act extend all the franchises, privileges, and contracts theretofore made for the term of ninety-nine years? This clause deals with:

1. The transfers of rights, privileges, or franchises between the corporations.

2. Comprehensively speaking, the contracts made between the city and the companies.

The definition of "rights and privileges," as the terms are used in this act, is not difficult to find. It is contained in the context of the act confirming "such rights and privileges, immunities and exemptions, as the common council has [prescribed], or may, by contract with said parties, or any or either of them, prescribe." This definition conforms to the use of the terms in prior acts of the legislature on the subject as well as to ordinances of the city granting the use of the streets. The rights and privileges intended are such as have been derived from contracts with the city. Franchises in the sense we have stated have been the grants of the state. Licenses and all other privileges have been obtained from the city, acting under the authority of the acts of the legislature in the manner outlined earlier in this discussion. As to the deeds and acts of transfer of rights, [465] privileges, and franchises, as well *as the contract rights secured from the city, the act declares they "shall be deemed and held and continued in force during the life hereof, as valid and effectual, to all intents and purposes, as if made a part, and the same are hereby made a part, of said several acts."

What does this mean? It cannot operate to extend the contract rights and privileges, obtained directly from the city before or after the transfer by one company to the other, ninety-nine years, for as to these the act distinctly declares that the contracts, stipulations, licenses, and undertakings, between the council and the companies, shall stand "as made or amended." This declaration is in the past tense, and can have no reference, by any fair construction, to future engagements.

The contracts, by this clause, in all their terms, including time limits, are written into the original acts of 1859 and 1861, as if made a part thereof. Much discussion has been had as to the proper interpretation of the ambiguous expression "during the life hereof." For the companies it is insisted that its meaning is to extend all franchises and contracts, and whether the latter have been or may thereafter be made, to the end of the ninety-nine years, so as to give the railways the franchise to use the streets for that period by an irrevocable grant, irrespective of any limitations by state or municipal action subsequently undertaken. To give this act the construction insisted on by the companies is inconsistent with the policy of the state, declared in the act of 1859, which ratified the ordinance of 1858, and gave additional rights in the streets only upon obtaining the consent of the city. It practically reads out of the act the preceding clause of the very section under consideration, which expressly recognizes the authority of the city council to control the use of the streets by contracts which it has made or may make in the future. To say that contracts, the terms and conditions of which are left to agreement with the city, could only be made upon terms of extension to ninety-nine years, is to nullify in an important particular *the powers conferred in the act.
[466] The construction contended for requires us to ignore or entirely change the sense of terms establishing the contracts as made, and requires an interpretation which applies to the future what is specifically stated to be meant for the past. It does violence to the rule contended for by counsel for the companies,—that words are to be considered in their ordinary signification, and every part of the statute, if practicable, given meaning in harmony with its other provisions upon the subject. It is urged that the words "as made or amended" must have reference to the future, and were intended to give a prospective operation to the act, and to read into all contracts thereafter to be made, as well as theretofore made, a right to use the streets without the consent of the city for the extended period. And it is said that this is particularly shown by the use of the words "as amended." But this expression was used in the seventh paragraph of the act of 1859, vesting in the corporations the rights and privileges granted by the ordinances of the common council "and the amendments thereto." The ordinance of August 16, 1858, was itself an amendment of prior municipal legislation. The purpose of the act of 1865 was to continue, as made, the former contracts, with their amendments. If it was intended to extend all past contracts and licenses for the use of the streets to the term of ninety-nine years, and to require the city council to enter into no new engagements for terms and conditions which should not extend to that period, it would have been easy to give expression to such purpose in plain words, and not resort to language which, as stated in one of the briefs of the learned counsel for the companies, is "unusual and more or less figurative." If the words used have no effect to control the right of future contract, but do extend the term of the contracts made to ninety-nine years, then we may have the anomalous situation of some contracts for short and some for long terms in the same system of railroads. It is true that we are to consider the situation as it was when the act was passed, and not in the light of the subsequent [467] growth and development *of the city. But in 1865 the policy of local control of the streets for railway purposes had been declared and acted upon. So radical a departure as is contended for must be found in terms plainly stated and clearly defined. It is contended that unless the construction insisted upon for the companies is given to the act, no force or effect is given to the expression "during the life hereof," and a well-recognized rule is invoked that all parts of this law must be given force and effect in interpreting its meaning. While it is incumbent upon those claiming under a public grant, as we have already stated, to make out the rights contended for by terms which clearly and unequivocally convey them, and it is enough to deny the privileges contended for if, upon considering the act, the mind rests in doubt and uncertainty as to whether they are intended to be conferred, we think this act can be given a construction which shall give some meaning and effect to the words "during the life hereof." Literally construed, the phrase would mean for the life of the act. It has been suggested that it may mean until the corporations, by forfeiture or otherwise, go out of existence. But these meanings do not seem to aid the purpose manifested in the law, and meaningless phrases are not supposed to be used to express the legislative will. Bearing in mind that the franchises granted came from the state, the nature and extent of the rights included in those franchises, that the franchise to be a corporation was extended by the 1st section of the act, and that the franchise, the transfer of which was intended to be confirmed in the clause now before us, embraced the right granted by the state to use the streets with the authority of the city, and that the rights and privileges were obtained from the city, let us see if some meaning can be found consistent with the other parts of the act and recognized rules of construction. Conceding for this purpose the contention on behalf of the companies that the phrase, "during the life hereof," may mean for the term of ninety-nine years, for that period the act provides that certain things "shall be deemed and held and continued in force." What *are they? 1. "Any and [468] all acts or deeds of transfer of rights, privileges, or franchises between the corporations in said several acts named or any two of them." 2. "All contracts, stipulations, licenses, and undertakings, made, entered into, or given, and as made or amended by and between the said common council and any one or more of the said corporations, respecting the location, use, or exclusion of the railways in or upon the streets or any of them of said city." The context of the act, as we have seen, defines rights and privileges to be such as are derived from the contracts with the city. It recognizes, as do the ordinances previously passed, in the use made of the same phrase, that the city is the source from whence they came. Franchises, as we have said, came from the state. The phrase, "during the life hereof," cannot be held to extend contract rights to ninety-nine years without doing violence to the terms which just precede this phrase and are found in the same sentence, confirming all contracts, stipulations, licenses, and undertakings "as made or amended." The vital part of such contracts is the duration of the occupancy of the streets, expressly limited to twenty-five years, and in some cases twenty-five years and until purchase by the city. To say that "during the life hereof," in the sense that it means ninety-nine years, is to be the life of the contracts, permits that part of the sentence to repeal the provision of the clause which reads them into the original act in all respects as made or amended. Rejecting, therefore, such impossible construction as doing violence to the very terms of the law, there is only left of the things provided for which can be consistently extended for ninety-nine years, the acts or deeds of transfer between the corporations so far as they relate to franchises which are not subject to the express limitations of the act,—that they shall stand as made. These franchises as conveyed were necessarily limited to twenty-five years, the then life of the companies. The first part of this act has prolonged the corporate life to ninety-nine years. In the sense which we have already defined the [469] franchise granted by the state, as *conferring the right to use and occupy the streets with permission from the city, the act may be consistently held to extend and validate the deeds of transfer as conveying a continued right to such franchise for the extended period of the lives of the corporations. This construction gives some weight and force to this ambiguous expression, and, taking the entire act together, is more consistent with the legislative purpose expressed than is the one put forward, which ignores the reference to the contracts in their original form and extends them all for ninety-nine years, while the act declares they shall not be disturbed as made. It is not to be understood that the interpretation herein suggested frees the judicial mind from doubt as to the meaning of this act, any more than its ambiguous and contradictory phrases could have impressed upon the legislative understanding the meaning now contended for by the companies. It is the application of the settled rule of interpretation to such grants which invalidates the claims made for it, rather than any clear and satisfactory interpretation which has been suggested by counsel or arrived at by the court.

This construction is in harmony with the policy of the state, as evidenced in its prior legislation on the subject, and, in the earlier part of the section under consideration, it gives some meaning to all parts of the act, and makes its provisions consistent with each other. It preserves local control of streets for railway purposes, which the legislature, in all of the acts under consideration, has sought to protect. Considering the act as a whole, it has the effect to extend the life of the corporations to ninety-nine years and to authorize the use of the streets of Chicago, with the consent and upon terms agreed upon with the council, and this right may be acquired in like manner during the extended life of the corporations for such periods as may be contracted for. Contracts already made are affirmed as made. The transfers between the companies are validated.

Further contracts may be entered into and amendments made without resort to new legislation empowering the corporations, *as the right of amendment is given, [470] reserving the right of modification or repeal, by a majority of the aldermen elected or act of the general assembly, of the right to charge a higher rate than 5 cents.

While it is true that if, by the act, the state had conferred a grant of the right to use the streets for the period of ninety-nine years, entitled to the protection of the contract clause of the Constitution, such right could not be impaired by any subsequent legislation, it is worthy of note, as showing the continuous legislative policy of the state, that in the act of March, 1867, amending the charter of the city of Chicago, it was provided that no grant of the right to use the streets should be given, or those already given extended, unless by a vote of three fourths of all the aldermen elected, and that no grant, consent, or permission theretofore given or made, or thereafter given, should in any case be extended until within one year of the expiration of the grant, consent, or permission, and in case of veto by the mayor such grant or permission should receive the vote of three fourths of all the aldermen. This act shows a consistent policy of local control, and is inconsistent with the theory of a grant already made for the use of the streets for ninety-nine years.

In reaching the conclusions herein stated as to the proper construction of the act of 1865, amending the act of 1859, we are not unmindful of the fact that much can be said in favor of the view contended for by the learned counsel for the companies. The construction of this act, as we have said, is by no means free from difficulty.

It is true that Governor Oglesby, in his message returning this act with his veto, gave it a construction which would maintain the right to use the streets for the period of ninety-nine years. While his construction was assumed rather than demonstrated, and the stress of his argument was upon the impropriety and constitutional invalidity of thus postponing the right of the city to purchase, it may be admitted that his interpretation of the act sustains the view contended for by *the companies.
[471] But, as we have said, the act upon its face is ambiguous and uncertain. We must judge of it by the terms in which it is expressed. A construction can be given it which would extend all the contracts with the city for the term of ninety-nine years. On the other hand, it can be maintained, with at least equal force, that, notwithstanding the Governor's view, it affirmed the contracts as made, thus distinctly recognizing the comparatively short term of twenty-five years, for which they expressly stipulated. It must be, therefore, uncertain whether the legislators voted for this act upon one construction or the other. It may be that the very ambiguity of the act was the means of securing its passage. Legislative grants of this character should be in such unequivocal form of expression that the legislative mind may be distinctly impressed with their character and import, in order that the privileges may be intelligently granted or purposely withheld. It is matter of common knowledge that grants of this character are usually prepared by those interested in them, and submitted to the legislature with a view to obtain from such bodies the most liberal grant of privileges which they are willing to give. This is one among many reasons why they are to be strictly construed. Pierce, Railroads, 491; New Orleans & C. R. Co. v. New Orleans, 34 La. Ann. 447. "Words of equivocal import," said Mr. Chief Justice Black, in Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Canal Comrs. 21 Pa. 9, 22, "are so easily inserted by mistake or fraud that every consideration of justice and policy requires that they should be treated as nugatory when they do find their way into the enactments of the legislature." "The just presumption," says Cooley, in his work on Constitutional Limitations, 7th ed. p. 565, "in every such case is, that the state has granted in express terms all that it designed to grant at all," and, after quoting from the supreme court of Pennsylvania to the same effect, the learned author observes: "This is sound doctrine, and should be vigilantly observed and enforced."

Since the decision in Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. 518, 4 L. ed. 629, [472]*this court has had frequent occasion to apply and enforce the doctrine that a grant of rights in public property accepted by the beneficiary will amount to a contract entitled to protection against impairment by action of the state, or municipalities acting under state authority. Concurrent with this principle, and to be considered when construing an alleged grant of this character, is the equally well established rule, which requires such grants to be made in plain terms in order to convey private rights in respect to public property, and to prevent future control of such privileges in the public interest. The rule was laid down with clearness by Chief Justice Taney in the often-cited case of Charles River Bridge v. Warren Bridge, 11 Pet. 420, 9 L. ed. 773, and has been uniformly applied in many subsequent cases in this court. In Perrine v. Chesapeake & D. Canal Co. 9 How. 172–192, 13 L. ed. 92–100, the same eminent Chief Justice, speaking for the court, said: "The rule of construction in cases of this description . . . is this,—that any ambiguity in the terms of the grant must operate against the corporation, and in favor of the public, and the corporation can claim nothing that is not clearly given by the law. We do not mean to say that the charter is to receive a strained and unreasonable interpretation, contrary to the obvious intention of the grant. It must be fairly examined and considered, and reasonably and justly expounded." In the case of The Binghamton Bridge (Chenango Bridge Co. v. Binghamton Bridge Co.) 3 Wall. 51, 75, 18 L. ed. 137, 143, it was said: "The principle is this: That all rights which are asserted against the state must be clearly defined, and not raised by inference or presumption; and if the charter is silent about a power, it does not exist. If, on a fair reading of the instrument, reasonable doubts arise as to the proper interpretation to be given to it, those doubts are to be solved in favor of the state; and where it is susceptible of two meanings, the one restricting and the other extending the powers of the corporation, that construction is to be adopted which works the least harm to the state."

This principle has been declared axiomatic as a doctrine of this court. Northwestern Fertilizing Co. v. Hyde Park, 97 U. S. 659, 666, 24 L. ed. 1036, 1038. *In Slidell v. [473] Grandjean, 111 U. S. 412, 438, 28 L. ed. 321, 330, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 475, it is declared a wise doctrine; "It serves to defeat any purpose concealed by the skilful use of terms to accomplish something not apparent on the face of the act, and thus sanctions only open dealing with legislative bodies." Among other cases affirming the principle in this court is Coosaw Mining Co. v. South Carolina, 144 U. S. 550, 36 L. ed. 537, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 689, in which it was applied in adopting, of two doubtful constructions, the one more favorable to the state. Many of the cases are cited in a note to Knoxville Water Co. v. Knoxville, decided at this term. 200 U. S. 22, 34, ante, 353, 359, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 224, 227. Applying the principle so frequently asserted and uniformly maintained, we think it cannot be successfully maintained that the act of 1865 contains a clear expression of legislative intention to extend the franchise of these companies to use the streets of Chicago, without reference to the assent of the city, for the long term of ninety-nine years, and for that time preventing other and different legislation restricting this grant of a practically exclusive right. So enormous a grant of privileges, including an exclusion from some streets of any railway system, ought not to be presumed or held to be conferred in doubtful and ambiguous words. Grants of this character are not to be destroyed by an unreasonable or narrow interpretation. But if ambiguity is fatal to such claim of rights as against the public, for the stronger reason must such grants of far-reaching and exclusive privileges as are here asserted fail when they can only be maintained by strained construction in their favor.

The effect of the act of 1865 was to affirm the contracts as made between the council and the companies; these contracts must stand as concluded, unless changed by subsequent agreement between the parties. As we have said, the principal question in the case concerns the construction of the act of February 14, 1859, as amended by the act of February 6, 1865. The learned circuit court, holding the opinion that the right to use the streets was extended for the prolonged term of the corporate life of the companies, also held that the [474]adoption of *the cities and villages act by the city of Chicago, in May, 1875, which act was passed under the Constitution of Illinois, taking effect in 1870, put an end to the right of the city of Chicago to thereafter designate streets under the former acts, and that contracts subsequently made were subject to the limitation of twenty years, as provided in the cities and villages act of 1872. The court applied the principles upon which it construed the acts in question, and gave it effect as to numerous streets which were the subject of contracts between the city and the companies. Under our conclusions the decree must be reversed, and the construction we have given the act may require a decree differing from that rendered in the circuit court, when applied to particular streets. But we shall not take up all these controversies in detail, and shall leave to the circuit court a readjustment of the decree upon the lines of this opinion. There are, however, certain matters in the case which have been fully argued and should be determined before the case is again considered in the circuit court. On these features of the case we will not enter upon extended discussion, but briefly indicate our views upon them.

It was held by the learned circuit court that the amending act of 1865 had application to the North Chicago City Railway Company, and had the effect to extend the corporate life of that company. We think this is a correct view. By the 10th section of the act of 1859 all the grants, powers, privileges, immunities, and franchises conferred upon Parmalee and others, by the act for the south and west divisions of the city of Chicago, were conferred upon certain persons by the corporate name of the North Chicago City Railway Company, for the north division of the city, in the county of Cook, as fully and effectually as if they had been by a separate act incorporated, with all of said grants, powers, immunities, privileges, and franchises. By the 1st section of the act of 1865 the corporate lives of the Chicago City Railway Company, created by the 1st section of the act of 1859, and the Chicago West Division Railway Company, created by the 1st section of the *act of 1861, were ex-[475] pressly extended for ninety-nine years. While nothing was specifically said of the North Chicago City Railway Company in this connection, the 10th section of the act, after this amendment, we think, should be read in connection with the amended act, so that the act of 1859 is to be read as if it had originally been in the amended form. In this view the extended life of the corporations created by the 1st section must be read into the charter of the North Chicago City Railway Company, created by the 10th section.

We believe this view is sustained by reason and authority. Holbrook v. Nichol, 36 Ill. 161. The rule was thus stated in Farrell v. State, 54 N. J. L. 421, 24 Atl. 725: "As a rule of construction, a statute amended is to be understood in the same sense exactly as if it had read from the beginning as it does amended. People ex rel. Parsons v. Circuit Judge, 37 Mich. 287. In Conrad v. Nall, 24 Mich. 275, a section in a chapter of the Code was amended, and it was held that it was not intended to operate independently of the other provisions of the chapter, but that the whole chapter, in its present form, must be read as one act.

"The rule is correctly stated in Endlich on Interpretation of Statutes, § 294, as follows: 'A statute which is amended is thereafter, and as to all acts subsequently done, to be construed as if the amendment had always been there, and the amendment itself so thoroughly becomes a part of the original statute that it must be construed in view of the original statute as it stands after the amendments are introduced and the matters superseded by the amendments eliminated.'" This view is strengthened by the language of the 2d section, which speaks of the deeds of transfer of rights between the corporations, in said several acts, or "any two of them."

The city of Chicago has constantly recognized the corporate existence of this company and has made numerous agreements with it as such corporation. In Chicago v. Sheldon, 9 Wall. 50, 19 L. ed. 594, in considering a contract between the North Chicago City Railway Company and the city as to the extent of street improvement by way of paving, etc., which could be required of [476] *the company under the ordinance of May 23, 1859, granting it rights and privileges in the streets, this court, speaking through Mr. Justice Nelson, concluded its opinion as follows: "A point is made that the legislature have not conferred or intended to confer authority upon the city to make this contract. We need only say that full power was not only conferred, but that the contract itself has been since ratified by this body." The learned justice, speaking of the contract, obviously referred to the ordinance of May 23, 1859, passed under the authority conferred by the act of February 14, 1859, and the ratification by the legislature under the act of February 6, 1865. We have no doubt that this act was intended to apply to the North Chicago City Railway Company as well as to the companies specifically covered in the 1st section of the act. The ordinance of 1858 in its 10th section gave the right to operate the "said railways for twenty-five years, and thereafter to parties operating said railways the enjoyment of all privileges granted until the common council shall elect, by order for that purpose, to purchase the tracks, railway cars, carriages, station houses, station grounds, furniture, and implements of every kind and description used in the construction and operation of said railways or the appurtenances in and about the same." By § 7 of the act of February 14, 1859, all of the rights and privileges granted or intended so to be to Parmalee and others, by the ordinances and amendments, were confirmed and vested in the corporations. The affirmance of these rights and privileges gave them the sanction and made them part of the legislative act. Afterwards certain of the rights and privileges of the Chicago City Railway Company were transferred by the deed of July 30, 1863, as stated in said conveyance, to the Chicago West Division Railway Company. This deed of transfer is confirmed by the act of 1865. Later the system of railways was extended under ordinances of the city and with the assent of village boards of trustees. It is the contention of the receivers that by reason of the premises the railway companies became entitled to operate the [477] entire system for *the extended period of the act of 1865—for ninety-nine years—and thereafter until the city of Chicago shall lawfully purchase all of the said railways, property, equipment, and appurtenances, and pay for the same in cash at its then appraised value. It is the contention of the city that this extension of the right to purchase by virtue of the ordinance of 1858, affirmed in the act of 1859 and the amendment of 1865, must be confined to the streets covered by the ordinance of 1858. That the right to use the streets under the ordinance of 1858 was extended to all subsequently acquired rights to use the streets under the new contracts, so that the right would continue until purchase be made of the entire property of both systems of railway, we cannot concede. It does violence to the language of the ordinance of 1858, which, by its terms, is limited to the railways therein and thereby provided for, and would be an extension of corporate privileges by implication, in violence of the settled rule to which we have had occasion to refer in the principal discussion.

While not conceding the soundness of the contention that the right of purchase is extended to all the property of the railway companies by reason of the unity of the system, there are certain ordinances confirmed by the act of 1865 which require special attention. As we have seen, by the ordinance of May 23, 1859, permission was given to lay a street railway on and along certain streets and bridges in the south and west divisions of the city of Chicago, "and the same to keep, maintain, and use and to operate thereon railway cars and carriages during all the term of the said act of February 14, 1859, specified and prescribed, in the manner and upon the conditions hereinafter designated." On the same day, May 23, 1859, a grant was made to the North Chicago City Railway Company of the right to use certain streets, the rights and privileges granted to be in force for the benefit of the company for the full term of twenty-five years from the passage of the ordinance, and no longer. This difference in the grants to the two railway companies is significant. In the ordinance of 1858 the *grant to Par-[478] malee and others was for the term of twenty-five years, with the right of the parties operating the railways to enjoy all the said privileges until the common council elect, by order for that purpose, to purchase the tracks and other property used in the construction and operation of said railways and appurtenances, and pay for the same in the manner designated in the ordinance. This grant was expressly confirmed by the act of 1859, in § 7 thereof. Otherwise there was no specific grant in that act fixing the time for which the railway company might operate in the streets. As we have seen, in that law there was a distinct affirmation of what the common council had authorized the corporators to do, and might thereafter authorize the corporation to do by contract. The North Chicago City Railway Company, prior to the act of 1859, had no agreement as to streets. The reason for the grant of different terms to the different companies, we think, is apparent. On the west side reference was made to the term granted in the act of February 14, 1859, for the purpose of giving the Chicago City Railway Company the same term as had been granted and confirmed therein as to the streets named in the ordinance of August, 1858, and, in our judgment, gave to that company a grant in the same terms, that is, for twenty-five years, and until the city purchase in the manner designated. On the north side, there being no such legislative confirmation of rights already undertaken to be conferred by the council, the grant was specifically limited to a period of twenty-five years, "and no longer."

In considering the effect of the ordinances passed by the common council of the city of Chicago in the period from February, 1859, to May 3, 1875, it may be well to briefly summarize the terms of these ordinances. They will be found in the margin.‡

[479] *After the passage of the cities and villages act of 1872, accepted by the city of Chicago in May, 1875, the following ordinance was passed, being the so-called "compromise ordinance:"

*"July 10, 1883 (amended August 6, 1883)— [480]
"Extending the Term for Twenty Years from This Date. Accepted by North Chicago City Railway Company, August 8, 1883; by the Chicago City Railway Company and the Chicago West Division Railway Company, August 10, 1883."

This ordinance contained this proviso: "But nothing in this section contained, or the acceptance hereof, shall in any manner impair, change, or alter the existing rights, duties, and obligations of the city or of said companies, respectively, from and after the said term of years hereinbefore mentioned."

We thus perceive a consistent purpose running through the grants to the north side company to adhere to the term of the original ordinance of May 23, 1859, limiting the right to use the streets to the period of twenty-five years, "and no longer," by reference in subsequent ordinances to the prior ordinance. We do not regard the exceptional character of the ordinance of October 26, 1874, amended April 26, 1875, as overcoming, as to other ordinances, the general purpose reflected in them. That ordinance was a grant in part to the *North [481]

‡On the west side we find the following:
May 23, 1859—
"A grant during all the term in the said act of February 14, 1859, specified and prescribed." Streets are designated and the time for completion of the railways thereon is limited, for some at three months, others at five, one year and eighteen months, and still others "as soon as practicable."
February 13, 1860—
Amendatory of the above last-mentioned ordinance. Extends the time for completion to ten years for some, and five years for others. Certain lines mentioned must be completed in two years.
November 18, 1861—
Exempting certain streets and substituting others. Ordinance of May 23, 1859, in force except as amended, and time for completion of certain railways named is extended to five years.
November 16, 1863—
Excluding railways from certain streets named.
March 14, 1864—
Releasing one street and substituting another.
March 28, 1864—
Authority to remove from one street to another.
March 28, 1864—
Authorizing temporary tracks while a bridge is being constructed.
July 11, 1864—
Amending ordinances of March 28, 1864, repealing the temporary use of certain streets.
August 17, 1864—
Creating new lines, extending others, and regulating the use thereof. Times for completion fixed at ninety days and fifteen months. No time or duration stated by reference or directly.
November 13, 1871—
Extension of tracks on certain streets named.
March 8, 1875—
Authorizing the construction and operation of a new line. To be completed by October 1, 1876, and the term to extend to October 1, 1894, and thereafter until purchased by the city.
April 19, 1875—
Amending last-mentioned ordinance as to certain uses and legal claims arising from the operation of the lines.
On the north side we find the following:
May 23, 1859—
Term "twenty-five years and no longer." Times for completion fixed at January, 1860, and July, 1862, different for some than others.
January 18, 1864—
Term "subject to all the rules and limitations and restrictions" prescribed in the ordinance of May 23, 1859. Authorizes connection of tracks.
August 11, 1864—
Term "subject to all the restrictions and conditions, the rights and privileges, mentioned" in ordinance of May 23, 1859. Time for completion fixed at sixty days, unless restricted, etc.
May 8, 1871—
Same term. Time for completion fixed at June 1, 1872, for the street railway named.
November 20, 1871—
Term "subject to all rules and limitations and restrictions" prescribed in ordinance of May 23, 1859. Rights and privileges granted shall continue for a term of ———years.
October 26, 1874—
Term until October 1, 1894, and thereafter until purchased by the city. To be completed July 1, 1875. As lessee of Chicago City Railway Company as to certain portion.
April 26, 1875—
Amending the last-mentioned ordinance, and otherwise similar to it as to terms and conditions.

Chicago Company as the lessee of the Chicago City Company, and was doubtless changed in terms to make it comply with the grant of the latter company as to streets in which it operated.

As to the west side companies we find running through the ordinances making grants in the divisions covered by that system a purpose to preserve the original permission of the ordinance of August 16, 1858, which granted the use of the streets for the term of twenty-five years and until purchase by the city. The language used in the ordinance of May 23, 1859, granting the use of the streets, is "during all the term in said act of the 14th of February, A. D. 1859, specified and prescribed." This ordinance and similar ones passed prior to the act of February 6, 1865, were confirmed by that act, and rights under them were reserved by the compromise ordinance of July 10, 1883. We hold that when streets were occupied under the authority of these ordinances the company has the right to the use of the streets until the city shall purchase under the contracts thus made.

In the west side system, the ordinance of August 17, 1864, is silent as to the term of the grant. We do not think this indicates any intention on the part of the city, even if it had the power under legislative acts then in existence, to confer the right in perpetuity to the occupancy of the streets, a point which we do not feel called upon to decide. The other ordinances by direct terms or references to prior ordinances have made the grants for the west side system for the term of twenty-five years, and until purchase by the city, in the manner stated, and we do not think there was any intention to depart from the plan in this one ordinance omitting specifically to name a definite time of occupancy. At this time there had been no extension of the life of the corporation, and it was specifically limited to twenty-five years.

In reaching this conclusion we are not unmindful of the decision of this court in Detroit v. Detroit Citizens' Street R. Co. 184 U. S. 368, 395, 46 L. ed. 592, 610, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 410, holding that although a cor-[482] poration *be organized for a limited period by the terms of its charter, it may receive a grant which would inure to the benefit of those lawfully entitled to succeed to the rights of the corporation, although for a period of years beyond the corporate life. But in the present case the right granted must be construed with reference to the system of which it was made a part, and where the terms of the grant were limited to twenty-five years, and until purchase, we can find no intention to grant or receive a perpetuity simply because no term of years was named in the one ordinance under consideration.

It is contended that whatever rights would otherwise be included in contracts confirmed by the act of 1865, they were lost to the companies by accepting the privileges conferred in the "power ordinances" of June 7, 1886, and March 30, 1888. But prior to the passage of those ordinances was the so-called "compromise ordinance" of July 10, 1883, as amended August 6, 1883, settling certain controversies as to license fees and street paving, and extending the time of operation for twenty years, and further providing: "But nothing in this section contained, or the acceptance hereof, shall in any manner impair, change, or alter the existing rights, duties, and obligations of the city, or of said companies, respectively, from and after the expiration of the said term of years hereinbefore mentioned." In the North Chicago City Railway ordinance and the West Chicago City Railway Company ordinance clauses are inserted to the effect that privileges as to time after the expiration of the term of twenty years are to be governed by ordinances theretofore passed. In view of this reservation we are of opinion that whatever rights and privileges the company had in the streets after the expiration of the time limitation in the "power ordinances" were not lost by the acceptance of privileges conferred in those ordinances.

It is contended that the railway companies had no power to accept ordinances for the use of other than animal power in the operation of railways, because of the titles of the various *acts which constituted [483] the charter of the companies, limiting them to the use of animal power, and because of the constitutional provision, which we have referred to earlier in this opinion, providing that no private or local law shall embrace more than one subject, which shall be expressed in its title. We think the intention of the legislature in this respect was not to confine the operation of the road to animal power, but to incorporate street railway companies as distinguished from steam railways, and to endow them with the rights and privileges named in the acts. Section two of the law (act of 1865) expressly gives the power of amendment, in providing that "it shall be competent for the said common council, with the written consent or concurrence of the other party or parties or their assigns to any of said contracts, stipulations, licenses, or undertakings, to amend, modify, or annul the same." We think this grant of power was broad enough to authorize the city to grant, and the railway company to accept, a changed method of operation of the railways by applying thereto a new and more efficient and economical power. It is true that the supreme court of Illinois in North Chicago City R. Co. v. Lake View, 105 Ill. 207, 44 Am. Rep. 788, held that the charter of the North Chicago City Railway Company had not authorized a steam railway, but that court has held in later decisions that an electric railway, incorporated under the general incorporation acts to build horse and dummy railways, might organize a street railway company to be operated by electricity or by any motive power other than steam, and might appropriate private property for this purpose. Harvey v. Aurora & G. R. Co. 174 Ill. 299, 51 N. E. 163. The court has also held that the provisions of the horse and dummy act applied to electric railway companies, as did a paragraph of the general incorporation act in regard to horse railways. We think the Illinois cases recognize the distinction in legislation in that state between railways intended to be operated upon the streets of the city of Chicago and other cities for local accommoda-[484] tion, and steam railways, as such are *generally understood. And the declaration inserted in the title of the acts, that they concern horse railways, will not, because of the constitutional provision, prevent the exercise of the power of amendment conferred by law upon the city and the companies in such manner as to authorize the use of such power as electricity and cable. We agree with the learned circuit court that these grants as to changed methods of operation were within the powers legally conferred by the act of 1865. Furthermore, on June 9, 1897, the legislature passed an act having application to companies organized under general or special laws, which provided: "Every such street railway may be operated by animal, cable, electric, or any other motive power that may have been or shall hereafter be granted to it by the public officers or authorities, except steam locomotive engines." It is true that this statute was repealed by the act of March 7, 1899, but we do not perceive how this could destroy its effect to ratify the contracts which were in existence when the act was passed. This view renders it unnecessary to pass upon the question whether the city of Chicago, having undertaken to authorize the use of new power, upon the faith of which authority large sums of money have been expended and extensive changes made, can now be heard to say that it had no authority to grant such right.

The learned circuit court held that privileges granted under ordinances of the town of Jefferson were limited to twenty years. This ruling, it is contended by the Chicago West Division Railway Company, is erroneous, because of the act of 1859, which provided: "Section 5. The said corporation is hereby authorized to extend the said several railways herein authorized to be built in the manner aforesaid to any point or points within the county of Cook in this state; and to enable said corporation to construct any or all of the railways herein authorized, or their appendages, the said corporation is hereby vested with power to take and apply private property for the purposes and in the manner prescribed," etc. Section 6: "The said corporation is hereby authorized, *with the assent of the [485] supervisor of any township, to lay down and maintain its said railway or railways in, upon, over, and along any common highway in said township, but in such manner as not to obstruct the common travel of the public over the same." The town of Jefferson was one of the townships of Cook county, adjoining the city of Chicago on the northwest. So far as the record discloses, no effort was made to extend the lines of the Chicago West Division Railway Company into the town of Jefferson until 1877. Before that year the town of Jefferson had adopted the provisions of the cities and villages act of 1872, in which the power to grant the use of the streets for street railway purposes was limited to twenty years. On January 28, 1878, the village passed the ordinance granting to the Chicago West Division Railway Company and its successors the right to maintain and operate a street railway in Milwaukee avenue and Armitage road, in said village, the rights and privileges thereby granted to extend for the term of eighty-one years. Under the act of 1859 the right to lay down tracks and maintain railways over and along the common highways in the townships in Cook county required the consent of the supervisor in the township. This does not appear to have been obtained, and when the authority was given by the president and board of trustees of the village, it was subject to the limitation already referred to. We cannot assent to the soundness of the argument that the act of 1859, in the event of the abolition of the office of supervisor, during the life of the corporation, would authorize the extension to these adjoining townships of the system of railways intended to be constructed, without official consent.

Before the passage of the act of 1865, incorporating the board of trustees of the town of Lake View, the supervisors granted permits to use some of the highways of Lake township. This authority was exercised under §§ 5 and 6 of the act of February 14, 1859. We cannot agree that the duration of these permits would be in perpetuity, because of the fact that no time was specifically named in them. The extension [486] into *Lake View was part of the north side railway system, which, by the terms of the grants from the city, were limited to twenty-five years, and no longer. There certainly could be no intention in granting these permits from the supervisors as extensions of the system to make perpetual grants, when the right of user of the main part of the line was expressly limited to twenty-five years. A fair inference would be that, in extending this part of the system so as to make a portion of that already granted, such grants were to be for the same term as those already made. As to extensions in the town of Lake View, obtained otherwise than from the supervisors, it appears that on February 16, 1865, an act was passed entitled "An Act to Incorporate a Board of Trustees for the Town of Lake View, in Cook County," and it was provided that the supervisors, assessors, and commissioners of highways and their successors in office should be constituted and incorporated, ex officio, a board of trustees for said town of Lake View. On March 5, 1867, an amendatory act was passed entitled "An Act to Incorporate a Board of Trustees for the Town of Lake View, in Cook County," which provided (§ 7) that the board of trustees should have the control and supervision of the highways, streets, alleys, and public parks in said town. This board afterwards passed ordinances consenting to the laying down of tracks in the town of Lake View, on a number of avenues and streets named in the ordinances.

The cases in the state courts are much divided as to the right of a municipal corporation, because of its charter power of controlling the streets, to grant the use thereof to a street railway company. Some of the cases are collected in Detroit Citizens' Street R. Co. v. Detroit, 26 L. R. A. 667, 12 C. C. A. 365, 22 U. S. App. 570, 64 Fed. 628, 637.

The act of 1859, § 6, required the consent of the supervisor to the extension of the railways into townships of Cook county outside of Chicago. When the supervisor became a member of the township board of trustees, and that board gave its consent, we think this satisfied the requirement of the act in that respect. The legislature [487] might have given the railway *company the right to extend its lines in Cook county without the consent of any local authority. We are not concerned with the general powers of the supervisor. When the legislature designated him as the official whose assent should be obtained, it empowered him to give such assent, and when given in any substantial way, that satisfied the requirements of the act of 1859.

As we understand the decisions of the supreme court of Illinois, the power to control the streets and highways by the township trustees, given by the act of March 5, 1867, would include the right to authorize their use for street railway purposes. In Chicago Municipal Gaslight & Fuel Co. v. Lake, 130 Ill. 54, 22 N. E. 616, the court held: "The power to control and regulate the streets, alleys, and other public places within the limits of the town of Lake, and abate any obstructions, encroachments, or nuisances thereon, was given, in its charter, to the corporate authorities of the town. Under this power the town could lawfully permit any use of such streets and alleys that is consistent with the public objects for which they are held, and could make a grant of a right of way for the purpose of laying gas pipes and mains under the surface." In People ex rel. Rinne v. Blocki, 203 Ill. 363, 368, 67 N. E. 809, 810, the same court said, having reference to a grant of the right to lay switch tracks in the street: "The street, at the time said permits were granted, was under the control of the board of trustees of the town of Lake, and, under the power conferred upon that municipality by law, it was authorized to allow the use of said street for any purpose not incompatible with the purpose for which it was established, and to allow a railroad track to be laid therein was not a use incompatible with the purpose for which it was established." In Quincy v. Bull, 106 Ill. 337, on page 349, it was said: "In this state there is vested in municipal corporations a fee-simple title to the streets. Under the power of exclusive control over streets it is very well settled by decisions of this court that the municipal authorities may do anything with, or allow any use of streets, which is not incompatible *with the [488] ends for which streets are established, and that it is a legitimate use of a street to allow a railroad track to be laid down in it. Moses v. Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. 21 Ill. 516; Murphy v. Chicago, 29 Ill. 279, 81 Am. Dec. 307; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. People, 91 Ill. 251." In view of these Illinois decisions, construing the legislative acts of the state, we think the learned circuit court erred in holding that the trustees of the town of Lake had no power to grant the railway the use of the streets for street railway purposes.

The question remains as to the term for which the rights granted by the trustees and the municipality of Lake View were to be held. The ordinances making these grants required the company to perform certain duties to the municipalities, such as the laying of pavement, subject to the approval of the trustees. On April 16, 1887, the incorporated town of Lake View became incorporated as the city of Lake View under the cities and villages act of 1872. On July 15, 1889, the territory included in the city of Lake View was annexed to the city of Chicago. We think in such case that the terms granted would not extend beyond the life of the corporation conferring them, where there was no attempt to confer a definite term, assuming, without deciding, that it was within the authority of the municipality to grant a perpetuity. Our attention has been called to a late case decided in the supreme court of Illinois (People ex rel. v. Chicago Telephone Co. 220 Ill. 238, 77 N. E. 245) in which it was held that where trustees of villages and towns have granted rights extending telephone privileges, not for a definite period, that such grants could not be construed to be perpetuities, and did not extend beyond the lives of the corporations granting them. The court says: "The ground of the defendant's claim that the ordinance does not limit its charges in the annexed territory is that, before the annexation, the minor municipalities had granted to it the right to occupy the streets therein for its business, without any limits as to time. If the [489] grants had been for terms of *years under legislative authority authorizing them, and the term had extended beyond the existence of the corporations granting the privileges, there might be ground for saying that the grants were binding upon the city, because they had become binding contracts, under which the defendants had vested contract rights for such term; but they were not for definite periods, and the grants were in consideration of furnishing something to the town or village, such as telephone service to the town or village hall or the village authorities, free or for some reduced rate. Such grants cannot be construed to be perpetual, and, at most, cannot extend beyond the lives of the corporations granting them. Upon annexation there ceased to be any town or village authorities entitled to the benefits of the contract or authorized to demand or receive them, and it could not have been understood that the grant could continue, discharged of the obligation annexed to it. . . . The ordinances of the city extended over the annexed territory immediately upon annexation (Illinois C. R. Co. v. Chicago, 176 U. S. 646, 44 L. ed. 622, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 509) and the limitations of the ordinance applied to the annexed territory."

This seems to us a reasonable view, and, being the construction of the highest court of the state of Illinois, we are willing to accept it. Furthermore, these grants in Lake View were mere extensions of the old system, which, as we have seen, was limited in its rights to use the streets received from the city to the term of twenty-five years, extended twenty years by the compromise ordinance. In the absence of express language conferring a longer term, we do not think it was intended to extend the grant beyond the period already permitted to the system by grants from the city.

As we have said, we do not deem it necessary to take up all the questions which were raised and determined by the circuit court in considering the case and settling the decree in that court. Upon further proceedings the judgment of this court is only to be held conclusive upon matters specifically stated in this opinion.

The decree is reversed and the cause re-[490] manded to the Circuit Court for further proceedings in accordance with the views herein expressed.

Mr. Justice McKenna, with whom concur Mr. Justice Brewer and Mr. Justice Brown, dissenting:

This case as to questions common to all the railways depends mainly upon the acts of 1859 and 1865,—incidentally upon the act of 1861. The latter act may be omitted from special consideration, as it depends upon the others. Ill. Private Laws 1861, p. 340. It incorporated the Chicago West Division Railway Company and gave to that company all the powers conferred upon the other companies by the 2d, 3d, 4th, and 6th sections of the act of 1859.

It will be observed of the acts of 1859 and 1865 that they created corporations respectively for the period of twenty-five and ninety-nine years, and empowered them to construct, maintain, and operate a single and double track railway in Chicago.

The acts, as was remarked by the circuit court, fall into three divisions: (1) The granting part,—the authority of the companies to construct railways; (2) the identifying part,—the designation of the streets by the common council; (3) the terms and conditions of the occupation of the streets by the companies and the manner in which the terms and conditions shall be prescribed.

The meaning of the third division is one of the chief controversies in the case; in other words, the extent of the authority of the common council,—whether it was virtually an authority to grant rights in the streets or authority to regulate the rights conferred by the legislature; or, as it is aptly expressed by the circuit court, whether it was an authority to fix, by stipulation with the companies, that which relates "to the physical side of the occupancy of the streets or the administrative side of the operation of the lines."

[491] *It will be convenient in the discussion to exhibit the acts of 1859 and 1865, showing wherein the latter amends the former, omitting the provision extending the corporate lives of the companies from twenty-five years to ninety-nine years, about which there is no dispute. The words in italics are the amendments made by the act of 1865:

"The said corporation is hereby authorized and empowered to construct, maintain, and operate a single or double track railway, with all necessary and convenient tracks for turn-outs, side tracks, and appendages, in the city of Chicago, and in, on, over, and along such street or streets, highway or highways, bridge or bridges, river or rivers, within the present or future limits of the south and [or] west divisions of the city of Chicago, as the common council of said city have authorized said corporators, or any of them, or shall from time to time authorize said corporations, or either of them, so to do, in such manner, and upon such terms and conditions, and with such rights and privileges, immunities and exemptions, as the said common council has or may, by contract with said parties, or any or either of them, prescribe; and any and all acts or deeds of transfer of rights, privileges, or franchises between the corporations in said several acts named, or any two of them, and all contracts, stipulations, licenses, and undertakings made, entered into, or given, and as made or amended by and between the said common council and any one or more of the said corporations, respecting the location, use, or exclusion of railways in or upon the streets, or any of them, of said city, shall be deemed and held and continued in force during the life hereof as valid and effectual, to all intents and purposes, as if made a part, and the same are hereby made a part, of said several acts; provided that it shall be competent for the said common council, with the written consent or concurrence of the other party or parties, or their assigns, to any of said contracts, stipulations, licenses, or undertakings, to amend, modify, or annul the same."

It is obvious, as far as words can accomplish it, and as directly as words can ac-

[492] complish it, the companies were granted *the right "to construct, maintain, and operate" railways upon the streets of the city. And no other power could have granted such right. Chicago City R. Co. v. People, 73 Ill. 541.

That such grant must come from the state is, of course, not denied; but it is urged that the grant of rights passed to the railway companies through the agency of the city, the city receiving a delegation of the state's power. This is based upon the words of the city's charter, and the authority given in the acts of 1859 and 1865 to designate the "terms and conditions" upon which the streets might be occupied.

The view I take of the acts makes it comparatively unimportant to consider the city's charter. There seemed to be a necessity for the acts, and they were complete in themselves, independent of other grants of power, except what were continued or confirmed by them. If the charter was adequate to invest in the city plenary power over the streets, we may wonder at the enactment of those statutes and many years of misapprehension of them and concern about them. Counsel for the companies assert, and the assertion does not seem to be denied, that an injunction was issued by the circuit court of Cook county, restraining the laying of tracks under the ordinance of 1858. The extent of the power of the city, however, I shall presently consider more at length, and will now pass to those parts of the act which the city insists conferred authority on the common council.

The stress of the argument is on the words "terms and conditions," in the third division. The city contends, and the court decides, reversing the decree of the circuit court, that the authority of the city to prescribe terms and conditions of the occupation of the streets included the authority to fix the time of occupation. I dissent from that interpretation for several reasons. It is opposed to the context in which the words "terms and conditions" are used. It is opposed to their primary and natural meaning. It would be a careless employment of them, and disregard or destroy distinctions *necessary to be observed. As [493] was said by the circuit court, ordinarily in legal phraseology those terms are not employed "to convey power over or relating to the time or period through which the tenure dealt with is intended to run; but conveys power over, or relates to the means, the methods, and the incidents connected with the exercise of such tenure." Citing Hurd v. Whitsett, 4 Colo. 77; Chicago Terminal Transfer R. Co. v. Chicago, 203 Ill. 576, 68 N. E. 99. Of course, directness and simplicity of methods are not always used, but some argument can be based on their omission, and it is natural to believe that had it been intended to give the power contended for to the city, words would not have been employed which would have to be turned from their first and legal signification to express it, and which could be claimed to be in opposition to other parts of the act, and made dependent, besides, upon contracts with the companies, which could only be amended by consent of the companies. The power would have been more directly conferred by a delegation of the whole matter to the city, and would have been absolute,—not limited or embarrassed or opposed by conditions unnecessary to it.

The act of 1859 was certainly a direct grant from the state to the companies for the time of their charter life, and the necessity or the advisability of conferring authority upon the city to limit the time of occupancy of the streets could not have entered into the head of anybody. No conditions existed which suggested the necessity or prudence of giving such authority. The time of occupancy expressed in the ordinance of 1858, the time of the life of corporations prescribed in the act of 1859, and the time for which the franchises conferred by that act could be exercised, all coincided. It could not have occurred to anyone that twenty-five years, the term fixed in all the instruments, was injuriously long and demanded authority somewhere to limit its excess. To these considerations as proof that the words "terms and conditions" were not intended to give authority [494] to prescribe a time of occupancy of the streets may be added that of contemporary practice.

By an ordinance passed in 1859 the time of occupation was expressed to be "during all the term in the said act of the 14th of February, A. D. 1859, specified and prescribed." This, as said by counsel for the companies, "is a distinct recognition of the fact that the term for the enjoyment of the franchise was to be found in the statute, and was not among the elements of the contract which the ordinance might prescribe."
